THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, JANUARY 1, 1881.

A rapid retrospection of the Year of Grace 1880—not so much in a summary of its incidents, as in a notice of its characteristic features in the chief departments of the national life—suggests several important topics of reflection. Before we turn our backs upon the past, and our faces toward the future, it is but natural for us to cast a farewell glance at the scenes and circumstances we have passed through during the twelve months now concluded. The year has certainly been a remarkable one in some of its aspects, and will take its place in the category of those not soon to be forgotten.

It has been a year of moderate sunshine, considered as a whole—not nearly so continuously overcast as its near predecessors, nor so bright and cheery as some of its remoter ones. In England we have been blessed with a fairly good harvest; Ireland, happily, has reaped crops more abundant and splendid than has fallen to her lot for many years past. There have been violent rain-storms in places, and inundations that have occasioned serious damage, and, in some instances, though but in a few only, loss of life. The floods, however, have been due rather to new methods of draining, combined with defective appliances for the storage of water, than to the caprice of Nature. We are learning our lesson somewhat slowly, it must be confessed, but we are learning it; and if, in future, some portion of our unemployed accumulation of capital is to find suitable investment, it may be hoped that the reputed fickleness of the climate of these Isles may not only be neutralised, but even turned to good account, for the cultivation of the soil.

The Trade and Commerce of the United Kingdom during 1880 cannot be spoken of in very decided terms. They have certainly not increased, as was last year anticipated, "by leaps and bounds." They are considerably above the lowest line of depression, as may be gathered from the state of Revenue accounts, and from the published statistics of the Board of Trade, but they have disclosed no very remarkable recuperative energy during the year. In some respects, and in regard to some means of employment, they have lost rather than gained ground since the opening months of 1880. In several they are stationary at best; in only a few can they be regarded as steadily advancing. There is abundance of money in the market, and where it can be obtained it can be had at a cheap rate; but caution, not to say timidity, still continues to govern the operations of capitalists, and hence all the movements of current business partake of a sluggish, or, perhaps it would be more correct to say, of a routine and an unenterprising character.

It is in the political world that the year just gone has witnessed the most surprising changes. The Empire has passed under a new régime; something like a Revolution in the government of it has taken place. Parties have changed their positions. Suddenly, and as if for comparatively trifling reasons, they who were in power and who, no doubt, expected to remain so for some time to come, ventured to appeal to the constituent bodies and were beaten. They thereupon lost their majority in the House of Commons, and they had to face a majority twice as large as that which had carried them triumphantly through six years of not uneventful administration. They accepted their defeat, and made way for their successors. Mr. Gladstone, who had been largely instrumental in bringing about this result, was prevailed upon to accept the office which Earl Beaconsfield had resigned. All this happened midway of the Parliamentary Session. It was May before the new Government could address itself to the new Parliament. It was then too late to initiate what is called "heroic" legislation. Nevertheless, hard fights were fought; some useful domestic legislation was got through; great Financial changes were introduced, such, for example, as the commutation of the Malt Tax for an Excise Impost on Beer; Agricultural Tenants were gratified by receiving authority to protect themselves against the ravages of ground game; a Burials Bill of a tolerably satisfactory character was passed; and the immediate wants of Ireland (so far as the intentions of the Government could make provision for them) were considered, adopted by the Commons, and rejected by the Lords. The close of the Session did not take place until the month of September had made an appreciable advance towards Michaelmas. Some three or four weeks previous to the prorogation Mr. Gladstone fell ill, and the apparent danger of losing so valuable a life evoked the active sympathy towards him of all parties in the State. Lord Hartington took his place as Leader of the House of Commons during his enforced absence, and admirably conducted the business of the House.

Quite apart from the legislative achievements of Parliament, the conduct of our Foreign Policy stands in marked contrast with that of the preceding Cabinet. Steps were taken immediately upon the change of Government to establish what is now designated the "European Concert" for the settlement of the Eastern Question in the European Dominions of the Sultan of Turkey. They were taken with some success. His Imperial Majesty was courteously approached, but was made to feel that he stood in the presence of a combination which, if real, it would be fatuity to resist. His ring of Pashas have tried every art of evasion, but in vain. The Powers held him to the Treaty obligations he had incurred, and, after much fruitless negotiation with him, threatened him with a Naval Demonstration. Dulcigno was eventually ceded to the Montenegrins, and that chapter of history is closed. Greece still remains as she was before the Berlin Congress; but there can be little doubt that Greece, too, will be aided so far by the Moral Authority of the Concert of Powers as substantially to obtain, without the shedding of blood, the new Territory awarded to her by the Berlin Conference.

The Afghan War may be said to be virtually at an end. The marvellous march of General Sir Frederick Roberts from Cabul to Candahar, followed up within two or three days by the total defeat of Yakoub Khan and the dispersion of his forces, more than revindicated the military prestige lost by General Burrowes a few weeks previously. British Troops will occupy Candahar during the winter, but, it is understood, will certainly retire from Afghanistan on the return of spring. At any rate, all is now quiet in that country, nor does there appear to be any decided probability of our occupation of it being much further prolonged. To this picture, however, there is a companion one, which is the reverse of satisfactory. The Cape Government in South Africa is putting out all its strength for a successful termination of the War in Basuto Land, and appears to be not too certain of achieving its object; while the Boers in the Transvaal have risen in insurrection against British authority, have proclaimed a Republic, and, if they are to be subjugated by British arms, fresh pecuniary burdens will have to be imposed upon British taxpayers.

If, however, nothing else had occurred to make the year 1880 memorable in this Realm, the state of Ireland within the last few weeks would have done so. A vast strike against the payment of rents at any valuation above what the tenants choose to put upon them, assisted by a novel kind of social coercion called Boycotting, has spread over the greater part of the island with almost magical rapidity. It seems to have produced a veritable reign of terror; it has set up in Ireland a secret Government, which uses menacing and even violent methods of carrying its illegal requisitions into effect. It has cast a gloom over the close of the year, but it is a topic which may be best reserved for discussion when Parliament meets.

Some few natural calamities have left their gloomy mark upon 1880, foremost amongst which the Landslip at Naini Tal, and the repeated shocks of Earthquake at Agram, in Croatia, will be long remembered. We have had disasters, too, at home—mine explosions, and, though fewer than usual, railway accidents. We have also been called to part with some of our most valuable men, of whom it will suffice to mention Lord Stratford de Redcliffe and the Lord Chief Justice Cockburn. The readers of these pages have been made acquainted with these losses as they occurred, and, in most instances, have been supplied with portraits of the more illustrious dead. Let us close the year with gratitude for the blessings that we have enjoyed, and, amid all existing troubles, let us exercise a faith in the future, which will enable us to wish one another

A HAPPY NEW YEAR.

ECHOES OF PANTOMIME WEEK.

"First it blew, then it snew, then it thew, and then it friz 'orrid." The barbaric saying which I have ventured to quote is, I am aware, neither new nor elegant; still, in connection with the climate of my beloved country, in winter, it is certainly vigorously comprehensive; and eminently did it apply to the meteorological conditions of Boxing Day, 1880. "It" did all the things which I have enumerated, and more. Only it began by freezing and snowing; then it thawed; subsequently it drizzled; then it poured; and late in the afternoon there was a nice damp fog. The morning papers were very late; the post did not come in until past ten a.m., and then it brought no letters worth reading; we had had no fresh bread for three days; the entire establishment had become temporarily demoralised owing to Christmas Cards (the very dog had received one of these festive missives from New York City, U.S.A., and had injured his health by licking some coloured gelatine forming part of the ornamentation of his card); the cook, owing to the non-arrival of any fish, had announced her intention of "going for" the fishmonger (much wiser in her generation than the unfortunate Vattel, who killed himself because la marée made default); all the outside world of backshish beggars, from the postman to the turncock, and from the scavenger, who does not scavenge, to the dustmen who will not remove the dust, were knocking my door down for Christmas Boxes; so, about one in the afternoon, feeling in wretchedly dejected spirits, and doubting whether I should be much longer able to resist the impulse to suspend myself to a branch of one of the fine old trees in Makebelieve-square, I happily found a Golden Mean, and, entering a four-wheeled cab, proceeded to the Alhambra Theatre Royal.

The immense auditorium in that remarkable establishment (which I can remember as a Scientific Institute, a bazaar, a revivalist chapel, a circus, a place for Mr. Rarey's Exhibition of horse-taming, and a café chantant, and which is now one of the largest and handsomest theatres in Europe, reminding you very strongly of one of the enormous popular theatres on the Rambla at Barcelona) was densely thronged by a thoroughly Boxing-Day audience; not a Boxing-Night one, mind, for the great assemblage were, save when clamorously applauding the performers, exemplarily quiet and well behaved. I have an idea that the middle classes of the suburbs had poured down on the Alhambra on Monday; for one grows accustomed to the different physiognomical types of playhouse audiences; and the Alhambra boxes and stalls were filled on the twenty-seventh with people of a type wholly unfamiliar to me.

I was right glad to renew my acquaintance with the merry and sparkling opéra bouffe of "Mefistofele II.," the first performance of which I briefly noticed last week. It went swimmingly on Monday, a few necessary excisions having been made to bring it more compactly together. Miss Constance Loseby as Marguerite was in excellent voice, and sang charmingly; and the choregraphic interlude of the "Marguerites of all Nations" was received with tumultuous applause. As on the first occasion, a very rich crop of laurels was carried off by Miss St. Quinten as Mefistofele. This delightful little lady has not only a fresh and clear voice, which she manages with taste and skill, but she is likewise one of the most eloquently expressive mimes that I have ever seen off the Italian stage. And an Italian Prima Mima is ranked in a parallel line with a Prima Donna Assoluta. Quite apart from her vocal talents, which are brilliant, the mimetic acquirements of Miss St. Quinten—her grace, her agility, her versatility of pose and gesture, have at once secured for her high rank as a dramatic artist. As for Mr. Lionel Brough as the "Copper Captain" Valentine, if he made me shriek with laughter ten days ago he almost made me cry with cachinnation on Monday. If his death in the duel with Faust was superb, his coming to life again as a cadaverous but bibulous Ghost in an ulster and a Tam o'Shanter cap were simply inimitable. If Mr. Lionel Brough be accused of "gagging" or of saying more than is set down for him, all he has to reply is that the author of the libretto has not done much more than supply him with so much canvas, and that he has had carte blanche to embroider thereupon a picture of burlesque character replete with genuine humour and rare originality.

The special Boxing-Day entertainment provided at the Alhambra, which followed the performance of "Mefistofele II.," was an entirely new grand Ballet of Action in four scenes, entitled "Hawaia; or, The Burning Gulf," invented, designed, and "dressed" by Mr. Alfred Thompson. This versatile gentleman is an artist, a dramatist, a poet, and a "pantisocratist." (Is he not the editor of Pan?) I have no doubt that he could paint a panorama, build a pantechnicon, and play on the Pans' pipes. The brilliant success which his ballet of "Hawaia" achieved on Monday should incite him to compose similarly sparkling terpsichorean entertainments on the subjects of Pantagruel or Panurge. And what a splendid mythological ballet "Pandora, or the Magic Box of Mischief" would make! Of the plot of "Hawaia" I confess (not having provided myself with a libretto) that I could not make much. It appeared, however, to my darkened sense that Ferdinand the Catholic (who had espoused La Reine Pomare en secondes noces) had been pleased to appoint Señor Camoëns, author of the "Lusiad," an Admiral of the Pink Tights Squadron, and had commanded him to proceed on a voyage of discovery to the South Pole. Thereupon, much dancing on the Common Hard at Portsmouth—I mean on the quay at Cadiz or Lisbon, it does not much matter which. Admiral Camoëns loves and is beloved by Poll of Portsmouth Point, alias Señorita Dolores Trasosmontes, Apple of the Eye of the Escurial, and Maid of Saragoza. They dance away to the South Pole in a four-decker galleon, Vasco de Gama, Christopher Columbus, Americus Vespucius, and Sir Martin Frobisher cheering their departure and waving maps on Mercator's Projection: a solemn benediction being bestowed on the Admiral and his squadron by the Portuguese Bishop of Honululu, attended by a strong body of Ritualistic clergy attired in superbly illegal vestments. Tableau. In Scene the Second there occur a storm, a ship-wreck, a sea-cave, a coral stream shore, and a dance of juvenile female cannibals in fleshings couleur chocolat de santé. Enter Admiral Camoëns as a shipwrecked mariner, and otherwise disguised as Captain Webb. To him (but the Admiral is a young lady) enters Dolores de Trasosmontes, who has assumed the aquatic garb of Miss Beckwith, of the Royal Westminster Aquarium. In another scene, the savage inhabitants of the Cruel Islands (South Pole, W.C.) are exhibiting, by dancing, their joy and exultation at having just cooked and eaten half of the crew of the shipwrecked galleon (including the domestic chaplain of the Bishop of Honululu), and intending to eat the remainder on Boxing Night. Enter Hyppolita, Queen of the Amazons, formerly Queen Emma of the Sandwich Islands, and afterwards Pocahontas, Princess of Virginia (what a pretty ballet the story of Pocahontas would make!), she falls in love with Admiral Camoëns, while her consort or cousin (let us hope her cousin), Hokey Pokey Wankey Fum, King of the Sham Guinea coast, and Original Bones of the Royal College of Surgeons, a young and handsome cannibal of the most pleasing manners, makes amatory advances to Dolores. But the endearments of the dusky anthropophagi are not reciprocated by the lovers of Iberio-Lusitania. The heart of Admiral Camoëns "is true to his Poll;" "and as for that damsel she declares, as eloquently as dumb show can tell it, that her real name is Molly, that never will she her Thomas (the Admiral's Christian name is Thomas) forsake, and that she is prepared, until further notice, his trousers to wash, and his grog, too, to make. Grand commotion at Wapping Old Stairs. I mean at Uruenca, capital of the Cruel Islands. Admiral Camoëns is condemned to be tattooed, tabooed, half scraped to death with oyster shells, and then to be bound to a Mourning Post fixed in a rock, with the expectation of being devoured at an early period by the Wangdoodlums, the Rypophagons, the Bonassuses, and other feral quadrupeds of the Postal District. As for the unfortunate Dolores, her painful doom is to be first "Boycotted," and then cast into the Burning Gulf—in other words, the tank of the Royal Westminster Aquarium, filled with Lowndean, the Kensal-green-road, which has been heated to a temperature of 214 degrees. But Admiral Camoëns has been liberated by the generous and humane Hokey Pokey Wankey Fum from his embarrassing connection with the Mourning Post; and in the nick of time, just as Dolores is about to be made Beautiful for Ever (a quantity of Kalydor has been mingled with the Rowlands' Macassar) the Admiral arrives on the scene and rescues his beloved one. Here the story seems to get "a little mixed." I could not help thinking, looking at the roseate hue that tinged the billows of vapour rising from the Aquarium tank, that the Burning Gulf was intended to symbolise the discovery of steam navigation, and that Admiral Camoëns had been metamorphosed somehow into the Marquis of Worcester, Fulton, James Watt, and the Commodore of the Cunard Steam-Ship Company. However, all ended happily; and we spectators went away quite enchanted with a truly pretty ballet, in which there was some excellent dancing by Mdlles. Pertoldi, Dorel, and Th. de Gilbert as premières sujets, assisted by Mdlle. Rosa Matthews, Pattie, Morini, Marie, and Taylor, and by the renowned Alhambra corps de ballet. The bright and handsome scenery was by Mr. Hann; the ballet was arranged by M. Bertrand; the entirely new music had been most skilfully scored by M. G. Jacobi; and the gay and sparkling costumes were, of course, from the designs of Mr. Alfred Thompson, the "Pantisocratist."

To a club, in the rain (Leicester-square was destitute, either of hansoms or four-wheelers, at 5.30 p.m.; and in Pall-mall the hackney vehicles were few and far between). I declined the assistance of one cabby who was tipsy, of another who was insolent and ruffianly (what blessings Bank Holidays are, to be sure! How they refine and soften the manners of the people, and how empty the ginshops were on Monday!), and of a fourth who was either idle or idiotic, and proposed not to know where the Foundling Hospital was. At last, after about twenty minutes' shrill whistling, I secured the services of a charioteer who was only deaf, rheumatic, and generally superannuated; and he was good enough to drive me home at a rate of speed of about a mile and a half per hour. So, after a hurried "snack," and, with the aid of a friendly four-wheeler specially retained from the Foundling stand (the cabmen on which are exceptionally willing and civil men) to Drury Lane Theatre to witness the performance of Mr. E. L. Blanchard's Grand Comic Christmas Annual (the veteran dramatist disdains to call his "Annuals" by their legitimate name of pantomimes; but Mr. E. L. Blanchard has written so many that he may be allowed without protest to indulge his harmless whim) called "Mother Goose and the Enchanted Beauty." The plot of the Annual is founded on the very old fairy-tale of the "Sleeping Beauty in the Wood." "La Belle au Bois Dormant," one of the "Contes de la Mère d'Oie," which are as old as the hills, and still as charming as the green hills of Vermont, or as those Surrey hills of our own which Mr. Vicat Cole paints so deftly.

Such a good old-fashioned Christmas pantomime as Mr. E. L. Blanchard's "Mother Goose" (is it his Silver or his Golden Pantomimic wedding that he is about to celebrate, or has just celebrated?) and such a wondrous scene as Old Drury presented on Boxing Night! There were phenomena both before and behind the curtain. The National Theatre was literally crammed from pit to gallery; and hundreds of persons must have been turned away from the doors for lack of space. The dress circle, the private boxes, and the stalls were radiant with a galaxy (that, I believe, is the correct expression) of rank and fashion; not a seat was unoccupied in the upper tiers of boxes; the pit was one Black Sea of human heads; and in the upper and lower galleries; well, there was, prior to the rising of the curtain for the pantomine, Chaos come again, plus Babel revived, plus Bedlam let loose, the whole forming a traditional Drury Lane Boxing Night audience irrepressibly vociferous but thoroughly jovial and good tempered. I believe that if half the fearful uproar which was audible at Old Drury between half-past seven and eight o'clock on Monday night had been heard at any Continental theatre, the managerial authorities would have entertained serious thoughts of sending for the gendarmerie, or, if need were, for the military. As for an American audience, they are, as a rule, as quiet as the little lambs which skip about the uplands at Bo-Peep, by St. Leonards. Indeed, our American cousins (unless they have "whisky in the hair") only make a noise in public once a year: on the Fourth of July.

It was Mr. Ferdinand Wallerstein, the experienced chef d'orchestre and composer of the lively music of "Mother Goose," who, with his customary dexterity, on Boxing Night enacted the part of Neptune in the Æneid, and quelled the raging storm of yells and cat-calls—

> He spoke;—and while he spoke he smooth'd the sea,
> Dispell'd the darkness and restored the day.

That is to say, Mr. Wallerstein spoke to his "four-and-twenty fiddlers all of a row," his bassoons, trombones, and clarionets; and, in obedience to the waving of his bâton of command, the band struck up a twice-repeated "God Bless the Prince of Wales," followed by "God Save the Queen." When the tremendous cheering consequent on the performance of the National Anthem had subsided, the many-headed denizens of the galleries settled themselves down quietly to enjoy the performance of "Mother Goose," of which, owing to the number of anticipatory pantomimic notices which have appeared, I am happily absolved from narrating the plot. So that which I have to say concerning this very merry pantomime has chiefly reference to the performers, and to the scenes and "situations," which seemed to afford the most intense delight to the audience. "Mother Goose's Model Farm in Lowther Arcadia" was a most amusing scene, comprising, as it did, a "Grand Ballet of Toys," in which the wooden menagerie of Noah's ark put in a very droll appearance; and Shem, Ham, and Japhet looked almost as grotesque as their sculptured brothers do in the bas-reliefs of the Doge's Palace at Venice. There was a wonderfully pretty Dance of Dolls, too, by the well-drilled and graceful little girl pupils of Madame Katti Lanner's National Training-School of Dancing. Do you remember the "Enfants Viennoises" at Her Majesty's Theatre in the bright days of the late Benjamin Lumley's management? Madame Kattie Lanner's tiny ballerine are even cleverer than the Viennese executants of the "Looking-Glass Dance." The Royal Nursery, too, was a most animated tableau, with a tea-party which gave rise to a refreshing amount of "rough-and-tumble" tomfoolery. Then there were moving panoramas, and "circular mechanical changes," and two Grand Transformation Scenes—of which I liked the first, "The Valley of a Thousand Charms," the best. In this the force of tinsel, spangles, foil-paper, coloured fires, "Dutch" metal, "ossidue," and graceful dancing could scemingly no further go;—yet it went a little further in Transformation Scene the Second, when, to the attractions of the metallic glitter and the rosy fires, there was superadded the "sensation" of young ladies in pink and gauzy draperies floating in the ambient air. The very elaborate and effective scenery was painted by Mr. William Telbin, Mr. Henry Cuthbert, and Mr. Henry Emden; and the pretty and tasteful costumes were from designs by Mr. Alfred Thompson, "specially retained for Mother Goose."

Mother Goose herself was impersonated by "Little Addie Blanche," one of Cicely Nott's daughters—the charming child whose performance of Puck in the "Midsummer Night's Dream" at Sadler's Wells filled me with admiration when I went to Mrs. Bateman's house last summer. "Little" Addie was indeed "Great" at "The Lane" on Boxing Night. To use an unpolished but expressive locution, she was "all over the shop," capering across the extensive stage of Old Drury, and, what is more, filling the vast house with her small but clear and ringing voice. The part of Prince Florizel was played by Miss Kate Santley, who received a rapturous welcome: it being her first appearance since her severe illness. She wore a fascinating costume, and danced and sang with all her old brio. Miss Santley was admirably supported by Mr. Arthur Roberts, who as Dr. Syntax, the Prince's guide, philosopher, and friend had a wonderfully grotesque academical "make up," and, besides singing with much spirit and humour a song about things which were "prefectly propah," joined with Mr. James Fawn, as Yokel, a country bumpkin, in a "topical" duet nearly as comical as the gendarmes' duet in "Geneviève de Brabant." I was distressed, however, to notice a sarcastic allusion among the topics of the day to one upon by Messrs. Roberts and Fawn to the Dragon, miscalled the Griffin, of the Temple Bar Memorial. I have made my peace with that monster, and have learned to love him. I should have been better pleased had the artistes brought in Mr. John Bright, who, according to the Earl of Madeira's—I mean the Earl of Carnarvon's, notable letter, goes about careering on "a Hippogriff of Democracy." Fancy the Right Honourable member for Birmingham bestriding a Hippogriff. Let me also mention with applause the Terpsichorean and mimetic powers of Mr. St. John Claughan, who has arranged all the ballets in "Mother Goose," with the exception of those executed by the pupils of Madame Kattie Lanner. Mr. John d'Auban himself (he is the black cook who dances that marvellous hornpipe in the opera of "Billee Taylor") plays in the Drury-Lane pantomime the part of the Lord Great Chamberlain; while Miss Emma d'Auban is Queen Tiddyiddy, and Miss Marian d'Auban is one of the Columbines. A word of hearty praise is also the due of Mr. Julian Girard, who looked weird and unearthly in a close-fitting suit of sables, with preternaturally long tails to his dress coat, and who threw himself about the stage; flung now one leg and now the other over the heads of the tallest performers; tied himself into Gordian knots and untied them without cutting them; broke himself to pieces and put himself together again (so to speak) in a bewilderingly dexterous manner. There were two (human) Donkeys also, attached to a van, out of which Dr. Syntax and Whimwag (Mr. Julian Girard) extracted much fun; and there was a Lion (human) that roared beautifully (but not so loudly as the galleries had roared between half-past seven and eight). In bringing to a close this notice of one of the funniest, most frolicsome, and best-mounted pantomimes that these many years past I have seen at the Theatre Royal Drury-Lane, let me say with unbated breath that had Mr. Blanchard's Annual been, instead of a crisp and sparkling entertainment overflowing with merriment, the dullest and dreariest of pantomimes possible of conception, it would have been redeemed from failure by the highly artistic carriage of the Goose. The Goose (in strict ornithological accuracy he should be a Gander) was sustained by Mr. John Ridley. Advisedly do I say "sustained," since the whole of Mr. John Ridley's individuality, except his legs, was inside the framework of the Goose's body; and he must have had rather an onerous weight of wicker-work and calico feathers to carry. The Goose, from beak to tail, must have been some seven feet high. He danced, he pirouetted, he waddled, he cut capers, he was rapped with sceptres, poked with broomsticks, and thrust at with swords; but he remained master of the situation, and quacked continually. He might have been a "Rooshian" or a "Prooshian," or even a Moldo-Wallachian, or a Member of the Albanian League, but he preferred to be Goose; and his gambadoes were glorious to behold.

Mem.: The Harlequinade at Old Drury was brief, and I have not the space at command to give it extended comment; but, in justice to a very industrious and deserving class of professionals whose chance of popularity comes, like Christmas itself, "only once a year," it may be recorded that Mr. William Waite, Miss Ridgeway, and Miss Carrie Coote were the Harlequins; Mr. Fred Evans, the "Great Little Rowella," and Master Bertie Coote the Clowns; Messrs. Bradford and Abrahams the Pantaloons; and Miss Marian d'Auban (as aforesaid) and Miss Clara Fisher, the Columbines.

Triumphant success was also the lot at the Theatre Royal Covent-Garden, of the pantomime of "Valentine and Orson," written by Mr. F. C. Burnand. Obviously, I have not been able to witness it yet; seeing that on Tuesday in Pantomime week I went to see Mr. Edwin Booth as Bertuccio in the "Fool's Revenge," at the Princess's; and on Wednesday these "Echoes" go to press. But trusty informants tell me that Mr. Burnand's pantomime, with the inestimable aid of scenery by Mr. William Beverly, and the valuable assistance of the Vokes Family, went very bravely indeed. I hope to render an impartial account of it next week, marking, meanwhile, the curious fact of the Messrs. Gatti having enlisted under the banner of their management a host of celebrities formerly associated with Drury Lane, including Mr. Beverly as scenic artist, the Vokeses as burlesque artistes, the admirable Mr. John Cormack as director of the ballet; while, wonder of wonders! "Valentine and Orson" is produced under the immediate supervision and superintendence of Mr. F. B. Chatterton, erst Lessee and Manager of the National Theatre. Does not Honoré de Balzac say something about Life not being possible without an Immensity of Oblivion?

Albeit I resolved in the outset to devote this page exclusively to seasonable frivolity ('tis only once a year), I cannot resist the temptation to notice one little morsel of bibliography which a friend has sent me apropos of "Valentine and Orson." The romance on which Mr. Burnand has founded his libretto dates back, I learn, to an extremely remote period, and was a popular story in our chap-book literature even in the days of Shakspeare. A play under this title, written by Anthony Munday, assisted by Richard Hathawaye, was acted by "the Queen's Players" in 1596, and is entered in the books of the Stationers' Company, March 31, 1600. In modern times "Valentine and Orson" has been adapted to the stage by "Tom Dibdin;" and I read that the drama, in which Charles Farley, the noted constructor of pantomimes, was the original Valentine, and Dubois the Orson, ran forty-three consecutive nights. This, at the time, was an exceptionally long run. In 1820 "Valentine and Orson" was popular at the Haymarket as a pantomime, with John Bologna as Valentine and Gomery, a well-known Harlequin, as Orson.

The name of "Farley" suggests an odd reminiscence. Nearly thirty years ago I had occasion to have a tombstone made and graven for the sepulchre of a beloved relative. The monumental sculptor (somewhere in the Kensal-green-road, I think) who executed the memorial was a son of Farley, renowned as a deviser of mirthful pantomimes. This is nothing—a mere accident, you may say. But mark this curious coincidence. There is at present flourishing a genial member of the Savage Club and author of several most popular Christmas pantomimes, whose normal business is that of a dealer in stone and marble, and who is ready to supply any number of tombstones and funereal memorials to a bereaved public. There must be more in this than mere accident. Constant contemplation of Carrara marble, Peterhead granite, or pietra antica may engender depression of spirits; and ultimately the too much "marmorified" merchant may murmur to himself, "I must go and write a grand comic Christmas Pantomime, lest I should throw myself into the Regent's Canal."

So I have just been enabled to skim the surface of "Pantomime Week," and to register the leading "Echoes" thereof. Next week, in addition to "Valentine and Orson," I mean (if all goes well) to say something about Mr. Reece's highly successful burlesque of "The Forty Thieves" at the Gaiety, in the cast of which extravaganza are comprised Misses Nellie Farren, Kate Vaughan, and Connie Gilchrist, the important Mr. Edward Terry, the portentous Mr. Royce, and all the leading spirits of the Gaiety company, whose motto is that of Maffio Orsini in "Lucrezia Borgia"—

> Non curiamo l'incerto domani
> Se quest' oggi c'è dato a godere.

Then there is a capital pantomime, I am told, at the Royal Park Theatre, Camden Town, "Harlequin Little Red Riding Hood;" and a superb one at the Surrey, "Hop o' my Thumb;" an elaborate one at the Britannia (the Great Theatre, Hoxton), "Love's Dream;" and a sumptuous one at the National Standard, "The Wideawake Sleeping Beauty." I must go far afield, and spend many shillings in cabs and playbills ere I meet my readers again.

At a mansion in Berkeley-square I was present on Christmas Day at one of the most curious and the most interesting "afternoon teas" that I can ever remember to have assisted at. A grande dame de par le monde had convened a numerous and fashionable company to meet, over "the cup that cheers but not inebriates," those phenomenal specimens of diminutive humanity, the "American Midgets," at present contributing to the amusements of "Pantomime Week" at Piccadilly Hall. On Christmas Day "the Smallest People in the World" took tea with "the Quality" in the drawing-room in Berkeley-square. They had their own tea-table and their own tea-equipage; while the thoughtful and graceful kindliness of the noble hostess had even provided a commissariat specially adapted to the requirements of the tiniest pigmies ever seen out of the empire explored by Captain Lemuel Gulliver. There were Lilliputian Sally-Lunns, microscopic muffins and almost imperceptible crumpets; Troglodyte toast, miniature macaroons, and slices of bread-and-butter wellnigh invisible to the naked eye. The "wee" people partook of this banquet not only with dignified composure but with easy grace; and there was quite a courtly dignity in the demeanour of Señorita Lucia Zarate, from Vera Cruz, Mexico, who is eighteen years of age, smokes a cigarito after each meal, would dance upon occasion, I have no doubt, the Sword Dance or the Jota Arragonese, and who weighs just four pounds and three quarters avoidupois. After the Señorita Lucia, I will trouble you, if you please, for "General Mite," sixteen years of age, and weighing nine pounds; "Commodore" Foote and Miss Jenny Quigly, who are somewhat taller than Lucia and Mite, but are both considerably smaller than the smallest dwarfs ever seen in this country. I was in Dwarfland all that Christmas night, in bed; and dreamed that I was Count Bornlausky, and that Sir Jeffrey Hudson, maddened by envy of my exiguity, was pursuing me to slay me.

THE LATE DUCHESS OF WESTMINSTER.

THE LATE MR. FRANK BUCKLAND.

THE LATE DUCHESS OF WESTMINSTER.

The late Duchess of Westminster, who died at Branksome Towers, Bournemouth, on Sunday, the 19th ult., was Lady Constance Gertrude Leveson-Gower, fourth daughter of George Granville, second Duke of Sutherland, K.G., by his marriage with Lady Harriet Elizabeth Georgiana Howard, third daughter of George, sixth Earl of Carlisle, and was born on June 16, 1834. She was married in the Chapel Royal, St. James's Palace, on April 28, 1852, to Hugh Lupus, Earl Grosvenor, who succeeded his father in the Marquisate of Westminster in October, 1869, and was elevated to a Dukedom in 1874. Her Grace has left a family of five sons and three daughters surviving. The eldest son, Victor Alexander, Earl Grosvenor, to whom the Queen stood sponsor in person, was born in April, 1853, and is married to Lady Sibell Mary Lumley, youngest daughter of the Earl of Scarborough. Of the late Duchess's daughters, the eldest is now Marchioness of Ormonde, and the second is married to the Hon. Charles Compton Cavendish, eldest son of Lord Chesham. The late Duchess was sister of the present Duke of Sutherland, the Duchess of Leinster, of Lord Ronald Leveson-Gower, the late Duchess of Argyll, and the late Lady Blantyre.

THE LATE MR. FRANK BUCKLAND.

The death of Mr. Frank Trevelyan Buckland, her Majesty's Inspector of Salmon Fisheries, was announced last week. He was the eldest son of the Very Rev. William Buckland, D.D., Dean of Westminster, the eminent geologist. He was born Dec. 17, 1826, and was educated at Winchester, and at Christ Church, Oxford. He inherited much of his father's originality and keen powers of observation, and from boyhood developed a strong bias towards natural history and physical science. He never pursued his father's favourite study of geology, but applied himself to the medical profession. Having studied medicine in Paris and London, and served as house surgeon to St. George's Hospital, he entered the 2nd Life Guards in 1854 as assistant surgeon. Mr. Buckland's passion for natural history, and especially the piscicultural branch of the science, soon absorbed all his thoughts. He left the Life Guards in 1863, and for some time was a constant contributor to the Field newspaper and other periodicals. In 1866, with the late Mr. W. Ffennell, the first Inspector of English Salmon Fisheries, Mr. Buckland projected and started Land and Water. He conducted its intelligence in regard to sea and river fisheries and practical natural history, and contributed to it up to the very day before his death. In 1867 Mr. Buckland was appointed Inspector of English Salmon Fisheries, and since then his labours have been unremitting. No one has done more to popularise the subject of fishery cultivation and preservation, not only in England, but throughout the world. His advice was sought by the Governments of Russia, Germany, France, and America, as well as our own colonies. His efforts for the introduction of salmon and trout into the Australian and New Zealand waters are well known. In 1870 Mr. Buckland was appointed special commissioner for the salmon fisheries of Scotland. He published a report on the Norfolk fisheries, which led to the Norfolk and Suffolk Fisheries Act of 1877. In the same year he was one of a Commission to inquire into the crab and lobster fisheries of England and Scotland, which resulted in an Act of Parliament for the protection of those molluscs. In 1877 he served on a Commission of Inquiry into the herring fisheries. In the next year he was engaged upon the Commission relative to the sea fisheries around England and Wales, the report upon which was published last year by Mr. Frank Buckland and Mr. Spencer Walpole. Mr. Buckland's researches into the mysterious salmon disease have attracted much attention. It would be impossible to give a full list of his contributions towards the development and preservation of our fisheries. His museum at South Kensington, collected at his own expense, is a monument of the industry with which he sought to gather information connected with the fisheries for the public benefit.

The Extra Supplement.

"CHARITY."

In the excellent picture we engrave, by the able Hungarian painter Benczur, we are carried back to the most grandiose time, at least as regards externals, in German history—the Maximilian era. The costumes, though extravagant in form and cumbrous in their amplitude, were at no period richer or more costly in material or more picturesque in general effect. The recent celebration at Cologne of the completion of the cathedral gave some idea of how widely different from our prosaic nineteenth century was the whole aspect of life towards the Gothic and early Renaissance epochs. We have before us a glimpse of what is meant in this stately figure of a noble lady, gracefully lifting her train as she passes out of church (her daughter leaning lovingly on her arm)—with her long sumptuous dress and puffed sleeves of velvets, silks, and satins, embroideries and gold tissues, an elaborate châtelaine by her side, and massive gold chain suspended round her neck, the whole foiled by the great bowed head-dress. As she passes the church portal she does not forget to drop a coin into the hat of the poor old beggar. Alms-giving was then one of the first, if not the first duty of a Christian, and the incident may be fittingly dwelt upon at this season, when charity is more needful and more incumbent on us than at any other. We have the poor always with it: metaphorically they lie at our own, as well as the church door: the aged, the sick, the halt, the blind, without shelter, food, or clothing, incapable of or without work. Let us, then, relieve them if we would enjoy, and doubly enjoy, that which we possess.

During the afternoon of Christmas Day the Queen distributed gifts to the old labourers and their wives on the Osborne estate, and to the children attending Whippingham School. Her Majesty's New-Year's gifts, consisting of beef and coals, will be presented to the poor of the parishes of New Windsor, Holy Trinity, and Clewer to-day (Saturday). Her Majesty likewise gives a donation to the Royal Clothing Club at Windsor.

Christmas was celebrated at Sandringham in a truly national manner, the kind thoughtfulness of the Prince and Princess of Wales providing that no cottage on the estate should be destitute of the means of enjoying the traditional Christmas dinner.

Lord Windsor, of Oakley Park, near Ludlow, distributed 1000 lb. of Christmas beef to the poor on his Lordship's Shropshire estates at Bromfield last Saturday, with a proportionate number of loaves of bread, for every family on the Hewell Grange estate, near Bromsgrove.

In London charity was open-handed. In most of the workhouses the inmates were supplied with some extras. In the Marylebone and other unions where the guardians are unable to supplement workhouse fare from the poor-rate, private subscriptions were solicited, so that the poor of the workhouse might be served with roast beef, plum-pudding, and a glass of ale. Five hundred and forty of the poorest families in the district of St. John's-wood and Marylebone were relieved on Christmas Eve at St. John's-wood Congregational Church, in accordance with a custom which has been observed for the last twenty-two years. The doles were distributed entirely without reference to religious creed. At the Moor-street Mission Hall, St. Giles's, there was a distribution of food for the Christmas dinners of 1500 persons, through the agency of the Bloomsbury Chapel Domestic Mission. Upwards of 800 of the homeless poor sat down to the Christmas dinner, which was given as usual at the Field-lane Refuges and Ragged Schools, Vine-street, Clerkenwell-road. Eleven hundred families were provided with a Christmas dinner from the Leicester-square Soup Kitchen. In the Lisson-grove School-room on Thursday week 1000 lb. of tea was given away, in 1 lb. packets, by Messrs. Spencer, Turner, and Boldero.

These are only a very few instances of the gracious manner in which Christmas has been kept, with true Christmas spirit, in town and country.

"THE NEW YEAR."

Perhaps the pretty allegorical picture with which—and all good wishes—we greet our readers on the first page of the first Number of a New-Year's issue may be found to have more suggestive meaning than might at first sight appear. The Old Year, or, if you will, Old Father Time, typified in that patriarchal figure, has the white hair and some, at least, of the wrinkles of advanced age; but he is not emaciated, decrepit, moribund, as often represented. He is still hale and hearty; for Time, however old, never dies, and the old year lives in the new; he has strength to support his little offspring with that heavily-laden laptul of promised blessings; his aspect claims our reverence and respect, and his countenance beams with beneficence, for has he not shown towards us all a father's forethought and care, has he not guided us and ordered our path for good in a thousand ways? So, too, with his little charge, the New Year—it is not the figure of a newly-born babe, plump it may be, with the promise of lusty youth and robust manhood, but still a suckling and unable to stand or walk alone, such as we often see. Our young beautiful fair-haired new friend will be able to take care of himself, at least we hope so. The eyes with which he recognises us, or that are looking into the future, are bright with hope and intelligence; while a smile of love and anticipated pleasure plays on his lips. And thus it is: the Old Year still lives with us—with its experience and lessons, if also with its grey hairs, and Time furrows, and, alas, its sorrows! The New Year comes to meet us not as an entirely new acquaintance, or helpless nurseling, though with no touch as yet of sorrow or trace of time, but with child-like hope, affection, promise—may the child prove "father to the man"—and laden with the lovely roses of spring, and the full-eared wheat and sun-riped fruits of autumn.

A NEW-YEAR'S PROMISE.

With the Old Year ended
Hope's bright promise sped!
Once more unfulfilled,
All its dreams are fled!
Sick my heart, and fainting
To have hoped in vain.
How, then, shall the spirit
Dream those dreams again?

Shall the fields lie barren
Though no flowers spring?
Shall the groves sleep ever
Though no wild-birds sing?
Shall the darkness deepen
And no dawn be near?
Or thy life be shadowed
And no Sunshine cheer?

Violets shalt thou gather
Ere the snow-wreaths melt!
Birds shall carol round thee
Ere the Zephyr's felt!
Rosily the morrow
Bursts the shroud of night!
Then forget thy sorrow
In the New Year's Light!—H. Hall.

THE WAR IN SOUTH AFRICA.

Telegrams from the Cape confirm the news that the Boers in the Transvaal have risen against the British Government and re-established a Republican form of government, after having occupied the town of Heidelberg. Full confirmation has been given to the painful report from the Cape which reached this country on Thursday week. An official telegraphic despatch received at the Colonial Office states that the head-quarters and two hundred and fifty men of the 94th Foot were assailed and overpowered by the Boers between Leydenberg and Pretoria; that one hundred and twenty were killed or wounded, and that "the rest were taken." It is added that the colours were saved, but we are not informed how or by whom that fortunate result was effected. The General Officer commanding in Natal, who forwards the brief account, justly remarks that the sanguinary incident materially alters the situation, since it will encourage the Boers, who "will now feel themselves committed." But the Times correspondent at Durban telegraphed on Monday that "the report of the disaster to the 94th Regiment was exaggerated. Thirty men were killed and wounded. The remainder were disarmed and allowed to proceed to Pretoria. The steamer Anglian, with 140 soldiers on board, arrived at Natal to-day." The correspondent of the Standard sends the following despatch, which bears the same date:—"The Boers have released the prisoners belonging to the 94th Regiment, and have sent them to Pretoria. It is supposed that the leaders of the rebellion disapprove of the massacre, and are anxious to disclaim all responsibility for it." Though we should be glad to learn that the first accounts of the massacre of a company of the 94th Regiment by the Boers were exaggerated, yet the latest official telegram from Sir Pomeroy Colley does not lends us to believe that such is the case. The despatch adds the name of Lieutenant Hume to the list of casualties previously sent, and it is further stated that Dr. Ward was the only unwounded officer. As, therefore, all the officers suffered, it may be reasonably supposed that at least half the men were, as reported, killed or maimed. The following telegram has been received at the War Office from the General Officer Commanding in Natal to the Secretary of State for War:—"Pietermaritzburg, Dec. 27, 1880.—Magistrate Kimberley reports large force Boers occupied Potchefstroom, killing one officer, four English residents. Officer commanding camp, after warning Boers, shelled them out of buildings occupied. Boers evacuated town with loss one hundred killed and many wounded.

Several items of news respecting the native risings at various points are given in the telegrams. Among them is the complete rout of Umhlonhlo with the loss of three hundred men and a large number of cattle; and the repulse of a large Basuto force by Colonel Carrington, between Mafeteng and Morija. We give in the present Number an Illustration of Colonial Volunteers reconnoitring in Basuto land.

Sir Bartle Frere has addressed to Lord Kimberley a long letter acknowledging the Colonial Secretary's despatch of Oct. 14, and dealing in detail with the action taken by the Government with regard to the disarmament of the Basutos. He states that Government, by approving Sir Garnet Wolseley's suggestions restricting the employment of Imperial officers in organising colonial defences, materially augmented the difficulties of the situation. Sir Bartle calls upon the Colonial Secretary to publish this despatch.

THE REINFORCEMENTS.

The War Office have determined that the 6th Inniskilling Dragoons, now stationed at Norwich, shall be dispatched to Natal, in compliance with the demand of the General Officer commanding there, for a cavalry regiment as reinforcement. It has been determined also to send out to the Transvaal a battery of artillery, and the Transport Department of the Admiralty have been requested to provide accommodation for the artillery, together with the cavalry. The National Company's steamer Queen has been ordered for survey to carry the head-quarters of the 6th Dragoons, but it is not expected that the vessel will be ready for at least ten days to come. The 97th Regiment left Gibraltar yesterday in the troop-ship Tamar for Cape Town and Natal. The Euphrates troop-ship is now due at Bombay to take home cavalry, and the 15th Hussars are on the roster to return to England; but until some more definite information as to the military position in the Transvaal is received no decision has been come to respecting the employment of the cavalry returning from India. Inquiries have been made, but have not yet been answered, as to the requirements of the Natal Government for infantry. The 91st Highlanders are in readiness at Cape Town to be sent to the Transvaal if requisitioned, and the Cape Colony Government has signified its readiness to spare them. The 97th Regiment is expected at Natal within a fortnight; and there are some companies of infantry at Mauritius also in readiness, and within ten days of Natal, if called upon.

PREPARING FOR THE PANTOMIME.

A Christmas pantomime has been aptly called "a manufactory of pleasure;" and the back of a pantomime-stage, with its ropes and pulleys, its tackle and bridges, its yawning chasms, docks, and lifts, has been inevitably compared to the busy deck of a seagoing ship; but it is an open question whether a third of the audience sitting comfortably in front has any idea of the labour involved or the discipline required in getting ready one of these elaborate shows for the delight of young and old on Boxing Night. It all looks so very easy when it is done. The conductor takes his seat in the orchestra, and strikes up the popular airs: a bell rings, and the curtain goes up, discovering cloudland or a demon kitchen: flowers open their petals and bloom out little fairies: ballets dance before us with easy grace and faultless precision: liliputian armies advance, to the intense delight of the children: a small flag is seen waving at the promptor's box, bringing on armies of amazons, painted processions, and animated heads: the clouds drift away, and we see the transformation scene, with its various stages of accentuated beauty; pretty girls seem to be flying in the air or lolling upon beds of roses; each moment of watching discloses fresh points to admire. There is a dazzle of silver and gold and an indescribable shimmer of tinsel. The coloured fires are lighted. The scene-painter and the manager make their bow, and then, in a few seconds more, we are whirled into the excitement of the harlequinade, with its tricks, its scrambles, and its never-ending variety. We get up from the contemplation of all this almost weary with the changes and the combinations. We are pleased to express our approval and to say that it was all as smooth as machinery and went like clockwork; but how surprised the audience would be if suddenly the whole stage could be reversed, in order to show the immense labour that each performance of a pantomime entails.

It is altogether erroneous to suppose that there is the slightest fascination or allurement in the busy, throbbing life behind the scenes. Strangers are not only in the way, but are made to feel that their room would be far more acceptable than their company. There is no time or place here for small compliments or quiet conversation. The players are at business now; they cannot be disturbed; nay, more, to distract the attention of any one of the hundreds stationed at responsible posts would be worse than to create confusion—it might cause hideous accidents, or even death. On the accurate ting of the prompter's bell depends the safety of scores of girls and children. It signals to the lowest depths and the topmost heights; each change and movement of scenery, each shift of machinery is timed to signal and warned by "cues;" the prompter and his assistants are in command of the ship, and as much direct responsibility is entailed on them as on the captain of a Channel steamer.

Just let us come behind the scenes and see what it is like, having exchanged the calm process of contemplation for what may be fairly called an organised confusion. Those who are inexperienced in the mere business of the stage cannot conceive how order can be produced from all this chaos. Carpenters in gangs, and all under subordinate command, are ready at the ropes that would puzzle an experienced Jack Tar; scene-shifters are watching with eager attention for their signal; fairies and amazons are edging their way through the crowd to be strapped on to the irons, or to fall into their ranks, and in every available corner there is a wonderful medley of animals, birds, beasts, fishes, dancers, and peripatetic toys. No maze in a holiday garden is more difficult to thread, and woe betide anyone who, without a trustworthy guide, attempts to make his way from one side of the stage to the other, or would have the hardihood, without a compass, to sail amidst these waves of pleasure and arrive in safety at the comparative peace of a quiet harbour known as the stage-door.

But, although the confusion of this stage would appear inextricable to the mere layman, practice has made perfect, and everyone knows, more or less, what to do at the right moment. The majority of those present are old hands; they have been trained to pantomimes all their lifetime; they understand the necessity of punctuality and order, and they have a wholesome dread of the fines that are rigorously administered. The new comers fall into the ranks like other recruits, and receive the assistance of the friends and companions by whom they are surrounded. Without absolute discipline a pantomime would be impossible, and obedience is exacted, from the most popular performer down to the humblest scene-shifter. For weeks and weeks past, all through the dull days of November and December, the various departments have been converging towards the centre of preparation. The ballet-girls have been drilled and trained at some school removed from the theatre; the band has practised in some deserted music-room; the scenery has come in piecemeal from some shop or warehouse over the water; the property-room has been busily employed ever since the leaves were on the autumn trees; in the heat of summer-time the pantomime book was written, and the mere words of the text form the very lightest part of the performers' labour; and those armies and processions of little children have been taken by themselves—drilled, taught, scolded, coaxed, and corrected morning after morning by the indefatigable stage manager or one of his assistants. Children who, with all deference to the School Board, know very little of their mother tongue, are taught to speak intelligently, to pronounce clearly, and to sing in tune, to say nothing of an invaluable lesson in precision and deportment. Everything is reduced to ultimate order by system; and there is framed for the guidance of everybody, from the highest to the lowest, a code of signals that must be obeyed by the popular artist who is paid a salary of forty pounds a week down to the humble supernumerary who comes on for a shilling a night in a rally, and flings a bunch of turnips at the head of the mischievous clown.

There are two sides to every question; and the sooner the public mind is disabused from the idea that fashion and frivolity have easy access to this industrious factory the better. To indulge in any laxity of the kind would be fatal to the success of any theatre, and it would be a very short-sighted policy on the part of any management to allow any talking go to the men and women at the pantomime wheel. Women and children alike are well cared for, and when they are not wanted on the stage, are soon hurried down to their own rooms, that are made sufficiently warm and comfortable. Mothers can come and look after their little ones, and fathers and brothers do not fail to fetch home the girls when work is over; and though the manufactory is one of pleasure and not of commerce, and though the machinery is erected for the elaboration of transformation scenes and sylvan panoramas instead of cotton fabrics or steel pens, there is as much care required and responsibility involved in the preparation of a pantomime as in the conduct of any huge commercial place of business.

PARISIAN SAYINGS AND DOINGS.

Paris, Monday, Dec. 27.

Adieu! year of scandals, of agitation, of pornography, of false accusations, of bitter recriminations! It is all over with 1880. Hurrah for 1881! Need I recall all the sad events of the past year—the deaths, the quarrels, the ignominies? Gustave Flaubert lowered into a grave too narrow for his stature; gigantic as his genius, Adelaide Neilson lying on the cold marble of the Morgue, Madame Thiers, Édouard Fournier; the return of the Communist exiles—of Rochefort, of Humbert, of Louise Michel, angel of the Commune, haggard and prophetic; the charges against General de Cissey, the expulsion of the religious orders, the bitter fight of parties, the disgraceful scenes in the French Chambers? No. Let the ugly sides of 1880 be buried in oblivion, and let us remember that it was the year in which was passed the law on obligatory and secular education, and that for the French nation at large it has been a period of unusual prosperity and happiness. The proof of this is that, while it is the rule in Europe for all States to balance their Budgets by a deficit, the French Budget for 1880 will show an excess over the estimates of something like 177,000,000 of francs. When the direct and indirect taxes of a country come into the Treasury so readily and so abundantly it is a sure sign that the country has plenty of money; indeed, the only cry is for more ports and harbours, and more means of communication.

Apropos of public wealth and prosperity, I may mention a remarkable book that has just been published by the eminent economist, M. Paul Leroy-Beaulieu, "Essai sur la repartition des Richesses." This book proves by facts and figures that it is not true that the rich are becoming richer and the poor poorer. On the contrary, the poor are becoming better off and the rich are obtaining less benefit from their riches. In short, that the inequality of private fortunes is gradually diminishing, and that, provided no material causes interfere with the economical development now in progress, there is every reason to believe that pauperism will gradually disappear from the face of the earth. Were it any other than so clear-headed and unparadoxical a writer as M. Leroy-Beaulieu who made this consoling statement we should be apt, perhaps, to scoff at it. As it is, we can only hope that the dream may soon be realised.

As I have said above, the Chamber of Deputies has voted the bill on compulsory and secular education. The bill has been framed so as to suit the manners and necessities of the country, and the legal sanctions are very mild in form. Moral pressure will be exhausted to the very utmost before fines and imprisonment will be inflicted on recalcitrant parents. As regards child-labour in industry and agriculture, the local school boards will be empowered to close the schools for three months when that labour is most needed, or to dispense the children from half the classes. The ordinary vacations will take up two months out of the year, so that in the country districts, for instance, the children will go to school only seven months out of the year.

Contrary to all precedent, Parliament has taken no Christmas vacation. Both Houses have been sitting daily, and deputies and senators have not been, perhaps, in the best of tempers. The Cissey Committee is still sitting, and in the course of its inquiries a letter was handed in by M. Laisant from the widow Duvergier d'Hauranne accusing M. Emile de Girardin of being nothing less than the chief of the German spies at Paris. Yesterday M. de Girardin appealed to the Chamber on the accusation, which is, indeed, ridiculous enough, and the Chamber virtually gave him a vote of confidence. On Friday the Tribunal of the Seine inflicted small fines on four journals accused of having defamed the Baroness de Kaulla, the separated wife of Colonel Jung, whose conduct started this wretched Cissey scandal. While giving Madame de Kaulla a verdict against her defamers, the Court severely stigmatised her conduct, and told her that she "was no better than she should be." M. de Girardin is so disgusted with the interference of the Rocheforts and Laisants in public affairs, and with the era of potins in which we now live, that he has finally decided to retire from public life, and to take refuge at San Remo next year.

Christmas has passed in Paris with the usual gaiety and Garagantuan feasting. Now, the New-Year's fair is in full swing, and all the Boulevards and avenues of the city are lined with booths. Fancy Oxford-street and Regent-street lined with gingerbread stalls, and booths full of toys, dolls' furniture, cheap-jack wares, articles de Paris, stationery, canaries in cages, and all the useless nick-nacks that human ingenuity can imagine! The great confectioners have not enough hands to serve their customers, and their stocks of bonbons in elegant boxes and bags threaten every moment to be exhausted. Everybody is preparing to pay the terrible social tax of New-Year's Day, when presents are not spontaneous but obligatory. Etrennes are a burden under which all the Parisians groan, but which none of them dare to shake off, being, as they are, the most patient and long-suffering people in the world, witness queues at theatre-doors, and waiting-rooms at the railway stations.

M. Jules Claretie (who, by-the-way, has spoken in high terms of the Christmas Number of the Illustrated London News in Le Temps) suggests that the epitaph of the year 1880 might be:—Ci-gît 1880—l'Année pornographique. It might be called with equal justice l'Année des Cochons. The companion of Saint Anthony has been in high honour throughout the year. It began as the petit cochon porte-bonheur, in the form of a little silver pig hanging from a bracelet; and, after passing through all the phases of jewellery and feminine ornament, it has ended—in boudin, of course, on Christmas eves—but also in sugar and in gay-coloured satin in the form of a bonbon box. No present could be more appropriate on New-Year's Day than a delicious little pig in rose and yellow satin, full of fondants, pralines, and marrons glacés. That is the last word of Parisian inventiveness.

Mdlle. Lloyd and Mdlle. Julia Bartet have been elected sociétaires of the Comédie Française. The committee of that theatre have accepted the resignation of Madame Provost-Ponsin, who retires on account of ill-health.

M. Maxime du Camp was received at the French Academy on Thursday. M. du Camp, who is the historian of the Commune, owed his election to ephemeral political causes, and his reception speech was one of the poorest that has been heard at the Academy for a long time. M. du Camp has been everything but a stylist. He has been a photographer—the first who applied photography to book-illustration—a traveller, a Garibaldinan, a novelist, a poet, a historian, without attaining brilliancy in any department. M. Caro, who replied to his speech, was maliciously true when he said to him, with a double reference: — "Vous êtes revenu de bien loin à l'Académie, Monsieur!"

Postscript.—The Senate has to-day (Tuesday) adopted the Budget of Receipts with the slight alterations of its amendments made by the Chamber. A conflict has thus been definitively avoided between the two Houses, which have now adjourned until January 11. T. C.

THE PLAYHOUSES.

On Boxing Night, while Pantomime—and Pantomime only—was holding high sway at those two whilom homes of the "legitimate" drama, Drury Lane and Covent Garden, Mr. Edwin Booth, at the New Princess's, gave another proof of his rare versatility as a tragedian, and added yet another entry to his roll of marked successes by his interpretation of the character of Bertuccio in the late Mr. Tom Taylor's interesting though unequal drama of "The Fool's Revenge." The regretted playwright was thoroughly justified in pointing out in the printed preface to this drama (in which at old Sadler's Wells more than twenty years ago I remember to have seen the late Samuel Phelps play the part of the Jester) that his "Fool's Revenge" was neither (as some critics of the time held it to be) a simple translation of Victor Hugo's drama, "Le Roi s'Amuse" nor a mere rifacciamento of the libretto of Verdi's opera of "Rigoletto." There is, indeed, a great deal more of Mr. Tom Taylor than of Victor Hugo or Verdi's librettist in "The Fool's Revenge;" but serious students of dramatic literature will scarcely agree with Mr. Taylor in his estimate of "Le Roi s' Amuse" as a play "wanting in dramatic motive and cohesion," and "defective in that central secret of stage effect, climax." Such serious students will opine that "Le Roi s' Amuse" is a magnificent tragedy, replete with dramatic motive and never lacking in cohesion, and that its catastrophe presents a very striking climax indeed. Whether the incident of the corpse of the Jester's murdered daughter being brought in a sack coram publico is, as Mr. Taylor seemed to think it was, "inadmissible on the English stage," is a very moot point. The modern playgoing public will stand a great deal in the way of physical horrors, nowadays. During many years the hideously repulsive nature of the plot of "Lucrezia Borgia" was sufficient to relegate English translations of the unsavoury although splendid play to the transpontine or to the provincial theatres. At the Italian Opera "Lucrezia" was tolerated, first, through the glorious music of Donizetti, to which the story was wedded; and, next, because the majority of the audience were unable to understand the Italian libretto, or (from the vileness of the English translation thereof) to make out very much of what the story of the terrible Duchess of Ferrara was composed. Similarly, in "Rigoletto," the ears of the amateurs are too fully captivated by the dulcet strains of "Donna è mobile" to care much about the why or the wherefore of the poor young girl in the sack; yet, as regards both dramas, it is quite open to discussion whether a public which, night after night, witnesses and applauds, without any qualms of offended taste, exhibitions of murder and suicide in modern dramas, would be very much shocked at the spectacle of "Lucrezia" (Miss Geneviève Ward has repeatedly played the part in the provinces; but I know not whether she has ever played it in London) poisoning her guests at supper and then introducing a party of bare-footed friars to sing a funeral dirge over her victims; or of Triboulet, discovering the body in the sack is that of his beloved child Blanche, and that he has been the cause of her death. After the poisoning scene in "A New Trial," I entertain few misgivings as to the digestive powers of the British public in the way of horrors.

The death, by poison, of Galeotto Manfredi, Duke of Faenza, at the hands of his wife, Francesca Bentivoglio, may be, as we are told in the preface to "The Fool's Revenge," historical; and "the atmosphere of a petty Italian Court of the Fifteenth Century" may be well suited as a medium for presenting the jester's wrongs, his rooted purpose of revenge, and the miscarriage of that purpose. Unfortunately, the "atmosphere" of "The Fool's Revenge" is not that of "a petty Italian Court in the Fifteenth, nor any other century, that I am aware of. The atmosphere is that of British melodrama, pure and simple, essentially "stagey" and artificial, and sometimes verging on the transpontine in the crudity of its situations of abduction and assassination. The "ladder" scene, in which Fiordilisa, in mistake for the Countess Malatesta, is carried off by Galeotto and his reprobate associates, is a kind of Cobourg travesty of the ancient fable of Jupiter and Alcmena; and, when Francesca decides upon poisoning her husband, she puts the doctor's stuff into the goblets with as much equanimity as though she were adding a dash of curaçoa to a tankard of Badminton. The drama is, nevertheless, smoothly, and in parts forcibly, written in blank verse, and is thus relieved from the utter melodramatic vulgarity into which, had the language been as commonly "sensational as the incidents," it must have drifted.

Mr. Edwin Booth is the life and spirit of the "Fool's Revenge." His real name is Antonio Bordiga. Albeit a deformed cripple, he found in early youth a woman to accept his hand and heart. As a notary public at Cesena, he lived happily with his consort and his infant child, Fiordilisa; when the profligate Commendatore Malatesta robs him of his wife. She soon afterwards dies. Antonio Bordiga has a brain fever, and after many years comes to the social surface again at the Court of Faenza, as the Duke's deformed and malevolently sardonic jester. His one purpose in life (beyond his passionate affection for his daughter, whom he has brought up in a convent, and who is kept in the strictest seclusion under the care of an ancient duenna) is to revenge himself on Malatesta, the betrayer of his wife. Thus he artfully incites the profligate Duke to carry off the Countess Malatesta. But certain of the courtiers have formed a counterplot to please the Duke and spite the jester, whom they hate, by carrying off his daughter. Warned of her danger by a troubadour kind of swain who has been in the habit of playing the lute under her window, and is respectfully enamoured of her, Fiordilisa escapes from her secluded dwelling just as the abductors are at her heels, and takes refuge at the Palazzo of the Countess Malatesta, a lady who on a previous occasion had protected her from molestation. But the Countess has been sent into the country by the jealous Commendatore, who, however, is chivalrous enough to offer hospitality to the lone and lorn Fiordilisa, whom he instals in his wife's own bedchamber. Thence she is abducted by the Ducal goodfornothings: the miserable Bertuccio, the jester, holding the ladder down while his daughter, muffled in blankets (and, it is to be presumed, gagged) is brought, and securely conveyed to the ducal palace. When, in the next act, the unhappy buffoon learns the dastardly trick which has been played upon him, he becomes temporarily frantic, and, after repeated and vain attempts to gain admission to the banqueting-hall, where the Duke and his courtiers are holding high revels in the presence of the poor captive Fiordilisa, the jester bursts the door open; jumps on to the table; kicks over the drinking-cups, and is (apparently) dispatched by the swords of the courtiers. The profligate Duke has been meanwhile satisfactorily dispatched, the vindictive Francesca exulting at the dissolution of her unfaithful spouse; but before Bertuccio dies he forgives his enemy Malatesta, joins the hands of the sympathetic Troubadour and Fiordilisa, and confesses that vengeance is a Divine and not a human attribute.

The Bertuccio of Mr. Edwin Booth was, throughout, magnificent. That is the only sufficing epithet for it. His delineation of the character was so entirely novel, original, and unexpected that the enthusiastic admiration of the audience was occasionally mingled with astonishment, partaking, more than once, of the nature of bewilderment and perplexity. So nearly did the extremes of the grotesque and the terrible touch each other, that for a moment one scarcely knew whether to smile at it or to be appalled at the ravings of the broken-hearted father. This was especially the case in the whimpered "Take me in, Take me in!" entreaty of the jester to the courtier when Bertuccio is repulsed from the door of the banqueting-chamber. He fondles, he fawns upon, he pats the knees of the man whom he thinks has influence enough to take him into the presence of Fiordilisa and her abductor. His yell of immeasurable despair when his suit is denied and he is rudely thrust from the door with a rough reminder that his "ape's tricks" are not wanted within, is something agonising to hear. His hysterical merriment conflicting with the wail of heartrending grief is a nobly artistic gloss on Gray's line, "Moody Madness Laughing Wild amid Severest Woe." The final catastrophe and scene of reconciliation, which have been altered by Mr. Edwin Booth himself from the text of Mr. Taylor, is not destitute of fine artistic effect; but it is not Mr. Booth's fault if throughout the part of Bertuccio, as throughout the drama itself, there runs a strong vein of "stagey" unreality and artificiality. Bertuccio is compelled to act the acting of a part; and it is his lot seldom, if ever, to be his real self. He must even, to his great muscular inconvenience, simulate a hobble and mimic a limp. He must have a voice, a mien, and language that are not only not his own, but that were not Bertuccio's own, whom the dramatist has made, with less ingenuity than ambition, homo duplex with a vengeance. Superb from first to last as is the Bertuccio of Mr. Edwin Booth, I would much rather see him as Triboulet, in an honest adaptation of Victor Hugo's "Roi s'Amuse," than in this Brummagem simulacrum of "a petty Italian Court of the Fifteenth Century." It is not real Faenza, but very flimsy English earthenware made up to imitate the Continental commodity.

Mr. Edwin Booth was tolerably well supported. Mr. William Redmund was an efficient representative of the worthless Duke Galiotto; and Mr. Charles Cartwright (who has considerably toned down since his memorable tearing of a passion to tatters in the play of "Richelieu") was pleasingly gallant as the respectfully enamoured Trovatore Serafino dell' Aquila. It is almost unnecessary to say that so consummate an actress as Mrs. Hermann Vezin made as much as could be made of the thankless part of the poison-dealing Duchess; and of Miss Gerard as Fiordilisa it is difficult to say more than that she looked extremely pretty and bore herself very gracefully. I am happy to be told that the lady is very young. She has plenty of time before her in which to learn that vigour, concentration, and passion, are essentials among the qualities of a leading actress. At present her acting is fertile in promise, but (with the bright exception of her mad scene in "Ophelia") it has been sadly deficient in performance.

MUSIC.

The close of the old year leaves, as usual, but little to be said of musical performances, most of which have been temporarily suspended in favour of pantomime and other entertainments appealing to holiday-makers. The last events of 1880 of any importance remaining for comment, and occurring too late for notice until now, were—Mr. Sims Reeves's Ballad Concert at St. James's Hall on Thursday week, and a performance of "The Messiah" by the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society last Monday evening. On the first-named occasion Madame Albani contributed to a varied programme, her share in which consisted of the Scena, "Sovvenir de' mici prim' anni," from the Italian version of Hérold's "Le Pré aux Clercs," Haydn's air "With verdure clad" (encored), the ballad, "The Blue Bells of Scotland;" and, in association with Mr. Sims Reeves, the duet "Ah! morir," from Verdi's "Ernani" (also encored). The eminent prima donna was enthusiastically received, as was the concert-giver, who sang, with his usual success, Blumenthal's "The Requital," Balfe's "Come into the garden, Maud," and Davy's sea-song, "The Bay of Biscay." Mr. Reeves's son, Mr. Herbert Reeves, was unable to appear, owing to a continuation of the illness which prevented him from singing at the Crystal Palace concert of last Saturday week. Miss M. McKenzie, Mr. Pyatt, and members of the London Vocal Union contributed to Mr. Sims Reeves's programme, as did Mr. Carrodus, who played a brilliant violin solo of his own, and the important obbligato accompaniment to Hérold's scena.

The performance at Albert Hall of "The Messiah" on Boxing Day, conducted by Mr. Barnby, calls for no specific comment. The solo singers were Miss Anna Williams, Madame Patey, Mr. W. H. Cummings, and Mr. Ludwig; and Dr. Stainer presided at the organ.

This (Saturday) afternoon Mr. John Boosey's London Ballad Concerts will be resumed. On Monday evening the Popular Concerts (also at St. James's Hall) will recommence, and the afternoon performances associated therewith will be continued on the following Saturday, in the evening of which day the performance of Berlioz's "Faust" music, directed by Mr. Charles Hallé, will be repeated. Mr. Carrodus will give a concert—at which he will play solos by various composers—on Jan. 20, at St. James's Hall, where, on the following evening, the third concert of the Sacred Harmonic Society's forty-ninth season will take place, the programme comprising Handel's "Coronation Anthem," "The King shall rejoice," Cherubini's "Requiem," and Mendelssohn's music to "Athalie."

On Jan. 25 Burns's birthday will be commemorated at St. James's Hall by a concert, at which Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Herbert Reeves, and other well-known vocalists are to sing. On the same evening a concert, also of a national character, is to be given at the Royal Albert Hall, Madame Christine Nilsson being announced to appear.

The Crystal Palace Saturday afternoon concerts will be resumed on Feb. 5; on the following Thursday the 143rd anniversary Festival of the Royal Society of Musicians will be held at St. James's Hall, the Duke of Connaught presiding. On the 24th of the month the Philharmonic Society will open its 69th season, again under the conductorship of Mr. Cusins, but with some change of directors, six concerts instead of eight being announced — and during February Mr. Sims Reeves will give four Ballad concerts—also at St. James's Hall—being the last concerts of the kind at which he will sing previous to his farewell tour. The Bach Choir, directed by Mr. Otto Goldschmidt, will give the first of two concerts on March 3, the second being fixed for April 6; on the 30th of which month Mr. W. Ganz's new series of orchestral concerts will begin; and during May and June nine grand concerts, directed by Herr Hans Richter, will be given, likewise at St. James's Hall. Of the arrangements of Mr. Gye and Mr. Mapleson for the spring and summer season, at the Royal Italian Opera and Her Majesty's Theatre, no particulars are yet known.

THE STATE OF IRELAND.

The prosecution by the Government of the leaders of the Irish Land League began on Tuesday in the Queen's Bench, Dublin. Lord Chief Justice May read a statement that, acting on the advice of friends, he meant not to preside, and upon his retirement the trial proceeded before Justices Fitzgerald and Barry. The preliminary proceedings, including the empanelling of a jury, occupied about two hours, and the remainder of the day was devoted to the opening speech of the Attorney-General, Mr. Law, Q.C. He said the traversers were charged with conspiring to prevent persons from paying rent, to incite tenants to resist the judgment of the Courts, and to reinstate evicted persons. He explained the law of conspiracy, and said it would be enough to show that the immediate object of the prisoners was mischievous. The only question for the jury would be, was there a combination among the traversers for an unlawful purpose; and he read passages from some of their speeches upon which he relied to prove the case for the Crown. On Wednesday the Attorney-General quoted extracts from speeches delivered by Mr. Dillon, M.P., Mr. Parnell, M.P., Mr. Gordon, Mr. Brennan, and other traversers, in which a resort to force was more or less plainly advocated. Many of the traversers, he hinted, found agitation profitable. The Land League had plenty of money, and its friends on the other side of the Atlantic allowed it to draw upon them to any extent. No doubt men like Mr. Brennan, who had been a clerk to a company, Mr. Boyton, the son of a publican, Mr. Gordon, a boot and shoe maker at Claremorris, Mr. O'Sullivan, who had been a schoolmaster, and Mr. Nally, who was nothing, had found the paid agency of the Land League a very profitable undertaking, and superior to their former occupations. The learned gentleman also said that the present prosecutions had been undertaken in order to put down an intolerable tyranny which overwhelmed by its power the poor as well as the rich. The Attorney-General had not concluded his address when the Court adjourned, at half-past three o'clock.

Dublin is described as like a town in military occupation, there is such a force of military and constabulary in the city.

The Irish members of Parliament held their usual meeting preliminary to the opening of Parliament in Dublin on Monday, the Lord Mayor presiding. Mr. Parnell was elected Chairman of the Party, and Mr. Justin M'Carthy Vice-Chairman; and the Parliamentary Committee was selected. Resolutions were passed to the following effect:—That union among the Irish members was so absolutely essential that a large discretion must be conferred on the Parliamentary Committee, to which the members present in effect pledged themselves to submit; that the Irish members should sit on the Opposition side of the House; that any attempt to pass a Coercion Bill should be resisted to the utmost by every means in their power; and that the Parliamentary Committee should be instructed to prepare an amendment upon the Address to the Crown praying that no ejectments might be enforced pending the consideration of the Land Bill. It was stated during the meeting that no English or Scotch bill would be allowed to be proceeded with until the arrears of Irish legislation had been wiped off.

A deputation representing the Corporation of Dublin waited upon Mr. Forster on Monday, urging the Government to introduce a bill to assimilate the franchises in Ireland to those in England. Mr. Forster said the Government intended the borough franchise should be made alike in the two countries. With regard to the county franchise, it would be as well not to meddle with it at present, as they were looking forward to a great change in the English county franchise and the Scotch county franchise, and perhaps the Irish franchise would be dealt with at the same time.

A riot took place in Dublin last Saturday night between some dragoons, artillery, and civilians. The former cursed "Parnell and the Land League;" the crowd threw stones, and the soldiers used their belts and whips. Eventually the police divided the combatants.

The reign of violence continues. Two policemen, while endeavouring to disperse a crowd in the city of Cork on Sunday morning, were fired upon with revolvers. One of them, named Manly, was struck in the thigh; he returned the fire with his revolver, and, it is believed, wounded one of his assailants. At Portadown on Friday night the house of a farmer named Berry, a tenant of Lord Lurgan, who had paid his rent in full, was burned to the ground and a large store of potatoes also destroyed. The outbuildings of his neighbour White, who had also paid his rent, were burned, together with a large quantity of hay. In the same district a man named Wortley, who had aided the police in their inquiries into agrarian outrages, was stabbed in the neck at the railway station. As a bailiff named Hill was returning to his home from Claremorris, on Thursday night, last week, he was set upon by four men, who knocked him down and severely beat him with sticks about the head and body. As the Rev. B. M. Boylan, C.C., was going on Sunday night from Inniskillen he was attacked by a party of men at Bromard and his horse stabbed. As the Hon. Mrs. Dunlop and her daughter were driving along their own avenue, in the neighbourhood of Monasterboice, in the county of Louth, on Saturday, they were fired at. Miss Dunlop jumped from the phaeton and chased the murderer, who took to flight. He escaped her; but she secured his gun, which he had been obliged to abandon. As the Rev. Canon Fleming, Protestant Rector of Ballinakill, in the county of Galway, was returning home on Sunday evening after performing Divine service in a distant part of the parish, and when within a quarter of a mile of his home, two shots were fired point-blank at him, the bullet from the first grazing his face, the second passing between him and his servant. These are a few of the many deeds of violence recorded.

Lady Lurgan, of the county of Cavan, has been "Boycotted." She was refused a car to convey her to Lord Headfort's house, where she was going to spend Christmas. The Daily News Special Commissioner in Ireland gives a series of Boycotting incidents. Mr. Nicholas Butler, J.P., who was one of the first landlords in the country to accept Griffith's valuation, has been Boycotted by the Crushen, County Clare, branch of the Land League, his offence being that, in consequence of the diminution of his income, he had discharged some of his domestic servants. We give an Illustration showing the Boycotting of a tradesman in County Mayo.

Subscriptions to the Boycott Relief Fund amount now to nearly £1490. Lord Claud Hamilton has consented to act as chairman. Among recent contributors are the Duke of Abercorn and the Dean of Llandaff.

The "Defence Fund" which was opened by the Freeman's Journal is now closed, over £8000 having been received. The Land League, however, say that they will require £20,000 and continue to levy contributions.

In view of the action taken by the Land League, the Emergency Committee of the Orange lodges in Ireland have issued a series of instructions to the district masters, directing them how to afford protection and aid to persons who are being persecuted, or are prevented by intimidation or threats from carrying out their legal liabilities by reason of the emissaries of the same organisation.

Replying to a memorial signed by upwards of 700 of the magisterial executive of Ireland, drawing attention to the alarming condition of the country, Mr. Gladstone has written a brief note to the effect that the attention of Parliament will be called to the subject next week.

DEPARTURE OF SCOTS GUARDS FOR IRELAND.

Her Majesty's Government have lately thought it needful to send large military reinforcements to uphold the administration of the law in Ireland, which has been so greatly prejudiced and obstructed by the Land League agitation. On Monday last week, in the evening, the 1st Battalion of Scots Guards left London for Dublin by way of Holyhead. Their departure had only been ordered three or four days, and it was with the utmost difficulty that the men, some of whom were on leave in the northerly parts of Scotland, could be got together. But all hastened to the rendezvous on being called in. At Wellington Barracks head-quarters there were eight companies, and two at Kensington; but, the battalion not being up to strength, volunteers were ordered from the 2nd Battalion at Windsor. These had been expected for head-quarters, viâ the South-Western Railway, but the order was countermanded on the Sunday evening. The advance party left Wellington Barracks, St. James's Park, on the Sunday evening, marching to the Euston-square station of the London and North-Western Railway. The remainder of the battalion, on the Monday evening, marched out of barracks to the Victoria Station, and were conveyed, by the West London Railway, from Clapham Junction to Willesden, where they got upon the London and North-Western line. They mustered 671 rank and file, with thirty officers. The men, in heavy marching order, paraded at Wellington Barracks at half-past four, and were inspected by their commandant. Headed by the band of the Coldstream Guards, they marched to Victoria Station, where an immense crowd assembled and cheered the troops. They took their places in two trains of the London and North-Western Company, the first of which started at three minutes past six, and the second ten minutes later, the band playing "God Save the Queen" and the men cheering lustily. An Illustration of the departure of the Scots Guards will be found in this Number of our Journal.——A company of the Royal Engineers has left Aldershott for Ireland.

CROWNING THE HERO.

"A Seasonable Compliment," indeed, when the gallant Major has come home from the recent campaigns in Afghanistan, with his share of military honour for good service in the field, is the graceful act of these young ladies at the Christmas party, where he appears a very gentlemanly "Lion." The old song—a classic English Ode, set to fine music in the old fighting and singing days—proclaims it as a maxim for all time, that "None but the brave deserve the fair." We suppose it may still be the personal opinion of many of the fair sex, even in this country, that all officers of the Army and Navy, being ex officio brave—to whom should be added the Militia and Volunteers—are entitled, man for man, to a larger share of feminine regard than their brothers in the civil professions. Ladies will think as they please upon this and every other question; and few sensible men, who do not happen to wear the Queen's uniform, will entertain the slightest jealousy of those social attentions which are commonly bestowed on those who do. Whatever may be said of French or Prussian military officers, and their frequent assumption of personal superiority to other classes of their fellow-countrymen, we seldom or never meet with an Englishman, of any commissioned rank in the Army, whose behaviour shows any disposition to claim an undue degree of importance in society upon this account. In general, they bear so modestly the distinctions which they have so fairly earned in the public service, and which were never more fully appreciated than at the present time, that nobody would or could be inclined to grudge a newly-promoted V.C. or C.B., or one who has simply been "mentioned in despatches," such an agreeable private token of esteem as we see here conferred upon the hero of a drawing-room reception.

THE COURT.

The Royal family party who joined her Majesty and Princess Beatrice at Osborne for the Christmas included Princess Louise of Lorne, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, and Prince Leopold.

The Duke of Connaught went to Aldershott on Thursday week and inspected the first battalion of the 60th Rifles previous to their departure for Ireland this day, returning in the evening to Osborne.

On Christmas Eve the Queen distributed gifts to the old labourers and their wives on the Osborne estate and to the children attending Whippingham School. Her Majesty, accompanied by Princess Beatrice and the Duchess of Connaught, entered the Servants' Hall, where the ladies and gentlemen of the Household were assembled, shortly after four o'clock, and, assisted by the Princesses, handed the gifts to each recipient. A Christmas-tree was prepared for the children. The Rev. Canon and Mrs. Prothero and their family and Lady Cowell and family were invited to be present.

The Queen, Princess Louise, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, and Princess Beatrice attended Divine service at Whippingham church on Christmas Day, the Rev. Canon Prothero officiating.

Divine service was performed on Sunday at Osborne by Canon Prothero, at which all the Royal family were present.

Colonel Barry Drew, commanding the troops at Parkhurst, and Colonel G. Maude joined the Royal dinner circle on Monday.

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught left Osborne on Tuesday. The Queen, with Princess Louise, paid a visit to the Hon. Lady Ponsonby.

Her Majesty was represented at the funeral of the Duchess of Westminster by Lord Alfred Paget, who placed a wreath on the coffin, sent by the Queen. The Prince of Wales and Prince Christian joined the funeral procession, as also the representatives of the Duke of Edinburgh, Princess Louise of Lorne, and Prince Leopold, all bearing floral tributes.

The Dowager Marchioness of Ely has succeeded Lady Waterpark as Lady-in-Waiting, and the Hon. Evelyn Paget has arrived as Maid of Honour in Waiting to her Majesty. Colonel Maude has left Osborne.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince of Wales, after attending the funeral of the Duchess of Westminster, proceeded to Sandringham, the Princess and her daughters having previously arrived from town. Their Royal Highnesses were present on Christmas Eve at the annual distribution of Christmas cheer to all the cottagers on the Royal estate. On Christmas morning the Prince and Princesses Louise, Victoria, and Maud attended Divine service at St. Mary Magdalene's Church in the park, which was tastefully decorated, the Rev. F. Hervey, M.A., Rector of Sandringham (with Babingley and West Newton) officiating. In the afternoon their Royal Highnesses went to the service at West Newton church, when the Rev. Theodore Callipharonas, Curate of the parish, officiated; and on Sunday the Royal family were present at Sandringham church, the Rev. F. Hervey performing the service. The Prince and Princess have been entertaining a large party during the week. The Duke and Duchess of Connaught and Prince Christian arrived at Sandringham on Tuesday.

The Duke of Edinburgh arrived at Government House, Portsmouth, on a visit to Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar (General Commanding the Southern District) and Countess Dornberg. The Duke has been making an inspection of the coastguard.

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught went to the Criterion Theatre a few evenings since, and the Duchess has been to see the American Midgets at Piccadilly Hall. Their Royal Highnesses will go on a visit to Lord and Lady Alington at Crichel House next Monday. The Duke has consented to act as president of the council interested in establishing coffee taverns for the Army and Auxiliary Forces.

Princess Christian on Wednesday opened a new Cottage Hospital at Englefield-green, near Egham, on the confines of Windsor Park. The building has cost £2500, the money being raised by subscription. The Bishop of Winchester and the Rev. Mr. Nicholson, Vicar of Egham, officiated.

Prince Leopold was present at the marriage of Mr. Arnold Royle, Surgeon in Ordinary to his Royal Highness, to Cicely Jane Longueville (second daughter of Mr. Thomas Snow, barrister-at-law, Liverpool), which took place at St. James's, Piccadilly, on the 20th ult. The Rev. Canon Duckworth, assisted by the Rev. John E. Kempe, performed the ceremony. The Prince proposed the bride's health at the breakfast at the Alexandra Hotel. The newly married pair left for the Continent. The presents included a pair of silver candlesticks from the Prince and Princess of Wales, a diamond and ruby bracelet from Prince Leopold, silver salt-cellars from the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, and a pair of silver candlesticks from Princess Louise of Lorne. Prince Leopold has promised to preside at the annual festival dinner in aid of the funds of University College Hospital, on May 20 next, at Willis's Rooms.

CLOSE OF THE RECESS.

The Parliamentary Recess is virtually over. With the advent of the New Year (in which the world is to "come to an end"—according to the alleged prophecy of Mother Shipton), the holidays have practically ceased for our legislators, some of whom may be seen diligently gathering in a final store of recreation while they may, in sitting out the Christmas pantomimes. Lord Hartington, to wit, was on Boxing Night recognised in a private box at Drury Lane, absorbed in the fun of "Mother Goose." Mr. Childers was the only other Cabinet Minister detained in town at Christmas, the rising of the Boers in the Transvaal calling for important consultations between the Secretary for War and the Duke of Cambridge, Sir Garnet Wolseley, and Sir John Adye.

The Prime Minister (who left Hawarden for Downing-street on Wednesday) will be seventy-one when he meets Parliament on Thursday next, Mr. Gladstone having been born in Liverpool on Dec. 29, 1809; and the Earl of Beaconsfield will be seventy-five, Benjamin Disraeli having been born on Dec. 21, 1805. As leaders of the Liberal and Conservative Parties, Mr. Gladstone and Lord Beaconsfield will give the usual ceremonial dinners to their principal colleagues on the eve of the assembling of Parliament; and Earl Granville and Sir Stafford Northcote will follow the examples of their political chiefs.

The Ministry has seen few changes. The place of Mr. Adam (who resigned the office of First Commissioner of Works to be Governor of Madras) has been taken by Mr. Shaw-Lefevre, who will probably have much to do with the Ministerial land measure for Ireland. The studiously independent and critical position Mr. Leonard Courtney has taken up recently with regard to Mr. Gladstone's Government rather favoured the notion that the hon. member for Liskeard was fishing for office, and that it was not at all improbable he would accept the office of Under-Secretary for the Home Department in place of Mr. A. W. Peel, who resigned through ill-health. It will not be forgotten that Mr. Gladstone's appreciation of the merits of Mr. Lowe and Sir William Harcourt was undoubtedly quickened by the flank fire they used not to be averse to pouring into former Liberal Administrations.

The Earl of Carnarvon's Christmas Box to Mr. John Bright in the shape, so to speak, of a case of Madeira, laden with acid animadversions against the right hon. gentleman's latest speech on Ireland, and in answer to the energetic language he used towards monarchs and the House of Lords, was responded to by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on Christmas Day in a characteristic note, the gist of which was that Mr. Bright was content to leave his speech and Lord Carnarvon's letter "to the judgment of the public."

Among the large number of illustrated books issued this Christmas is a new edition of "The Pilgrim's Progress," profusely illustrated with wood engravings drawn by W. Gunston and engraved by R. Paterson. It is called the Elstow Edition, and each copy is bound in a portion of oak wood taken from Elstow church before its restoration. The paper and printing are excellent, and the whole get-up of the book is as good as it is novel. Bunyan's well-known allegory is preceded by a carefully written memoir and bibliographical notes.

A meeting of the Devon and Somerset Stag Hunt was recently held at Taunton, under the presidency of Lord Poltimore, to consider the future of the hunt, Mr. Fenwick Bissett, M.P., having resigned on account of pressure of his Parliamentary duties. A vote of regret at Mr. Bissett's retirement was adopted, and then Lord Poltimore proposed, and Mr. Granville Somerset seconded, that Viscount Ebrington be appointed master, the subscribers guaranteeing £1300 a year for two years. This was unanimously carried, and Lord Ebrington accepted the mastership. Mr. Bissett expressed great confidence in the future of the hunt.

On the recommendation of the Prime Minister and Secretary of State for War, the Queen has awarded the Albert Medal for saving life to Surgeon Henry Grier, of the Army Medical Department, for his gallant conduct in endeavouring to save the life of the late Lieutenant Graham, second battalion 10th Regiment, stationed at Malta. Mr. Graham was suffering from diphtheria in the most virulent form, and had undergone the operation of tracheotomy for relief of some of the most urgent symptoms; the tube became blocked, and suffocation was imminent, when other efforts having failed, Mr. Grier, at imminent risk, sucked the poisonous matter and diphtheritic membrane from the wound, and succeeded in restoring the life of his patient. Mr. Graham unhappily succumbed a day or two afterwards from exhaustion and extension of the disease.

HOME NEWS.

An Aberdeenshire farmer has been fined £25 under the new Inland Revenue Act for having brewed beer without having a license to do so.

Mr. Loftus Thomas Monro, M.A., late Scholar of Queen's College, Cambridge, has been appointed one of her Majesty's Inspectors of Schools.

Two servant girls have been fined a shilling and costs, at the Hammersmith Police Court, for wheeling perambulators abreast along the pavement in High-street, Kensington.

Mr. John Walter, M.P., presided at a meeting at Reading in connection with the Abbey Institute last week, and Mrs. Walter afterwards distributed the prizes to the successful competitors in the several educational classes.

Lady Burdett-Coutts distributed certificates last week to those students of the Haberdashers' Schools who during the year had successfully competed for and obtained prizes, which amounted in the aggregate to £360.

It is stated that the Government will recognise the Fisheries Exhibition which is to be held in St. Andrew's Hall, Norwich, in April, by the presentation of gold and silver medals as rewards of merit.

At the election of Common Councilmen for the City of London which took place last week, out of the twenty-five wards there were contests in only four—Farringdon Without, Farringdon Within, Castle Baynard, and Portsoken.

A statement issued by the Board of Trade of the services rendered by the life-saving (rocket) apparatus on the coasts of the United Kingdom during the gales of Oct. 27 to 30, 1880, represents the total number of lives saved as 264.

The Schliemann collection of Trojan antiquities, which has been lent for the last two years by Dr. Schliemann for exhibition in the South Kensington Museum, will be removed after the Christmas holidays.

Under the auspices of the Scottish Food-Reform Society a vegetarian Christmas supper was held in Glasgow on Monday night. There was a good attendance. Mr. D. Fortune, president of the society, occupied the chair.

At the last rent audit of the Duke of Buckingham, a remission of 10 per cent was given to the whole of the tenants. The same remission has been made by Mr. Crawshay Baily and Sir Charles Du Cane; Mr. Leopold de Rothschild remitting 15 per cent of his tenants' rents for the last half-year.

The annual dinner in connection with the Commercial Travellers' Schools at Pinner took place on Thursday week evening at the Freemasons' Tavern, Mr. J. Scott presiding. Subscriptions amounting to close upon four thousand pounds were announced.

Serious floods took place last week in various parts of England and Scotland, owing to continuous rains and the melting of the snows. There has been a great snowstorm in the north of Scotland, seriously interfering with communication by rail and road.

The late Mr. John Frederick Stanford, barrister-at-law, of Regent's Park, has left to the National Life-Boat Institution £5000 for the purpose of placing and maintaining a life-boat on the coast, "as a memorial in honour of his late mother, the life-boat being named, after her, the Mary Stanford."

The usual ceremony in connection with Christmas Day took place at Queen's College, Oxford. The boar's head was carried into the dining-hall in procession, the choir singing the ancient "Boar's Head Song." The head, a magnificent specimen, weighed upwards of 80 lb.

The arrivals of live stock and fresh meat from the United States and Canada landed at Liverpool last week show an increase on those of the preceding week; making a total of 901 cattle, 262 sheep, 7893 quarters of beef, 643 carcases of mutton, and 299 pigs.

According to the Citizen, seventy-eight of the eighty-nine Livery Companies of the City are in possession of over 1000 trusts, representing a capital of half a million of money, or an income of nearly £190,000 a year. Considerably more than half this sum is spent in pensions and special gifts of money, coal, food, and clothing.

The Marquis of Bute has announced his intention to present to the Cardiff Infirmary Committee the freehold of the site o the old Longcross Barracks, which cover an area of about four acres, in order to assist them in their task of erecting a new hospital on an enlarged scale. His Lordship also gives £1000 towards the building fund.

Dr. Vaughan, the Dean of Llandaff, presided at the annual distribution of prizes to the students of King's College School last week. In the course of the proceedings a testimonial was presented to the Rev. Dr. Maclear, the late Master of the school, who retired last July, on being appointed Warden of St. Augustine's College, Canterbury.

At a public meeting recently held at Dundee, Dr. John Lloyd Baxter intimated that he was in a position, with munificent assistance he had received, to place one hundred and twenty-five thousand pounds at the head of a subscription list for the establishment in Dundee of a college similiar to Owens College, Manchester.

The Dundee Town Council having had under consideration the plans and bill for the new Tay Bridge, have decided to recommend Parliament to make the height of the bridge 40 ft. above high water level instead of 77 ft., as proposed in the Bill, and to take steps to secure the co-operation of the burghs interested in seeing that the new structure is a thoroughly substantial one.

Sir Hardinge Giffard, on laying the memorial-stone of the new municipal buildings at Launceston last week, said, referring to municipal institutions, that they were in a state of growth in this country—a growth which he hoped would continue, as each little institution in turn contributed its quota to that great one of self-government which lay at the foundation of their Anglo-Saxon character.

The London School Board has adopted a report which recommends various changes in the scheme for the future management of Christ's Hospital. A letter from the clerk to the Clothworkers' Company announces that in connection with Hitchin's Charity five exhibitions for girls, of the average value of £30, are at the immediate disposal of the board.

Mr. Talbot, M.P., Lord Lieutenant of Glamorganshire, has subscribed £100 to the fund in aid of the widows and orphans of the men who perished in the Pen-y-graig colliery explosion. Over £400 has been subscribed already. A concert in furtherance of the same object is to be held this month in London in which leading artistes will take a part.

About five months ago the shipbuilders on the Clyde, wishing to recognise the advantages accruing to their business from the skill and ingenuity of their employés, instituted a scheme of reward for all subsequent inventions or improvements introduced by the workmen which should commend themselves to the committee of investigation appointed by the firms. The first report of the committee has just been issued, which states that seven claims have been successful.

At a meeting of the Master and Fellows of Trinity Hall, Cambridge, held on Tuesday, Mr. Alfred William Winterslow Dale was elected a Fellow of the College. Mr. Dale was a scholar of Trinity Hall, Chancellor's English Medallist in 1876 and 1878, and was eighth in the Classical Tripos of 1879. At the same meeting Mr Thomas Thorneley was appointed Lecturer in Moral Science and Historical Studies. Mr. L. Crosskey, and Mr. R. F. Macmillan, were elected to law studentships. The Cressingham Prize for an English essay was awarded to George L. Stephens, scholar of the college.

The following, in order of merit, are declared by the Civil Service Commissioners to be the successful candidates at the examination held in November and December, 1880, for admission to the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich:—John Mitchell Holms, George Alexander Swinton Stone, Charles Edward Baynes, Herbert Vaughan Kent, William Baker Brown, Charles Frederick Lendy, Thomas Reed Davys Bell, Burdett Edward Moreny, John Wallace Pringle, Eyre Houston, Christopher George Oldfield, Thomas Francis Bruce Remy-Tailyour, James Robert Beza Serjeant, Percy John Gay Wakefield, Walter Henry Robinson, Frederic William Starkey Stanton, Herman Bonham-Carter, Charles Frederick Mould, Rion Philip Benson, William Alleyne Macbean, Edward Dashwood Haggitt, Montagu Wynyard Sabine-Pasley, Ralph Broughton, Malcolm Sydenham Clarke Campbell, William Arthur Persse, James Berkley, Francis Richard Drake, Arthur Fox Pullen, Walter Alfred John O'Meara, Henry Minchin Ferrar, Oswald Charles Williamson, Algernon H. E. Goff, Morland Stanhope Eyre, Cortlandt Gordon Mackenzie, Francis Arthur Randolph, Richard William Brecks, Henry Hadley, Henry Rex Cook, Charles Stuart Rose, John Claude Thorp.

The Royal Victoria Coffee Music-Hall Tavern, formerly the Royal Victoria Theatre, was opened last week by Mr. Ernest Hart. This is the initial step of the enterprise of the Coffee Music-Halls Company (Limited). The hall was opened for entertainments on Boxing Day. Mr. Ernest Hart, speaking on behalf of the directors, said their object in taking a lease of the Victoria Theatre and laying out a very large sum of money in adding the tavern to the theatre, was to provide for the working men, and their wives, daughters, and families, a place of pleasant, healthy, and sound recreation. Mr. A. Milner remarked that the tavern had been fitted up in a manner more complete and sumptuous than could have otherwise been possible by the munificence of one of the sympathisers of the coffee tavern movement, Mrs. Montefiore, who had contributed £1000 towards the tavern, in memory of her eldest son, Mr. Leonard Montefiore, who died some fifteen months back in a foreign land.—The Lord Mayor has subscribed ten guineas towards the formation of army coffee taverns, and has expressed his warmest approbation of the scheme. The Duke of Connaught has consented to serve as President of the Army Coffee Taverns Council.

SOME HOLIDAY ENTERTAINMENTS.

"Queen Victoria's own Theatre"—as Mrs. Brown used unctuously to call the popular transpontine playhouse—presented a bright and handsome appearance when it was thrown open for the first time on the afternoon of Boxing Day as the Royal Victoria Coffee Music-Hall. To judge from the hilarity and good humour of the large audience present, the inauguration of the Coffee Music-Hall Company's enterprise was distinctly successful. Lively music was discoursed by an efficient band; the committee of ladies and gentlemen who promoted the undertaking beamed satisfaction from private boxes—and were lynx-eyed in their vigilance to check any undue shortcomings of the lady vocalists; Mr. Howard Paul poked light satirical fun in his own happy manner at the follies of the day; "Jolly Nash" and Mr. Arthur Lloyd kept the house in a roar of laughter; Miss Somers sang sentimental ballads with a sweetness and good taste that elicited prompt applause; and the grotesque choregraphic and musical performances of the remarkably clever Harlow Brothers were so warmly appreciated as to give the manager, Mr. Bullock, the keynote to the kind of entertainment the Royal Victoria Coffee Music-Hall must continue to provide if the unquestionable success of the opening day is to be continued.

Sanger's—a household word in many an out-of-the-way village which relies mainly for its recreation on Sanger's travelling circus—offers to holiday folk, in the spacious theatre long known as Astley's, a zoological pantomime of much spectacular splendour, preceded by equestrian and acrobatic scenes in the circle, in which Little Sandy carries off the honours as Clown, and also by the hippic drama of "Mazeppa!" Enough to satisfy the veriest gourmand at amusements! The resources of Sanger's are seen to greatest advantage in the culminating scene in "St. George and the Dragon and the Seven Champions," written by Mr. H. Spry. This is the scene of combat—a magnificent pageant, of which the specialty is the procession of brightly-caparisoned horses, camels, elephants, and dromedaries. Sanger's also boasts this year of a novelty in a "Blondin Elephant."

The Moore and Burgess Minstrels, reverting to the large St. James's Hall for the Christmas holidays, well sustain their reputation for melodious minstrelsy, and for rollicking fun and burlesque. This is the thirteenth Christmas they have performed under the same roof. Large audiences bore willing testimony on Boxing Day to the fact that what is familiarly called the "go" of Mr. Moore is kept up with undiminished vigour, and that the popular "bones" of the Moore and Burgess Minstrels are clothed with plenty of flesh and animated by an abundance of healthy blood. The unflagging spirits of Mr. Moore stimulate his merry band, which has been strengthened by several recruits, among whom should be mentioned Mr. Curtis D'Alton and Mr. C. Wilson, whose songs were received with much favour. The Moore and Burgess Minstrels are seen at their liveliest in their diverting musical eccentricity, "Around the World in Eighty Seconds," abounding with national songs, rendered with marked effect.

Another capital company of Ethiopian serenaders, the Mohawk Minstrels, have put forth an amusing holiday programme, which will yield amusement to many visitors drawn to the Agricultural Hall by the varied collection of shows and ménageries to which the name of "The World's Fair" is given.

The natural humour of Mr. F. C. Burnand has again provided the German Reeds with an attractive holiday piece in "Sandford and Merton's Christmas Party;" and the delightful Drawing-Room entertainment at St. George's Hall has been rendered further seasonable by "A Merry Christmas," and by Mr. Corney Grain's refined fun in "A Musical Family."

The fifth annual dramatic entertainment of the London and Westminster Amateurs was held at St. George's Hall last week, when the "School for Scandal" was well performed, the characters being maintained with care, and, in some cases, with great effect.

SUBSIDENCE OF THE EARTH AT THE CHESHIRE SALT-MINES.

We give a few Illustrations of the remarkable disturbances in the surface of the land near Northwich that have recently taken place. Platt's Hill rock-salt mine, fifty acres in extent, is submerged, and can never again be worked as a rock-salt mine. Fears are entertained that several other rock-salt mines in the neighbourhood will be inundated, and a careful watch is being kept. Another great chasm has opened across the roadway close to Messrs. N. Ashton and Son's salt-works, and within the area in which the principal part of the disturbance has taken place. The roar caused by the sudden collapse of the ground was heard at a considerable distance. The new opening is a precipitous goblet-shaped chasm about fifty feet in depth. The whole of the neighbouring ground is cracked and shows signs of tumbling into the opening. Great rifts and clearings and the bodily dropping of the surface by slips make it appear as if an earthquake had occurred, accompanied by volcanic action, the surface being loaded with mud from the geyser-like action before subsidence. Should the flooding extend to Messrs. Fletcher's mine, which is said to be the largest in the world, very serious consequences would ensue, as this mine extends a very great distance under extremely populous districts surrounding Northwich. The subterranean effects of the great engulfment of surface waters which has taken place may be estimated by the fact that the neighbouring brine beds have had their levels raised 76 yards. The catastrophe is already of large dimensions, and must be productive of great losses; but the apprehensions it has created in the neighbourhood are, if possible, worse, as the sinking of the buildings, which is always going on more or less in Northwich, must be dangerously accelerated.

The Sketches shown in our page of Engravings were taken by our own Artist at the Witton and Dunkirk Salt-works of Messrs. N. Ashton and Sons, and at the Platt's Hill Salt-works of Mr. John Thompson. Witton is the name of the largest quarter of Northwich, and Dunkirk is a part of Witton. The chimney fell at the Dunkirk Works; and the cottage, which was inhabited by a man named Tomkinson, is also situated at Dunkirk.

The weather did not prove favourable for outdoor recreation on Boxing Day, frost, fog, and rain having alternated during the day. The places of amusement were, in consequence, more crowded than usual. Over 35,000 were admitted to the Crystal Palace, 20,000 to the Alexandra Palace, 21,000 to the South Kensington Museum, and 9367 to the Zoological Society's Gardens.

PEOPLE I HAVE MET.

No. XV.—THE RECTOR.

His style and title was the Reverend David Guy, Rector of Muchmore-cum-Pluribus, in Berkshire. It was at his parsonage in that lovely southern county that I spent one of the pleasantest months of my life. The time was July and August; and I, having, like most of my fellows, idled away the summer term at Oxford, meant to make up for wasted hours in the Long Vacation. So I readily accepted an invitation from Guy (my father's friend) to come and look him up. There, thought I, I shall be quiet. I was very young then—hopeful nineteen—or I might have guessed that three pretty girls, all marriageable, do not conduce to that serene frame of mind best befitting the serious study of the Ethics and the Republic.

Guy was about fifty-five, of the right sort of height, with thin greyish hair, and sandy whiskers turning to grey. Of a rather flabby face and peaked nose. They used to call him "Snipe" at Eton, where, by-the-way, he had been flogged twenty-three times, being second in flagellatory honours to none of his contemporaries, excepting Mr. (afterwards the Duke of) Beresford. After dinner, over a glass of fine old Madeira, when the ladies had retired, he loved to recount the story of his floggings; and succeeded in leaving on his hearers the impression that he richly merited twenty-two of them at the least.

What a capital fellow he was! And how utterly unlike the popular conception of a country parson! He had travelled in all sorts of places and seen all sorts of things; had even gambled at Crockford's as a young man; took in the Fortnightly, and had dipped into Rénan; respected Catholics as "gentlemen," but spoke of a Baptist minister "as my dear old friend Dewsbury." There was no narrowness, no bigotry, about him; and, possibly, there were no very deep convictions. He never talked Theology, unless you started the subject, when he was ready enough to examine it from a philosophic point of view; always provided you had the tact to look respectful—to show that your doubts were honest, and to hint that you rather wanted to be convinced towards his way of thinking. For, whatever might have been his own innermost thoughts, he never quite forgot that he was an officer in the spiritual army. The cause might or might not commend itself to him, but he had taken the Church's pay, and felt bound to fight the Church's battle. In a word, he was animated by professional spirit, if not by zeal, for the saving of souls. Honour, rather than religion, was his guiding principle. He would have utterly disliked being burnt for the Filioque; but then he would have been almost equally averse from taking mean advantage of a polemical foe, and could scarcely have been induced to say hard things to a knave, or even to a fool.

This happy disposition made him pleasant at Quarter Sessions and Vestry meetings; it kept him out of unseemly discussions with his churchwardens. He had that conciliatory way of getting over difficulties which is as oil on troubled waters, and is so essential to a clergyman's dignity. He was on good terms even with the Doctor, a follower of Joanna Southcote, and with the Solicitor, who was electioneering agent for the Whigs. He even managed to please the Squire's wife, who considered herself patroness of religious things in general; so that it was really an improving sight to mark the honest pastor come out of church when sermon was over and greet his parishioners without an unkind or bitter thought for any one of them.

"After dinner, over a glass of fine old Madeira, when the ladies had retired, he loved to recount the story of his floggings."

"Not long since we were at a dinner party in Paris; he on the right of a stanch Republican. Before the soup had been dispatched, he hastened to assure his fair neighbour that the Empire was the best Government for France."

In the old days, when priests were forbidden to marry, a man of such polished manners, such winning words, and such clear-headed ways of thought would have risen high in Church and State—have been a Bishop and Lord Privy Seal, maybe, and a King's confidential Minister. But David Guy was born in a common-place age, and freighted with a wife and eight children—four sons and four daughters. He had, therefore, completed half a century of existence before his friend the Tory Chancellor appointed him to the first good living he ever obtained—a snug berth—£1050 a year, as the Clerical Directory put it, with glebe house and a population of only 457. The meaning of a living of this sort is that it happens to be one of the few rescued from Henry VIII.'s courtiers. That excellent Monarch loved to assign the tithes of a parish to any dependant who might happen to be in temporary difficulties. The layman consequently became Rector and drew the rectorial tithes, while a poor Curate was named his Vicar, charged to perform his routine duties and endowed with the vicarial tithes only. Muchmore, however, had always remained under Clerical Rectors; and so Guy received both Rectorial and Vicarial tithes, to his great comfort. Only, as is too often the case, fortune came to him a little late. He had to keep one son at Oxford; another, who was qualifying to become a tea-merchant, in London; and two more at Cheltenham. Then he was bound to dress his daughters, at least the three eldest, in some sort of style; and to dispense quite as much hospitality as he could afford on their behalf. To crown all, he must needs invest a few hundreds he had saved in the Washowaigh Mining Company (Limited). "Yes, do you know," he would say, "I never could understand that term limited liability. Ever since the Washowaigh came to grief, they have been making periodical 'calls' on me. The first two or three times I went to my lawyers about it. Blush and Dolittle—that's the name of the firm. Blush always ended by saying 'You'd better let me settle that,' which I found meant I was to pay, without even a protest. So I left off calling on Blush, who, as you may imagine, did not forget me. About the time his bill came in I heard he had expressed 'the deepest sympathy for Mr. Guy' to a friend. I suppose he meant well."

The conversation then turned on the subject of commercial morality. Guy had been Rector of a metropolitan parish, and had again and again been sent for to Newgate by respectable persons who had imperfectly studied the laws of their country. One of the first things a fraudulent director would do after his arrest would be to give the clergyman of his parish as a reference. It mattered not that he had never seen him and had never been to church. The thing looked well, and the poor detected rogue had a vague idea that the parson might in some mysterious way interfere in his behalf. Of course Guy could do little or nothing for them. "Had any of them ever seemed touched by grace at such moments?" I asked, as the decanter became lower and lower. "Not one. And I never talked religion to them. Had they spoken to me it would have been another matter." Whether Guy was right, or whether it be better to speak in season and out of season, I leave others to decide. Perhaps Guy was too much of a gentleman to make a good priest, who must be something higher than a gentleman. Very likely Demas had more savoir vivre than St. Paul, whom he forsook.

And yet Guy should have seen enough of the things of this world to despise them, seeing that to him at least they had hardly proved discountable. He was once parson at Wheatlands, where by immemorial usage the Lord of the Manor paid £100 a year as his share of tithes. An exception, however, had crept in. If the Lord happened to be "a Royalty," he was exempt from tithes, as being better able to pay them than most men. When the Princess Bona was assigned Wheatlands as a residence, she sent for Guy and gave him a cheque for £50, adding that she should repeat the donation annually. Her Royal Highness was careful to impress upon Guy that this was a gift, and not the payment of a due. She might have given the full amount, and more graciously. Still, she made some attempt to square generosity and justice. Her successor was Prince Augustus of Klein-Pfennig, who occupied the most exalted position in the empire next to the Sovereign. His Serenity had long observed a discreet silence on the subject of tithes, when Guy, nothing daunted, wrote to ask him if he meant to follow the precedent laid down by the Princess Bona. The Prince replied that he was very sorry, but could afford nothing. Guy applied to a friend at Court, who answered, "Ask for £25." But the smaller sum was likewise refused. Augustus had everything found him by the nation, plus £30,000 a year pocket-money. The Incumbent, £300 a year, with his own tea and sugar to buy.

Did Guy turn Radical? Not a bit of it. He posted 800 miles from the Continent in '74 to vote for a Tory candidate, and went nearly wild with joy at the results of the General Election. Not that there is any particular merit in his conduct: the fact is, he has no influential friends among the Whigs; and, if he had, ratting would appear to him "bad form." But his opinion of the Serene Family is a poor one. Nor does he think much of the Earl of Beaconsfield himself. He greatly admires the Duke of Richmond and Lord John Manners. These are questions of taste into which it is useless to inquire.

One curious intellectual defect has the Rev. David Guy. He knows nothing of any nation but his own, and judges all political and social institutions by a rigid English standard. It is to no purpose that he has travelled in France, Italy, Germany, Russia. His French is slight in quantity and execrable in quality. Not long since we were at a dinner party in Paris; he sitting on the right of a stanch Republican. Guy, wishing to make himself agreeable, hastened, before the soup had been dispatched, to give his fair neighbour an exposition of his views on the situation in France. "Je crois," he began, plunging straight in medias res, "que le plus bon gouvernement pour la France est l'Empire. Je ne crois pas que vous pouvez avoir une République dans votre pays. . . . Napoléon, il était notre allié—vous savez." The lady smiled and assented, hoping, perhaps, he would soon have done. But he speedily returned to the charge; till, by a superhuman feat of gymnastics, I managed to tread on his gouty toe. The admonition proved effectual; and when I explained to him afterwards, he was unfeignedly sorry for the blunder he had committed. It was not his fault, unless crass ignorance is to be accounted such. To this day I doubt whether he understands that M. Gambetta is not a Communist; and feel certain that if admitted to an audience of the Empress Eugénie he would take the first opportunity of singing Prince Napoleon's praises in her presence.

The truth is, that wherever he has travelled he has met Englishmen, and lived amongst them, as patriotic tourists can, in every climate under the sun. Hence, in his wanderings, he has seen foreign churches and palaces, but not foreign men and women. The Rhine and the Iron Gates, but not Germans and Hungarians. Since we English all turned rovers, we have deprived travelling of half its enlightening effects as far as we ourselves are concerned.

I must add that David was what the French call "a good child"—good-natured to a fault, if that can be. He was very kind to Mrs. Guy, and so had come to like her pretty well; yet I knew she had compelled him to marry her. She had been the daughter of a clergyman to whom David was curate. Miss Sickler, from whom Heaven had removed the temptations incidental to beauty, set her cap at a handsome Cornet of dragoons, who was so bored that he exchanged into a regiment ordered to India. Then Miss fell ill, but recovered just in time to hear that David had got a living, and was to leave next week. She declared it was heartless of him—the one man she had ever loved. On that hint spoke an astute mother, and poor David capitulated without striking a blow. "Afraid to say no." These four words form the key-note to many a life.

BURKE'S PEERAGE AND BARONETAGE FOR 1881.

Sir Bernard Burke's work has become quite an institution of the country. One can hardly imagine how the English world could get on without it. For our own part, as each year passes by, it enables us, as brief chroniclers of the times, to keep up the sequence of events among the higher classes; and in no year, for a full half century, have so many changes occurred in the Peerage and Baronetage as in 1880. In glancing through this portly volume, we find the Peerage Roll has been increased by fourteen dignities. Of these, three are the promotions of Lord Skelmersdale to the Earldom of Lathom, and of Lords Lytton and Sondes to Earldoms of the same names as their Baronies. The Lord Advocate of Scotland, succeeding Lord Gordon as the Lord of Appeal in Ordinary, becomes, ipso facto, Lord Watson, a Peer for life; and the following commoners have been raised to the Peerage by Patent:—Mr. Robert Lowe as Viscount Sherbrooke, Sir Arthur Guinness, Bart., as Baron Ardilaun; Mrs. Cavendish-Bentinck as Baroness Bolsover; Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen as Baron Brabourne; Mr. Abney Hastings as Baron Donington; Sir Lawrence Palk, Bart., as Baron Haldon; Mr. Baillie-Cochrane as Baron Lamington; Mr. Cowper-Temple as Lord Mount-Temple; Mr. Montagu Corry as Baron Rowton; Lord Arthur Hill-Trevor as Baron Trevor; and Sir Ivor Guest, Bart., as Baron Wimborne. Lord Holmesdale gains an immediate seat in the House of Lords by being summoned up in his father's Barony of Amherst, and Viscount Barrington, an Irish Peer, by being created Baron Shute in the Peerage of the United Kingdom.

In the Baronetage, as well as in the Peerage, additions have been freely made, in marked contrast to the paucity of similar honours conferred during the previous three or four years. The new Baronets are:—Sir Henry Allsopp, Sir Edward Bates, Sir James Bourne, Sir Archibald Campbell, Sir Gabriel Goldney, Sir John Farnaby Lennard, Sir Thomas Meyrick, Sir John Robert Mowbray, Sir Henry William Ripley, Sir Edward William Watkin, and Sir Peter FitzGerald, Knight of Kerry.

Death, too, our own Obituary shows, has not been sparing of persons of high degree. The most memorable men who have fallen away from the titled classes during 1880 have been Viscount Stratford de Redcliffe, Lord Hampton, the Earl of Bessborough, Lord Belper, and Lord Clifford of Chudleigh, Sir Dominic Corrigan, Sir Robert Burdett, Sir Edmond De Vere, and the Knight of Kerry, whose creation as a Baronet preceded his death by less than a month. By Sir Robert Burdett's death, his sisters, Baroness Burdett-Coutts and Mrs. Money-Coutts become coheirs of the old English Baronies of Scales, Latimer, and Badlesmere. It is curious to observe that the two titles that have become extinct during the year were borne by members of the families of Pitt and Canning.

An extract from the author's preface explains how comprehensive is Burke's Peerage and Baronetage:—"Historical and biographical memoirs are given of all titled families, including the several collateral branches, the whole preceded by a history of the various Royal lines, and followed by memoirs of Prelates, Privy Councillors, and Knights, by an account of foreign titles of nobility held by British subjects, and by a summary of peerages recently extinct or dormant. The subject of precedence has also a prominent place.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

The prize distributions of the 5th (West) Middlesex, the 6th Surrey, and the Battersea and Lavender-hill Companies of the 7th Surrey, were held during the past week.

The ceremony in connection with the first-named regiment took place at St. George's Hall, under the presidency of Major-General Cameron, C.B., commanding the 2nd Infantry Brigade at Aldershott, who has recently accepted the honorary colonelcy of the regiment. The gallant officer, in addressing the corps, said he wished there was now, as at the commencement of the Volunteer movement, a greater admixture of classes in the force, a matter that he had always considered one of the best points of foreign conscription.—Lieut.-Colonel Mears, the Commanding Officer, gave a fairly satisfactory statement with regard to the corps, after which the prizes were presented, the principal winners being Serjeant Edmunds, Private Ingram, and Private Atkins.

The prizes of the 6th Surrey Rifles were distributed at the Drill-Hall, Rotherhithe, by Mr. Edward Clarke, Q.C., M.P., and Lieut.-Colonel Payne gave a statement with reference to the corps, from which it appears that nearly 93 per cent of the enrolled strength are efficient members. The chief prize-winners were Corporal Butcher and Captain Sweeting.

Lady Peek, at the Masonic Hall, Shaftesbury Park, presented the prizes to the late 26th Surrey Rifles, now amalgamated with the 7th Surrey Corps. After Lieut.-Colonel Porter had briefly detailed the doings of the regiment during the past year, Sir F. Peek congratulated the members on having sustained their numbers and prestige. The foremost winners upon the prize-list were Captain Wheaton, Colour Serjeant Corsbie, and Serjeant Weston.

UNITED STATES LIFE-SAVING SERVICE.

The annual report of this branch of the service states that there are on the American coasts 179 stations, of which 139 are on the Atlantic seaboard, six on the Pacific, and thirty-four on the lakes. The last year has been very productive of shipping disasters, there having been 300 wrecks, the previous year showing but 219, and the number of vessels wholly lost 54, while last year it has been 67. The number of persons on board these 300 vessels was 1989, of whom 1980 were saved; while 449 shipwrecked persons were cared for at the various stations, 1202 days' relief being afforded them. The number of persons brought ashore from wrecked vessels by the life-saving appliances was 706; and, in addition to these, the life-saving crews assisted off 128 vessels when stranded, and piloted them to places of safety, without which help the vessels and crews would have been lost. The estimated value of the ships thus saved was 2,616,310 dols., and the value of the cargoes 1,195,368 dols., making the total value of property in peril 3,811,708 dols., which exceeds the previous year by nearly 1,000,000 dols. The number of casualties upon the Atlantic coast was 162, which was only one more than the year before; but the wrecks on the lakes were more than doubled, being 136 against 53. Many of the rescues on both lakes and Atlantic were of the most daring description; and the members of one station—that of Point aux Barquas—were instrumental in saving nearly one hundred lives during the season. The following is a brief summary of the results since the establishment of the present system in 1871:—Total number of disasters, 1097; total value of vessels, 13,239,573 dols.; total value of cargoes, 7,118,662 dols.; total value of property saved, 12,130,215; total value of property lost, 8,391,520 dols.; total number of persons on board, 10,381; total number of persons saved, 10,000; total number of lives lost, 371; total number of persons sheltered, 2203. The superintendent points out that the very efficient service on the lakes is in great danger of being discontinued on account of inadequate compensation, the surfmen being rapidly withdrawn from the stations by the higher wages offered by private enterprise; and he advocates the regulation of wages being left to the discretion of the officials, and that a system of pensioning widows and orphans be adopted.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers on the last day of the third week in December was 92,262, of whom 51,556 were in workhouses and 40,706 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding week in 1879, these figures show a decrease of 3550; but as compared with 1878 and 1877 they show an increase of 6061 and 6605 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 890, of whom 666 were men, 184 women, and 40 children under sixteen.

Mr. Chamberlain on Tuesday received a deputation from the Birmingham Trades Council which urged the Government to adopt countervailing duties to the bounties which France and other countries have placed on sugar. The President of the Board of Trade pointed out that the arguments addressed to him struck at the very life of free trade, and would lead the country straight back to protection. On these grounds the Government had come to the conclusion not to give any countenance to the proposals for equivalent duties.

"THE LADIES' GAZETTE OF FASHION" for October, 1880, says:—
The warm weather has recalled to the
LOUIS VELVETEEN
in Paris—that City of the fashionable—is enough to assure it of success, even were its own intrinsic merits of colour, fineness, lightness, and excellent wearing qualities to
"LOUIS." constitute an insufficient recommendation.
It was, indeed, a "happy thought" of its manufacturers to stamp it with its own name on every yard, for, having once made a trial of it, we shall not desire to become the purchasers of any other, for there are so many new kinds in the market that there is plenty of competition. Many ladies have adopted the
in place of real velvet, for evening wear, and the list of colours in which it is manufactured is so long that every purchaser can suit her own complexion.
Ladies are respectfully informed that on each alternate thin side of the Velveteen, both "LOUIS." Black and the New Autumn and Winter Colours, have stamped on the back plain instructions for removing all creases, folding-marks, &c., made in conveyance by rail, post, or other causes.

(KNIGHT OF THE ORDER OF LEOPOLD OF BELGIUM, KNIGHT OF THE LEGION OF HONOUR)
LIGHT-BROWN
COD-LIVER OIL.
THE PUREST. THE MOST EFFICACIOUS.
THE MOST PALATABLE. THE MOST DIGESTIBLE.
Proved by thirty years' medical experience to be
THE ONLY COD-LIVER OIL
which produces the full curative effects in
CONSUMPTION AND DISEASES OF THE CHEST, THROAT AFFECTIONS, GENERAL DEBILITY, AND WASTING DISEASES OF CHILDREN.

SELECT MEDICAL OPINIONS.
SIR G. DUNCAN GIBB, Bart., M.D., Physician to the Westminster Hospital.
"The value of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL as a therapeutic agent in a number of diseases, chiefly of an exhaustive character, has been admitted by the world of medicine; but, in addition, I have found it a remedy of great power in the treatment of many Affections of the Throat and Larynx, especially in Consumption of the latter, where it will sustain life when everything else fails."
DR. SINCLAIR COGHILL, Physician Royal National Hospital for Consumption, Ventnor.
"I have convinced myself that in Tubercular and the various forms of strumous Disease, Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL possesses greater therapeutic efficacy than any other Cod-Liver Oil with which I am acquainted. It was especially indicated, in a large number of cases in which the patients protested they had never been able to retain or digest other Cod-Liver Oil, that Dr. DE JONGH'S Oil was not only tolerated, but taken readily, and with marked benefit."
DR. HUNTER SEMPLE, Physician Hospital for Diseases of the Throat and Chest.
"I have long been aware of the great reputation enjoyed by the LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL introduced into medical practice by DR. DE JONGH, and have recommended it with the utmost confidence. I have no hesitation in stating my opinion, that it possesses all the qualities of a good and efficient medicine. Its taste is by no means disagreeable, and might even be called pleasant. I have found DR. DE JONGH'S OIL very useful in cases of Chronic Cough, and especially in Laryngeal Disease complicated with Consumption."
JOSEPH J. POPE, Esq., M.R.C.S., Late Staff Surg., Army, Prof. of Hygiene, Birkbeck Institution.
"I found during my Indian experience that the worth and character of DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL remained unchanged by tropical heat or foreign climate, and it was, from its uniformity of character, particularly adapted for long-continued administration. The value of 'hydro-carbons' in all debilitated states of the system is now becoming thoroughly recognised; and it is, without doubt, from the animal oils and fats, rather than from their vegetable substitutes, that we may hope to derive the surest benefit. The Oil of DR. DE JONGH places in every one's reach a reliable and valuable remedy, one that cannot be too widely recognised."

DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL is sold ONLY in capsuled IMPERIAL Half-Pints, 2s. 6d.; Pints, 4s. 6d.; Quarts, 8s.; by all respectable Chemists and Druggists throughout the World.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S
WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER
THE ADMIRATION OF THE WORLD. Mrs. S. A. Allen's World's Hair Restorer is perfection for its wonderful life-giving properties to faded or falling hair, and quickly changing grey or white hair to its natural youthful colour and beauty. It is not a dye. It requires only a few applications to restore gray hair to its youthful colour and restores beauty and induces luxuriant growth, and its occasional use is all that is needed to preserve it in its highest perfection and beauty. Baldness is quickly and permanently removed. Sold by all Chemists and Perfumers.

FLORILINE. For the Teeth and Breath. Is the best Liquid Dentifrice in the world; it thoroughly cleanses partially-decayed teeth from all parasites or living "animalculæ," leaving them pearly white, imparting a delightful fragrance to the breath. The Fragrant Floriline removes instantly all odours arising from a foul stomach or tobacco smoke, being partly composed of honey, soda, and extracts of sweet herbs and plants. It is perfectly harmless, and delicious as sherry. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, at 2s. 6d. per Bottle.

VALUABLE DISCOVERY for the HAIR. If your hair is turning grey, or white, or falling off, use "The Mexican Hair Renewer," for it will positively restore in every case Grey or White Hair to its original colour, without leaving the disagreeable smell of most "Restorers." It makes the hair charmingly beautiful, as well as promoting the growth of the hair on bald spots where the glands are not decayed. "The Mexican Hair Renewer" is sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, at 3s. 6d. per Bottle.

A MASS of CURLS is assured by regularly using two or three times a week COX'S CURLING FLUID, warranted harmless. Protected by Government stamp, signed John Robert Cox. Price 4s. 6d. per bottle, with full directions, of all Chemists, or forwarded by L. N. MARSHALL, 39, St. Mary-le-square, Kennington, London, S.E., on receipt of amount.

CHARITY.

FROM THE PICTURE BY M. BENCZUR.

LIEUTENANT SCHWATKA SHOWING THE ESQUIMAUX THE "ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS."
FROM A SKETCH BY MR. H. W. KLUTSCHAK, THE ARTIST OF THE EXPEDITION.

THE AMERICAN FRANKLIN SEARCH EXPEDITION.

We have been favoured with permission to make use of the interesting Sketches and Journal prepared by Mr. Henry W. Klutschak, of Prague, Bohemia, who was a member of the Arctic exploring party under command of Lieutenant Schwatka, of the United States Army, during the overland expedition to the shores of King William's Land, by which some interesting relics of Sir John Franklin and his comrades were lately discovered and brought to New York. Some of the Sketches are engraved for the Supplement to this week's Number of our Journal; and others will appear in subsequent issues. The accompanying Sketch Map is a copy of that which was furnished to the Times several weeks ago, by Admiral G. W. H. Richards, together with his commentary upon the history of the expedition, from which we have freely borrowed to aid in explaining the subject.

It will be remembered that in the year 1858 Admiral Sir Leopold M'Clintock, in Lady Franklin's little vessel the Fox, wintered in Bellot Strait, Prince Regent's Inlet, and that in the following spring his limited sledge parties reached King William's Land, distant about 150 miles, where the first positive proof of the fate of the expedition was obtained; the remains of many of those who perished were discovered, as well as various relics and records. Though the fate of the expedition was thus entirely set at rest, the search was necessarily a hasty and partial one, as the snow lay thick on the ground, and the parties had to return to their vessel before the disruption of the ice in summer.

For some years past reports have occasionally been received through American whalers which have wintered at or visited the northern parts of Hudson's Bay and communicated with the natives to the effect that books and other articles belonging to Franklin's expedition were known to exist in certain parts, and that the Esquimaux were willing to conduct the white man to them. In one instance, about three years since, it was positively asserted that some of the crew had crossed the Isthmus of Boothia and reached a point on Melville Peninsula in the neighbourhood of "Fury and Hecla" Strait, and that relics of the expedition were deposited in a cairn there. Few persons, however, who were qualified to judge, believed that any of the crews had ever got beyond King William's Land, off which the Erebus and Terror were abandoned in 1848, or, at any rate, beyond the Adelaide Peninsula, which lies close to its southern end and at the entrance of the Great Fish River.

We believe it was this latter report which principally induced Lieutenant Schwatka to undertake his remarkable enterprise. The American Geographical Society of New York, of which Chief Justice Daly is President, made arrangements, with a special fund subscribed in the United States, to fit out this expedition. The command of it was accepted by Lieutenant Frederick Schwatka, who is a cavalry officer in the Federal army; and it was joined by several volunteers—namely, Mr. William H. Gilder, who acted as special correspondent of the New York Herald; Mr. Henry W. Klutschak, an Austrian; and Mr. Frank Melms, of Milwaukie, in Wisconsin; these gallant gentlemen served in the expedition without pay. As huntsman and interpreter and general assistant, the committee engaged Joe Eberling, of Croton, Connecticut, who had been with Hall's North Pole Expedition, and with Captain Tyson, and had distinguished himself in other Arctic journeys. The firm of Messrs. T. Morison and Brown, New York, liberally offered to convey the expedition to Hudson's Bay in their whaling schooner named the Eothen. Accordingly, on July 19, 1878, the party under Lieutenant Schwatka's command sailed from New York, provided with all needful stores, arms, and ammunition, in such quantities and packages as would be suitable for a sledge journey overland. Early in August Lieutenant Schwatka, accompanied by three companions, landed near Chesterfield Inlet, of our charts, at the northern end of Hudson's Bay, with the provisions, stores, and equipments which he had brought with him, and formed his camp at a point named Cape Daly. He decided to pass the winter with the natives he found there, to assimilate his habits and mode of living as far as possible to theirs, and to persuade them to accompany his party in the spring in whatever direction he should decide to travel.

The front-page Engraving in our Supplement this week, from one of Mr. Klutschak's Sketches, represents an interview at Cape Daly with some of the Esquimaux Indians, whom Lieutenant Schwatka amused by showing them a few copies of an illustrated newspaper. Mr. Gilder, upon the same occasion, diverted them with the exhibition of some clever conjuring tricks; but these simple folk were as much astonished by the one as by the other specimen of the ingenuity of civilised men. These people have emigrated from the shores of Repulse Bay, within the last seven or eight years, to gain an easier livelihood, and to profit by the yearly visits of the American whaling-vessels. They are still, however, extremely ignorant and superstitious.

Lieutenant Schwatka soon found that the reports as to traces of the Franklin expedition having been discovered eastward of Boothia had no foundation in fact, and that they unquestionably referred to King William's Land; and there accordingly he at once resolved to proceed in the early spring.

We may here reflect what such a resolution involved. It was to traverse a tract of totally unknown country for a distance of about 350 miles as the crow flies, and then, on reaching King William's Land, to undertake a minute search of its coasts, which could not involve less than 600 miles of travel, and to remain there till the winter should have set in, in order that he might recross the Strait which separated the island from the main land (as he was not furnished with any boat); finally, to retrace his steps to Hudson's Bay during the depth of an Arctic winter. The resolution to do this was a bold one, and the enterprise which Lieutenant Schwatka and his companions had marked out for themselves sufficiently arduous. It was well understood by them that it would require a year to accomplish it, entirely on the resources of the country—of which they were in ignorance—with the exception of the comparatively small quantity of provisions they carried with them.

On April 1, 1879, they commenced their journey, accompanied by thirteen of the Esquimaux, including women and children, and with three sledges and forty-two native dogs to drag them. On these sledges they carried about a month's provisions for the whole party, consisting principally of bread and meat landed from the whaler, and their equipment of firearms, which appear to have been of the very best description, and to which their great success in procuring game, and probably their personal security from the tribes of natives they afterwards fell in with, was mainly due. They crossed the country to the estuary of Back's River without any extraordinary difficulty, and found considerable quantities of game. They examined Montreal Island and the coast of the Adelaide Peninsula, met many natives, from whom they procured relics of the lost expedition, listened to numerous anecdotes, more or less to be depended upon, and obtained what appeared pretty conclusive proof that one of Franklin's ships had drifted from off Cape Victory, where they had been abandoned, to a position within a few miles of the Adelaide Peninsula, or a distance of about 150 miles, where she was ultimately sunk.

The day's journey of April 12, for Lieutenant Schwatka's party, lay over the elevated ground forming the watershed between the Hudson's Bay shore and Wager River, to the northward. The descent of the hill on the farther side was tolerably steep, so that the dogs had to run fast, in order not to let the sledges run over them. Their halt at noon that day was under what is called Divide Hill, and, as soon as the sledges were stopped, all these poor fatigued animals lay down, and remained quite still, to the moment when they were forced to rise and continue their toil, some of them licking the ice of the pools to assuage their thirst. The scene at this noonday halt is represented in our second Illustration, which is likewise from one of Mr. Klutschak's sketches.

The party in May, 1879, crossed over Simpson Strait to King William's Land and commenced the search of its coasts. It would be impossible in this brief sketch to do more than touch upon the incidents of that minute search. They remained on the island five months, and scarcely a day passed that they did not come upon some relic of the sad retreat of our unfortunate countrymen. The coast had evidently been frequently visited by natives, who had disinterred those who had been buried for the sake of plunder, and left their remains to the ravages of the wild beasts. Lieutenant Schwatka and his party appear to have carefully re-buried all these remains. But even during the summer it is with great difficulty that the soil can be removed for much more than the depth of a foot beneath the surface. It is probable, however, that what is left will now remain undisturbed.

During the summer and autumn of 1879 they made a complete search of King William's Land and the mainland adjacent, travelling over the route pursued by the crew of the Erebus and Terror upon their retreat towards Back's River. They buried the bones of all those unfortunates remaining above ground and erected monuments to their memory. Their research has established the fact that the records of Franklin's expedition are lost beyond recovery. The Natchilli Esquimaux—who had found a sealed tin box about two feet long and one foot square, filled with books, at a point on the mainland near Back's River, where the last of the survivor's of Franklin's party are supposed to have perished—were interviewed and questioned by Lieutenant Schwatka. These natives, it appeared, broke open the box and threw out the records, which were either scattered by the wind or destroyed by the children, who took them to their tents for playthings. This point was searched, not only by Lieutenant Schwatka's party, but nearly the entire Natchilli nation, inspired by a promise of a great reward for the discovery of any remnant of books or papers, no matter what was their present condition. None of the records were found, but the skeleton of a sailor was discovered about five miles inland. Every native who could impart any information was hunted up and interviewed, with the aid of a competent interpreter. It was ascertained that one of Franklin's ships drifted down the Victoria Straits and was unwittingly scuttled by the Ookjoolik Esquimaux, who found it near an island off Grand Point during the spring of 1849. At that time one man was lying dead in the steerage, and during the same year the natives saw the tracks of four white men in the spring snows on the mainland. A large number of relics have been gathered by the party. From each spot where the graves were found a few tokens were selected that may serve to identify those who perished there. A piece of each of the boats found and destroyed by the natives has been brought away, together with interesting though mournful relics in the shape of the prow of one of their boats, the sledge upon which it was transported, and part of the drag rope upon which these poor fellows tugged until they fell down and died in their tracks. In addition to these they secured a board which may serve to identify the ship which completed the north-west passage. They have also brought the remains of an officer of the Terror, Lieutenant John Irving, which were identified by a prize medal found in his opened grave. The Anchor Line steamer Circassia has, at the request of the Admiralty, brought to Glasgow from New York the remains of Lieutenant Irving.

The sketch taken by Mr. Klutschak on June 28, one of those engraved by us this week, shows the grave of Lieutenant Irving, with a view of Victory Point. The grave, situated close to the beach, had been marked by sticking up near it two pieces of a sledge, inscribed with the letters, "T. 11.," which are supposed to have belonged to H.M.S. Terror; but the contents of the grave have been removed. At another place, below Cape Maria Louisa, they found a "cache" on the flats, containing a wooden canteen, barrel-shaped, marked on one side "No. 3," and on the other "G. B.," under the Queen's broad arrow. There were also the staves of another canteen, a small keg, a tin powder-can, several red cans marked "Goldner's patent," a narrow-bladed axe, several broken porter and wine bottles, stamped "Bristol Glass-works," and a few barrel staves. The "cache" was one evidently made by Netchillik Inuits, who had found the things along the coast. Lieutenant Schwatka's party left Irving Bay on July 13, after erecting a cairn or stone piled monument over the grave of Lieutenant Irving, and marking a stone to indicate the object of the cairn. Schwatka also buried a copy of the M'Clintock-Crozier record of 1858, together with the record of his own work to date, 10 ft. north of the cairn, marking the fact on the tombstone. We give an Illustration of this monument erected over Lieutenant Irving's empty grave, thirty-two years after his death.

The narrative proceeds:—"On our way back to Franklin Point we buried the skull found on our way up, but found no further bones till we reached Point le Visconte. We saw tenting-places both of white men and natives at different points along the coast, and one cairn that had been torn down and contained nothing. At Point le Visconte we found the grave of an officer, as was evinced by the finding of gilt naval buttons among the débris and pieces of cloth and linen of finer texture than any seen elsewhere. There was nothing whatever to indicate the name or rank of the deceased, though we noticed that the grave had been made with especial care. This seems to have amounted to nothing, for it had been torn open by the savages, and the body dragged around by foxes and wolves. The bones that we found were scattered around, some of them a quarter of a mile from the grave: but as they were of different parts of the human skeleton there was nothing to indicate that more than one person had been buried here. The care with which the interment had been made was sufficient evidence that the officer had died on the way from the ships. We found another empty grave on a hill where we encamped, about four miles below this point, and a skull about a quarter of a mile distant from it, evidently having been dragged there by wild beasts. The only things found in the tomb were a large brass buckle and a percussion-cap. Near by were traces of native tenting places. In fact, wherever we found graves we always found evidences that natives had encamped in the vicinity."

The party, having successfully carried out the mission they had imposed on themselves, remained on the island until the ice was sufficiently strong to carry them back to the mainland, which was not until Nov. 1, the ice of the previous summer having commenced to break up on the west side of King William's Land at the end of July. On that day they recrossed the Strait, coasted along the west side of the Adelaide Peninsula, and selected a track for their homeward journey about sixty miles westward of their outward route. This winter journey occupied four months, instead of one month, as in the outward journey in spring; great hardships and privations were endured, owing to the extraordinarily low temperatures and scarcity of food. Twenty-seven of their dogs died from hard work and starvation, rendering it necessary for the men to take their places at the sledges. On March 4, 1880, they reached their starting-point at Cape Daly, and there remained till August 1, when they were taken on board the barque George and Mary, of New Bedford, and were brought safely home to the United States.

The sledge journey was the longest ever made through the unexplored Arctic regions, both as to time and distance, the party having been absent from their base of operations in Hudson's Bay eleven months and four days. During that time they travelled 2819 geographical or 3251 statute miles. It was the only sledge journey ever made that covered an Arctic winter. The winter was pronounced by the Esquimaux one of unusual rigour, and the natives at Dépôt Island and Wager River suffered very severely both from cold and famine, the severity of the season precluding successful hunting. The expedition, however, withstood the greatest amount of cold ever encountered by white men in the field. On Jan. 3 of the last winter the thermometer sank to 71 deg. Fahrenheit, or 103 deg. below freezing-point, and during the whole of that day it did not rise above 69 deg. During sixteen days the average temperature was 100 deg. below freezing-point, and during twenty-seven days it was more than 92 deg. below. All this time the party pushed on; in fact, they never halted a single day on account of the cold. The storms came on in December, and, food running short, the travellers had to subsist on one meal a day, comprising at first about ½lb. of walrus or seal meat, but afterwards of "kow," or the thick hide of the walrus, with a thick covering of hair. The party were without food for two days; during this time they mostly lay in bed to keep up the warmth, but fortunately some walrus and seal were killed. Throughout the entire journey their reliance for food was almost entirely on the resources of the country. It was the first expedition in which a white man voluntarily lived on the same food as his Esquimaux assistants, thus showing that the white man can adapt himself to the climate, and travel as well as the natives.

ITALY.

The Chamber, having completed the discussion and voted the Budget, separated on Wednesday week till Jan. 24.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

We learn from Vienna that six new peers have been created, four of whom are members of the Right and two of the Left. Of the latter, one is Baron Stremayr, the ex-Minister; while amongst the former are three Poles and the historian, Baron Helfert, who at the time of the Concordat was the chief of a department in the Ministry of Public Worship and Instruction.

The Upper House of the Austrian Reichsrath has approved the Provisional Budget. Herr von Schmerling, the chairman of the Constitutional majority, however, said that his party, while assenting to the Budget from consideration for the necessities of the State, felt bound to place on record the distrust with which it viewed the policy followed by the Government.

The French Ambassador at Constantinople has invested the Sultan with the Grand Cordon of the Legion of Honour.

Aleko Pasha, the Governor of East Roumelia, having taken offence at the refusal of the local Parliament to pass the salaries of his private secretaries, resigned the Governorship of the Province; but, at the request of some influential persons, he has consented to remain in office.

GREECE.

The Chamber of Deputies has passed the second reading of the bill for granting a subsidy to the Greek Navigation Company, and read for the first time the bill for the payment of the Bavarian Loan. M. Coumoundouros, the Premier, has laid on the table a Consular Convention between Greece and Italy.

M. Coumoundouros has dispatched a circular to the representatives of Greece abroad, instructing them to decline the proposed European arbitration if it should be offered.

AMERICA.

The Nicaragua Canal Bill has been introduced in the United States Senate. In the House of Representatives there has been a "scene," which ended in a personal encounter, and led to a proposal for the expulsion of two members. Ultimately the two offenders apologised to the House, and the matter was allowed to drop.

Subject to the action of the Commission, the Executive Committee of the "World's Fair" have adopted Inwood Hall as the site for the Exhibition building at New York.

Three hundred and twenty thousand immigrants are estimated to have arrived at New York in the year just closed.

Serious floods have occurred in France and Belgium. Much damage to property is reported, but no loss of life. Disastrous floods have also taken place at Cyprus. At Limasol the river overflowed its banks, and destroyed sixty houses. Eight lives were lost, and the damage was estimated at £70,000. Heavy rains have fallen in all parts of the island.

THE MAGAZINES.

Readers of the Cornhill will probably turn most eagerly to Mr. Payn's new story, "A Grape from a Thorn," and their eagerness will not be disappointed. The groundwork of the plot is interesting, the picture of the Devonshire marine retreat, where the scene is at present laid, is a gem of description, and the humours of the hotel, although the humour borders a little upon the plebeian vulgarity it is intended to satirise, are still irresistibly comical. Mr. Payn's pen is not wont to flag, and his excellent beginning bears promise of a bright story. The other new fiction, "Love the Debt," is a faithful study of some aspects of English middle-class life, but has little to arrest the attention forcibly. "Fina's Aunt" is a delicate sketch, in Miss Thackeray's manner, and, perhaps, from her pen. The miscellaneous papers are unusually deficient in interest. "In the Heart of the Highlands" has some successful pieces of word painting, and "The Moral Element in Literature" some just remarks, occasionally verging upon the confines of the obvious.

The Gentleman's Magazine also commences a new novel by a writer and in a style to justify considerable expectations. Mr. Justin McCarthy should be quite at home in depicting the career of "The Comet of a Season," and the opening promises something on a par with his hitherto unequalled effort, "Miss Misanthrope." "The Discrowned Jingo" is an amusing sketch of some of the members of the late Cabinet in adversity, tinged, however, with too much of the acrimony of party spirit. Dr. A. Wilson's account of the modifications of type which separate some of the lower animals into groups is a very interesting and lucid study in the philosophy of evolution; and all the other papers are clever and readable.

Temple Bar, too, depends mainly upon its new serial fictions, for the merits of which the names of Mrs. Alexander and the authoress of "Probation" are a strong guarantee. Both begin admirably, and promise well. There is also a remarkable Russian story, "Illouscha," probably a translation.

It requires close attention to nice shades and subtle refinements of feeling to take much interest in Mr. James's serial contribution to Macmillan, which, without such attention, the ordinary reader is likely to find insipid, and with it fatiguing. The remaining contents of a fairly average number include a paper on clerical subscription by Dean Stanley, in which the High Church party are reminded that on historical grounds they should be the last to object to its relaxation; an interesting account of Montenegrin customs and superstitions by Mr. A. J. Evans; "Mopsa's Tale," an elegant poem by G. H. Hickey; and a discriminating review of Tennyson's new volume by Professor Colvin.

Blackwood is strong with the continuation of "The Private Secretary;" "The Seer," a striking tale, by Rudolph Lindau; and, more interesting perhaps than either, the first of a series of letters from Helen Faucit, giving her own impressions of the Shakspearean characters in which her principal triumphs have been achieved. Ophelia is the subject of the present number. An estimate from a point of view which so few can share possesses, of course, an attractiveness and suggestiveness entirely independent of the justness of the particular views propounded. "Before and After the Ballot" is a very amusing sketch of the electoral corruption of a small borough, with some sensible, practical suggestions for remedying it. The political article, of course, makes the most of the patent indecision and rumoured dissensions of the Ministry.

The most conspicuous contribution to Belgravia is Mr. Mallock's novel, "A Romance of the Nineteenth Century," which, like "Daniel Deronda," begins at a gaming table. It bids fair to prove the antitype in fiction to Mr. Mallock's attempts in moral philosophy—forcible and with a decided power of compelling attention, but thoroughly unwholesome and morbid. "Does Writing Pay?" explains in lively style how a comfortable income may be made by the literary Jack of all trades, who can do nothing excellently, but everything well enough.

London Society commences a new fiction by Mrs. Riddell, which gives every promise of rivalling the highly-successful story which she has just concluded in this periodical. "How We Lost a Treasure" is a capital short tale. As usual, there is nothing good in Time except "Sophy;" but, as usual, "Sophy" is very good. Mrs. Collins's striking story, "Too Red a Dawn," is concluded in the University Magazine, which also has a paper on the Essenes, full of curious learning, and a charming little poem, "Shadow Lovers," by Miss Robinson.

The North American Review has an important article on "The Future of the Republican Party," by Mr. Boutwell, foreshadowing coercion with the alleged view of protecting coloured citizens at the South; the continuation of M. Charv's account of his archæological discoveries in Central America; and Professor Curtius's able summary of what has been effected at Olympia. Mr. Grant White's charges against the boasted public school system of the United States will attract much attention. Harper's Monthly is, as usual, a miracle of cheapness and of exquisite woodcut illustration. "The English Lakes" and the memoir of Mr. Lowell are, perhaps, the most interesting contributions on the whole; but the story, "Anne," and the sketches of a voyage down the Thames, of "An Old Quaker City," and of the New York firemen's brigade are hardly inferior.

The contents of the Atlantic Monthly are also most varied. Mr. White's criticism on Sarah Bernhardt, Mr. Aldrich's excellent sketch of the typical English footman, Mr. Rossetti's discourse on the wives of poets, and the humorous account of the difficulty of getting married in Germany, are perhaps the most generally attractive. The Victorian Review, though able, has less specifically Australian matter than could be wished. A paper on the Supreme Court in Victoria and the Press shows the danger to which the judicial office is exposed in democratic communities. "Notes from Fiji" have lost their interest, which would otherwise have been considerable, from the removal of Sir A. Gordon to Fiji. Mr. Hogan does not take an over favourable view of the type of Anglo-Saxon men in course of evolution in Australia. "He will be peaceably disposed and sportively inclined, rather selfish in conduct and secular in practice, contented and easy-going, but non-intellectual and tasteless." Other writers have drawn the coming Australian's horoscope very differently.

Miss Mather, the popular authoress of "Comin' through the Rye," appears in the capacity of editor of a new magazine, the Burlington, moderate in price and creditable in substance. Besides Miss Mather's own novel, "The Story of a Sin," we remark some extremely elegant verses to an infant, by Mr. Frederick Locker, and "Faithful," a pathetic little sketch in prose by Mr. Philip Marston.

With the beginning of a new year many of the publishers of serials seem to have engaged in a generous rivalry. In such a competition the firm of Messrs. Cassell, Petter, and Galpin were sure to be to the fore. Nothing but praise is due to them for their Magazine of Art (new series), Family Magazine, and Quiver—each appealing, with success, to a different class of readers. The same firm issue Old and New London, Technical Educator, Longfellow's Poetical Works, Illustrated; Science for All, Illustrated; Familiar Wild Flowers, with Coloured Plates; an Illustrated Book of the Dog; and the first part of the Royal Shakspere, with illustrations on steel and wood.

Good Words opens with the first part of a Dartmoor tale, entitled "Christowell," by R. D. Blackmore, written in his happiest manner, and has a large amount of pleasant reading to suit various tastes. The Leisure Hour, retaining its distinctive features, with many improvements, is now issued in the monthly form only. New serial tales, by Mrs. J. K. Spender and W. Gilbert, are begun in the present number of Golden Hours.

Among the other magazines and serial publications received this month are Heath's Gilpin's Forest Scenery, Universal Instructor, Illustrated, Tinsley's Magazine, Churchman, Antiquary, Science Gossip; and Monthly Parts of All the Year Round, Sunday at Home, Sunday Magazine, Gardeners' Magazine, Gardening Illustrated, Day of Rest, Boy's Own Paper, Girl's Own Paper, Young England, Union Jack, Daisy, and Christian Age. The Fashion Books include the World of Fashion, Ladies' Gazette of Fashion, Myra's Journal, Myra's Mid-Monthly, Weldon's Ladies' Journal, and Illustrated Household Journal.

Other magazines will be noticed next week.

DIARIES.

Letts's Diaries enjoy a well-established reputation. Aiming at the useful rather than the ornamental, yet far from ignoring the latter quality, the firm of Messrs. Letts, Son, and Co. is noted for the sterling excellence of its Diaries. They are classified in several series, for use in many different ways; some being prepared with official information and with ruled pages, for the particular use of classes and professions. Pocket-books, almanacks, tablet diaries, blotting pads, index books, and other useful accessories are included in the comprehensive catalogue of this firm's productions.

Messrs. Hudson and Hearns have entered with spirit into the production of these requirements for official, commercial, and even private use. They publish a series of Diaries specially adapted to the use of architects, surveyors, and civil engineers; and the firm has also issued, in convenient shapes and sizes, similar adjuncts of the desk and writing-table, for mercantile and general use.

The Chapter of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem in England has awarded its bronze medal for saving life on land to Edward Mountjoy Price, in recognition of his conspicuous gallantry in rescuing a boy from a fire at Ilfracombe, Devon, and for afterwards removing a barrel of gunpowder which was charred by the flames, thus saving the lives of the firemen and others working above the burning room. The medal has also been conferred on Mr. James McGowan, Inspector of Roads to the borough of Birkenhead, for going down, at great personal risk, into an underground passage and rescuing three men who had been rendered insensible by noxious gases, one of them dying directly he was brought to the surface.

OBITUARY.

GEORGE ELIOT.

Marian Evans, Mrs. Cross, the brilliant novelist, so celebrated under the nom de plume of George Eliot, died on the 22nd ult. She was the daughter of Mr. Robert Evans, a land-agent and surveyor, resident in the neighbourhood of Nuneaton, Warwickshire, and, at an early age, came to London to devote herself to literature. Her earliest works were a translation of Strauss's "Life of Jesus;" and, in 1853, a translation of Feuerbach's "Essence of Christianity." In the interval between the two, she had largely contributed to the Westminster Review. Her first imaginative effort was "Scenes of Clerical Life;" but the book that established her fame was "Adam Bede," published in 1859. This was followed by "The Mill on the Floss" in 1860, by "Silas Marner" in 1861, by "Romola" in 1863, by "Felix Holt" in 1866, by "Middlemarch" in 1871, and by "Daniel Deronda" in 1876. Her death, quite unexpected, has taken from English literature one of its brightest ornaments.

ARCHDEACON WICKHAM.

The Ven. Robert Wickham, Vicar of Gresford, and late Archdeacon of St. Asaph, died at his Vicarage on the 21st ult., aged seventy-eight. He was educated at Christ Church, Oxford, where he took his Bachelor's degree in 1824, a second class in "Literæ Humaniores," and was for many years Head Master of a very celebrated school at Twyford, near Winchester. He was given the vicarage of Gresford by his brother-in-law, Dr. Short, Bishop of St. Asaph, by whom he was appointed his chaplain and Archdeacon of St. Asaph. This venerable divine was the author of several religious works.

THE REV. PRECENTOR WALCOTT.

The Rev. Mackenzie Edward Charles Walcott, B.D., F.R.S.L., F.S.A., Precentor and Prebendary of Chichester Cathedral, Author of "William of Wykeham and his Colleges," "Memorials of the Cathedrals," and several other historical and archæological works, died on the 22nd ult. at his residence in Belgrave-road. He was born in 1822, the only son of the late Admiral John Edward Walcott, of Winkton, M.P. for Christchurch, by Charlotte Anne, his wife, daughter of Colonel John Nelly, Commandant Bengal Artillery, and derived his descent from a younger branch of the ancient Shropshire family of Walcot of Walcot. He was educated at Winchester, and at Exeter College, Oxford; was for some time Curate of St. Margaret's, and Evening Lecturer at St. James's, Westminster. He married, July 20, 1852, Roseannie Elizabeth, third daughter of Major Frederick Brownlow, 79th Highlanders, and niece of Charles, first Lord Lurgan.

PROFESSOR RYMER JONES

Professor Thomas Rymer Jones, F.R.S., who died from heart disease on Dec. 10, was born at Whitby, in 1810. He studied for the medical profession at Guy's Hospital in London, and in Paris, taking out his diploma as M.R.C.S. in 1833; but at an early age relinquished his practice on account of deafness, and devoted himself to Comparative Anatomy. In 1836 he was appointed Professor of Comparative Anatomy at King's College, London, which position he continued to hold for nearly forty years. In succession to Dr. Roget, he became Fullerian Professor of Physiology at the Royal Institution, and was also Examiner in Physiology at the University of London. Professor Rymer Jones, among many works on Comparative Anatomy and Zoology, has made for himself a monument in his "General Outline of the Animal Kingdom," which, although published in 1838, still continues to be the standard text-book of this very comprehensive subject.

DR. MARSHAM.

The wardenship of Merton College, Oxford, has been rendered vacant by the decease of Mr. Robert Bullock Marsham, D.C.L., who died on the 27th ult., at Caversfield House, Bicester, at the great age of ninety-six. Dr. Marsham, who was elected to the position of Warden of Merton so long ago as the year 1826, was the owner of considerable estates in Oxfordshire and Buckinghamshire, and was a magistrate for the former county.

ADMIRAL JOHNSON.

Admiral William Ward Percival Johnson died on the 26th ult., at his residence, Little Baddow, near Chelmsford, at the age of ninety. He entered the Navy in July, 1803, and fought on board the Victory at Trafalgar; he came ashore thirty-seven years ago. At a banquet in 1874 he stated that he had never seen salt water since, and that he knew nothing of ironclads except what he had seen on paper.

MR. G. F. ANSELL.

Mr. George Frederick Ansell, well-known in the scientific world by his fire-damp indicator (notice of which appeared in our pages a few weeks since), an instrument invented to prevent explosions in coal-mines, died on the 21st ult. He began his career by the study of surgery, but, not finding it quite congenial to his taste, he decided to attend the lectures at the Royal College of Chemistry and the Royal School of Mines, where he was soon appointed lecture assistant to Dr. Hofmann. Soon afterwards he was appointed Professor of Chemistry to the Royal Panopticon, where he exhibited a surprisingly beautiful illuminated fountain. He was the first chemist who succeeded in volatilising gold, and he made some important additions to our knowledge of iron and steel. Lord Palmerston gave him an appointment at the Royal Mint, under the Mastership of Mr. Thomas Graham, where he rendered valuable services by his improved conduct of the works, thus making it a self-supporting institution, and thereby saving the State many thousand pounds a year. He also obtained great credit by his treatment of brittle gold. His pen was usefully employed in many ways, his most important work being that on the "Royal Mint." He also wrote the article "Money" for Ure's Dictionary of the Arts and Sciences. He was born March 4, 1826, and was consequently in his fifty-fifth year, when he was carried off by an attack of paralysis.

MR. MECHI.

Mr. J. J. Mechi, the well-known agriculturist, died on the 26th ult., at his residence, Tiptree Hall, Essex. Mr. Mechi was the son of Giacomo Mechi, a citizen of Bologna, who settled in England early in life, and filled a post in the household of George III. He was born in London on May 22, 1802, and was trained in a City house engaged in the Newfoundland trade. In 1827 he began business as a cutler, and realised a handsome fortune by the sale of the "magic razor-strop." In 1840 he inaugurated the agricultural projects which subsequently made his name famous. He purchased 130 acres of land at Tiptree Heath, and by means of deep drainage and steam power transformed a barren waste into a productive farm. He published several works on agriculture, and a popular edition of an account of his improved agricultural system obtained a wide circulation. In July, 1856, he was appointed to the shrievalty of London, and in the following year was elected an Alderman. As an agriculturist his merit was recognised by the presentation of a testimonial of the value of £500. He was made a member of the council of the Society of Arts, and was a juror in the Department of Art and Science at the Exhibition of 1851 and the Paris Exhibition of 1855.

Brentano's Monthly (Brentano, 29, Union-square, New York) for November among many entertaining and instructive articles, original and selected, has a game played by Mr. Morphy, which is stated to be the great Master's first attempt at chess sans voir. It was played when he was but twelve years old, against his uncle, Mr. Ernest Morphy, and shows abundant promise of the power that subsequently astonished the Old World and the New, although it must be conceded that the loser's play was only so-so on the occasion. We quote the partie here, as we have not seen it in any collection of Morphy's games.

We can cordially recommend Brentano's Monthly to English amateurs. It is, we believe, the only monthly in the United States devoting space to the subject of chess, and the subscription is only 4 dols. per annum.

For the particulars of the following matches, played during the month of December, we are indebted to the honorary secretaries of the associations mentioned, Messrs. Stauffer, E. J. Line, Henry Banks, G. Adamson, and the honorary secretary of the Oxford University Club. On Dec. 2 the North London defeated the Shaftesbury by ten games to three, and on the same day the Isleworth Reading Room Club won, for the second time this season, against the Twickenham Holy Trinity Club. On Dec. 4 the Knight class of the City Club were victorious in a match against all comers from the Athenæum, Camden Town, winning by ten games to four; and on the 6th Greenwich defeated Bermondsey with a score of 5½ games to 2½. In a match between the Oxford University and Oxford City Clubs, eight players a side, the City won by thirteen games to three. We are much obliged to the honorary officials mentioned above, and regret that the pressure of other matter upon our limited space prevented their reports appearing earlier.

The Family Journal, a weekly paper published at Kingston, Jamaica, announces a problem tourney in which two prizes will be given for the best set of not less than two nor more than four original two-move problems, and a special prize for the best problem contributed by any West Indian competitor who shall not have gained either of the others. We note with pleasure that a chess club is being organised in Kingston, and that his Excellency the Governor of the Island has accepted the office of president.

The judges in the Westminster Papers problem tourney being at length satisfied that all the competing problems have been submitted to the test of publication, in accordance with the conditions of the tourney, will award the prizes in the course of the current month.

On the 21st ultimo Mr. Blackburne gave a blindfold performance at the City Club, playing six games concurrently. He won four and drew two games.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated April 1, 1878) of Lord George Henry Cavendish, J.P., D.L., late of Ashford Hall, Ashford, Derbyshire, who died on Sept. 23 last, was proved on the 14th ult. by James Charles Cavendish, the son and sole executor, the personal estate being sworn under £200,000. The testator leaves to his wife £1000, and for life his furniture, plate, pictures, jewellery, books, linen, china, glass, and effects, and his residence in Upper Eccleston-street; at her death, the said house, furniture, and effects are to pass to his son; to his said son his shares in certain named companies; and legacies and annuities to many of his indoor and outdoor servants—some of these, however, are not to be payable until the death of his wife. The residue of the personalty is to be held upon trust for his wife for life; then, as to £5300 for his daughter Mrs. Alice Louisa Egerton, and £7500 for his daughter Mrs. Susan Henrietta Brand, in each case in addition to their settlements; and the ultimate residue for his said son, James Charles. The deceased was continuously for forty-six years member of Parliament for the northern division of Derbyshire.

The will (dated March 18, 1880) of Sir Francis Lycett, late of No. 18, Highbury-grove, who died on Oct. 29 last, was proved on the 13th ult. by Dame Emily Sarah Amelia Lycett, the widow and acting executrix, the personal estate being sworn under £200,000. Messrs. Robert Reaveley Glover, John Riley, and William Bickerstaff, the other executors named in the will, who have power reserved to them to prove hereafter, should they think fit to do so, are appointed trustees. The testator bequeaths to his wife £1000, and all his furniture, plate (except his silver trowels), pictures, and effects; she is to have the possession of the silver trowels for life, and at her death they are given to his nephew, Goodwin Lucas Nash; £24,000, or such other part as may remain unpaid of the sum of £50,000, which he consented to contribute, to the Wesleyan Metropolitan Chapel Building Fund; £5000, or such other part of a sum of £10,000 as may remain unpaid, which he consented to contribute, to the Wesleyan Provincial Chapel Building Fund for the erection of chapels in villages and small towns; and there are legacies to his trustees, nephews, nieces, butler, coachman, gardener, and others. The residue of the personalty (except chattels real) he leaves upon trust for his wife for life, and at her death, among other bequests, he gives £15,000 to the children of his late nephew Lucas Ednam Nash, and £15,000 to the children of his late niece Mary Sophia Woodward; also the following charitable legacies—viz., £5000 to the Wesleyan Missionary Society; £2000 each to the Lees Wesleyan School, Cambridge, the British and Foreign Bible Society, the Home Wesleyan Missionary Society, and the London City Missionary Society; £1000 each to the Worn-Out Preachers' Fund and the Theological Institution, Richmond, Surrey, both in connection with the Wesleyan Methodist Society, and to the Wesleyan Westminster Normal Institution; £500 each to the Theological Institutions at Didsbury, Lancashire, and Headingley, Leeds, Yorkshire, in connection with the Wesleyan Methodist Society, the Stranger's Friend Society in London (of which Mr. James Budgett is treasurer), the Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest at York-place, West Brompton, the Royal Hospital for Incurables, Putney, the Asylum for Idiots, Earlswood, the Reedham Asylum, Caterham, the Haverstock-hill Orphan School, King's-cross Hospital, and the Victoria Park Hospital for Diseases of the Chest; £200 each to the Free Hospital Gray's-inn-road, the Commercial Travellers' School at Pinner, the Infant Orphan Asylum, Wanstead, Essex, St. Ann's Society Schools, Brixton, the Cancer Hospital, Brompton, the Warehousemen and Clerks' Schools at Caterham, the Alexandra Orphanage, Hornsey-rise, the Home for Little Boys, Farningham, the British Orphan Schools, Mackenzie Park, near Slough, Bucks, and the Orphan Asylum, Watford, Herts; and £100 each to the Hospital of St. Mary, Paddington, and the Truss Society, Queen-street, Cheapside. The ultimate residue of this fund is to be divided between the Wesleyan Metropolitan Chapel Building Fund and the Wesleyan Provincial Chapel Building Fund for the erection of chapels in villages and small towns, in the proportion of two thirds to the former and one third to the latter, but no part thereof is to be laid out in the purchase of land.

The will (dated July 1, 1875) with a codicil (dated Feb. 18, 1878) of Field Marshal Sir Charles Yorke, G.C.B, Constable of the Tower of London, Colonel Commandant of the Rifle Brigade, who died on Nov. 20 last, at his residence, No. 27, South-street, Grosvenor-square, was proved on the 6th ult. by the Rev. Evan Yorke Nepean, the nephew, Major-General William Parke, C.B., and John Davis Sherston, the nephew, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £90,000. The testator gives liberal legacies to his servants; £1000 to his niece, Mrs. Anna Maria Parke; the sword presented to General Sir John Moore by the Commanding Officers of Reserve of the Army of Egypt to J. Carrick Moore; and the residue of his property, as to one fourth to his said nephew, the Rev. E. Y. Nepean, one fourth to the said Major-General Parke, and the remaining two fourths to the said John Davis Sherston.

The will (dated Feb. 20, 1880) of Lord Francis Nathaniel Conyngham, late of No. 112, Piccadilly, and of Muirshiel, Lochurmoch, Renfrewshire, who died on Sept. 14 last, was proved on the 3rd ult. by Sir Theodore Henry Brinckman, Bart., and William Henry Saltwell, the executors, the personal estate in the United Kingdom being sworn under £35,000. The testator leaves to his executors £300 each; to his steward, Mr. Methven, of Muirshiel, an annuity of £50; and the residue of his property, real and personal, upon trust for his nephew, Cyril Henry Edward Lambart. The deceased, who was a Lieutenant in the Royal Navy, was the second son of the second Marquis of Conyngham.

The will (dated Nov. 21, 1874) of Mr. Henry Brown, late of Stuart-street, Luton, Beds, who died on Sept. 7 last, was proved on Nov. 25 by Henry Brown and William Wright Brown, the sons, and Henry Southall, the executors, the personal estate being affirmed under £30,000. The testator makes ample provision for his wife, for his daughter, Mrs. Louisa Southall, and for the widow and children of his deceased son Richard Brown; and there are specific gifts of property to each of his two sons. The residue of his real and personal estate he divides between his said sons.

The will (dated Nov. 1, 1876) with a codicil (dated July 27, 1877) of Mr. Charles Boor, late of Wimborne Minister, Dorset, who died on Oct. 27 last, was proved on Nov. 22 by John Gore Porter, Henry Oakley Chislett, and Thomas Lodder, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £25,000.

The will (dated Nov. 23, 1878) of Mr. George Constantine Edgar Bacon, banker, of Ipswich, who died on the 13th ult. at No. 1, Brunswick-square, Brighton, was proved on the 4th ult. by Mrs. Harriet Bacon, the widow and sole executrix, the personal estate being sworn under £25,000. The testator bequeaths £3500 to the incumbent and churchwardens for the time being of the parish of Saint Mary-le-Towers, Ipswich, upon trust, to invest same, and pay the dividends thereof, half yearly for ever hereafter, to the incumbent for the time being of the said parish; and all the residue of his property he leaves to his wife absolutely.

CHLORODYNE.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S COUGHS, ASTHMA, COLDS, BRONCHITIS, &c.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.

This wonderful remedy was discovered by Dr. J. Collis Browne, and the word Chlorodyne coined by him expressly to designate it. There never has been a remedy so vastly beneficial to suffering humanity, and it is a subject of deep concern to the public that they should not be imposed upon by having imitations pressed upon them on account of cheapness and as being the same thing. Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne is a totally distinct thing from the spurious compounds called Chlorodyne, the use of which only ends in disappointment and failure.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—The Vice-Chancellor Sir W. Page Wood stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. Collis Browne was undoubtedly the inventor of Chlorodyne; that the whole story of the trial was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See the "Times," July 13, 1864.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages pain of every kind, affords a calm and refreshing sleep without headache, and invigorates the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the GREAT SPECIFIC for CHOLERA, DYSENTERY, DIARRHŒA.

Earl Russell communicated to the College of Physicians that he had received a despatch from her Majesty's Consul at Manilla to the effect that cholera had been raging fearfully, and that the only remedy of any service was Chlorodyne.—See "Lancet," Dec. 31, 1864.

The General Board of Health, London, reports that it acts as a charm. One dose generally sufficient.

Dr. Gibbon, Army Medical Staff Calcutta, states:—"Two doses completely cured me of diarrhœa."

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the true palliative in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

From Dr. B. J. Boulton and Co., Hernestaie. "We have made pretty extensive use of Chlorodyne in our practice lately, and look upon it as an excellent direct sedative and anti-spasmodic. It seems to allay pain and irritation in whatever organ, and from whatever cause. It induces a feeling of comfort and quietude not obtainable by any other remedy, and it seems to possess this great advantage over all other sedatives, that it leaves no unpleasant after effects."

IMPORTANT CAUTION. The immense sale of this remedy has given rise to many unscrupulous imitations.

N.B.—Every bottle of genuine Chlorodyne bears on the Government stamp the name of the inventor.

CARPETS, Furniture, Bedding, Drapery, Furnishing Ironmongery, China, Glass, Paper Hangings, Pictures, Bronzes, Clocks, Pianos, &c., and every other requisite for completely furnishing a house throughout. Lowest prices consistent with guaranteed quality. OETZMANN and CO.

THE FACT CANNOT BE TOO GENERALLY MADE KNOWN THAT OETZMANN and CO. are still selling CARPETS AT EXTRAORDINARILY LOW PRICES.—O. and Co., having (at the period of greatest depression) foreseen that an advance in cost was imminent, placed large contracts with manufacturers of the highest repute for a supply of the NEWEST and BEST PATTERNS of the present season. The great advance which has since taken place in price of wool has necessitated successive advances in the Cost of Carpets. Quotations would give no adequate idea of the real cheapness at which O. and Co. are thus enabled to sell; they therefore respectfully solicit an early visit of inspection. It will be found that they are selling All-Wool Kidderminster at 6d. to 8d., Tapestry, 7d. to 9d., and BEST FIVE-FRAMED BRUSSELS at 1s. 3d. per yard below present value. CO-OPERATIVE STORES, PUBLIC INSTITUTIONS, CLUBS, SHIPPERS, HOTEL-KEEPERS, and large BUYERS will find great advantages in purchasing from this stock.—OETZMANN and CO.

TURKISH PASTILS.

"Through all my travels few things astonished me more than seeing the beauties of the harem smoking Narghiles at Stamboul. After smoking a sweet aromatic lozenge or pastil is used by them, which is said to impart an odour of flowers to the breath. I have never seen these breath lozenges but once in Europe, and that was at PIESSE and LUBIN'S shop in Bond-street."—Lady W. Montagu.

In Boxes, 2s.; by post, 2s. 2d.
2, NEW BOND-STREET, LONDON.

PALACE SOAP.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, JANUARY 8, 1881.

"What of the Transvaal?" is the question which the thoughtful inhabitants of Great Britain have most frequently put to each other since Christmas down to the opening of Parliament, on Thursday last. Lord Carnarvon's scheme of annexation has issued in an unexpected disaster. It may have been a wise and politic measure—though this, we see, is contested by Earl Grey in the Nineteenth Century, and on seemingly reasonable grounds; but it was carried into effect too brusquely, too inconsiderately, in a word, too imperiously, to allow of its securing the good results which might have been anticipated for it. Thus it happens occasionally in all walks of life, private and public. We pinch the unripe fruit to bring it to earlier maturity, and instead of ripening it rots. There may be little in the conduct of the Boers to commend it or them to sympathising admiration. They may have dealt unjustly and rapaciously with their Kaffir neighbours. They may have woefully mismanaged their own internal Government, and by their mismanagement evoked dangerous conditions for English colonists. Their ill habits cause mischief, not to themselves only, but to others who were guiltless of all responsibility for their proceedings. But, at any rate, they were an independent people, and professed to set a high value upon that independence. The methods by which the Transvaal was handed over to British Power, when closely examined, prove to have been unfair and high-handed. It left a permanently bad impression upon the Boers which they did not conceal. They gave us fair warning that they would attempt to regain their self-government, and, if we may so describe it, their national independence, even by force if necessary. They have made good their words, and they are virtually in possession of the country which they regard as their own. British authority scarcely exists in the Transvaal beyond the narrow spaces somewhat precariously held by British troops. For some six weeks to come, the Republic will remain master of the situation. One serious calamity has already overtaken a portion of our troops. A military surprise has caused the loss of many lives, and has, for the moment, lowered the prestige of the Queen's Army in South Africa. Such is the latest Christmas gift presented to us.

In a mere military point of view, the incidents to which we have adverted, although lamentable, need not be looked at with despondency. They are far less important, for instance, than was the Indian Mutiny of 1857. The stake at issue is incomparably smaller than they were then; the chances against us are incomparably fewer. But the insurrection not only comes at an inconvenient time, inasmuch as it distracts attention from affairs nearer home; but it presents elements with which it may be found difficult to deal when the insurgent spirit has been ultimately repressed. Of course, there is a hurry hither and thither of troops; a gathering of transports; a busy time in our chief arsenals; a sudden departure of military men for what is called the seat of war. All this we may have looked for, and for all this we shall be called upon hereafter to pay. But when the sword has done its work (if, indeed, the edge of it must be tested) what then? Are we to have a second Ireland in South Africa? Are we to govern a Dutch population quite irrespectively of Dutch ideas? Shall we once more make the mistake of under-estimating the force of traditional sentiment, and of raising to supremacy the maxim of "iron and blood"? We trust not. We see no reason for making a desolation in the Transvaal and calling it peace. We see no reason for exciting in the minds of the descendants of Dutch forefathers in South Africa a sense of humiliation, or for rousing a feeling of latent hatred. If we are but willing to give up pretensions which we can hardly be said to have yet established, our relations with the Transvaal Boers may be adjusted upon a basis as honourable to ourselves as it is passionately desired by them. Their Proclamation indicates (all the circumstances being taken into account) a moderation of temper hardly to have been expected. As summarised by the correspondent of the Daily News, the following are the terms offered to British authority on the assumption that the independence of the Transvaal is recognised—Forgiveness to all opponents; the retention of their position by all existing officials; the admission of a British Consul to the Republic; the sanctioning of all public expenditure during annexation; the adoption of arbitration with the Natives, and the prosecution of a Native policy, with the advice of the other States; and, lastly, a proposal for confederation. No doubt, there are objections to be taken—perhaps, valid objections—to the acceptance of these terms en bloc—especially under the conditions subject to which they have been offered. But they certainly show, at any rate, if they may be fairly trusted, that there are other elements to be worked upon in the disposition of the Transvaal Boers, beyond and above that of simple fanatical hatred to English rule. They have some foresight, these rugged Dutch settlers. They have also some prudence and power of self-restraint. They must know that their insurrection cannot be permanently successful, and that, although they have successfully crossed swords with British power, their resources, as compared with those of the Empire, are so pitifully scanty as to avail nothing for their permanent advantage. Meanwhile, England may well ask herself some pertinent questions. What does she want with the Transvaal? It adds nothing to her glory. Its annexation to her territories is not demanded by justice. All that she professes, or has professed, to be concerned in obtaining by annexation may be obtained otherwise, and, if obtained without the shedding of blood, will be so much the better for humanity. It will not do for her, in dealing with semi-barbarian tribes, or with European settlers of foreign extraction not very far exalted above them, to stand rigidly upon points of political etiquette. A slight concession now may have a more beneficial effect upon all parties than a much larger concession after a long interval of angry estrangement. We may have in this, as in a more important case, to exhibit force enough to suppress organised opposition; but it is quite true, and, we believe, her Majesty's Government fully appreciate the truth, that "force is no remedy." We may have to restrain the patient whilst we are engaged in healing his malady; but the process of restriction should be as little harmful as possible, and should never be mistaken for that of cure.

Doubtless, the whole subject will come before Parliament at an early period of the Session. Events will force it upon the attention of the Legislature. It needs a full discussion—a discussion from which even the Colonial Office may derive some suitable suggestions applicable not to the Transvaal only, but also to the affairs of other Colonial provinces. It is no Party question, and we hope it will not be debated in a Party spirit.

According to a kindly custom which has prevailed on the first Sunday of the New Year for the past eleven years, about 1000 of the poorest inhabitants of the neighbourhood of Gray's-yard were on Sunday treated to what is known in the locality as the "annual breakfast." The gathering took place in the building which serves the purposes of church and schools, in a court branching off James-street, Oxford-street, known as Gray's-yard Ragged Church.

Lord Rosebery, at his half-yearly audit, remitted 15 per cent of the rents due from all the tenants on his Buckinghamshire estates; Sir Thomas C. C. Western, Bart., has given notice to the tenants of his estates in Essex and Suffolk that he intends to return them 10 per cent on their half years' rent; and at the recent rent audits of Lord Donington 15 per cent was returned to all tenants on his Lordship's estates in Leicestershire and Derbyshire. This is the fourth audit at which the same amount has been returned.

The revenue returns show that the gross receipts during the past quarter have amounted to £19,539,664, being a net increase of £923,107. There is an increase in every branch except that of miscellaneous receipts, which shows a falling off of £35,039. The principal items of increase are:—Excise, £240,000; stamps, £380,000; property and income tax, £174,000; and post-office and telegraph service, £77,000. During the past nine months the revenue shows a net increase of £2,025,335, which is spread over every branch except the Customs.

The West-End Hospital for Diseases of the Nervous System, Paralysis, and Epilepsy, Welbeck-street, celebrated the New Year by giving an entertainment to the children undergoing treatment either within its walls or at the hands of the medical staff. After tea, to which the mothers were also invited, an adjournment was made to the floor above, where the electrical apparatus is erected, including the largest medical battery in Europe. But on this occasion science as represented by galvanic batteries was subordinate to pleasure in the form of a giant Christmas-tree, presented by the Countess of Dudley. After the distribution of toys, the children were delighted with the wonders of a magic lantern.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

I do not offer any apology for having been as yet wholly silent on the subject of the death of the famous English writer known as "George Eliot;" but some little explanation of the reasons for my reticence on a topic which has moved lettered society so deeply may not be out of place, here. Purely mechanical causes connected with the production of this Journal precluded me from giving last week even an obituary notice of the illustrious writer of "Adam Bede;" and meanwhile, all that I could have feebly said in eulogy of the splendid genius of the greatest female writer of fiction that England has produced, was said, most eloquently and most forcibly, in the Times, in the Saturday Review, and in the Pall Mall Gazette.

As for any biographical details concerning "George Eliot," I had absolutely none to give. I never saw her, as as Miss Marion Evans, as Mrs. G. L. Lewes, or as Mrs. Cross. And I have known but very few persons indeed (among a tolerably wide acquaintance, extending over thirty years) who knew her intimately. I remember, in 1866, I think, at Venice, asking Mr. George Meredith, the author of the "Shaving of Shagpat," and many novels, whether he had ever seen the writer of "Silas Marner," and "The Mill on the Floss." He told me that he was acquainted with the lady, and gave a graphic description of her. I recall, in particular, his mention of the peculiarly fascinating expression of her eye. For the rest, there my knowledge ended. In 1860, I used to meet Mr. G. H. Lewes at the memorable "Cornhill" dinners, at which Mr. George Smith was wont to entertain the contributors to the Cornhill Magazine—Thackeray, Browning, Leighton, Millais, Anthony Trollope, Field Marshal Sir John Burgoyne, Edwin Landseer, John Oxenford, of such was the staple of the guests;—but I never met the author of "Romola."

And, on the whole, only a very small number of professional people of letters seem to have been cognisant of the individuality of "George Eliot." She was, after a manner, an abstraction, an impalpability. No photographs of her, to my knowledge, were ever visible in the shop windows. Her name appeared on no committee lists, nor in connection with any literary or social enterprise. The scant biography of her published in "Men of the Time" turned out, at her death, to be altogether erroneous; yet the inaccuracies were never authoritatively contradicted during her lifetime. That she had been Miss Evans; that she had contributed to the Westminster Review, and translated Strauss's "Leben Jesu;" that she was the authoress of the "Scenes from Clerical Life," and of the novels which have gained for her imperishable fame: this was substantially the sum of all that was known touching the gifted woman who occupied even a higher place in English literature than George Sand did in the literature of France. Even now that she is no more—apart from exhaustive essays on her style—not much is known about her, personally, than that she was fond of attending the Monday Popular Concerts. The last hope of those who are (legitimately) curious to know what manner of woman George Eliot was lies in the contingency of her having maintained an extensive correspondence with a select few among distinguished philosophers and men of letters, and of that correspondence one day seeing the light. But we—or our nephews—may have to wait twenty years before the letters of "George Eliot," if she have left any, are published.

Which is your favourite among her novels? "Romola" I never read, for the strongest of reasons. I read it no more than I read, "Framley Parsonage" or the "Studies in Animal Life," or than I read "The Adventures of Philip," until that last named work appeared in a completed form. I was writing myself in the "Cornhill" when "Romola" was begun, and I have an invincible repugnance to reading a magazine in which anything of my own is published. So I used to look at Mr. Millais's pictures to "Framley Parsonage" and Sir Leighton's illustrations to "Romola," and leave the letterpress unread. I think that it is honester to make a full confession of the books of which you have no knowledge than to boast of the paper-knife smattering which you may have picked up about them in reviews.

A very pleasant and novel feature in the Era Almanack and Annual for 1881, which I have just seen, is the section devoted to a collection of pretty and graceful pen-and-ink sketches, reproduced by one of the "processes," and bearing the generic title, "How Actors Draw." In some twenty pages full of animation some of our leading dramatic artists exhibit their talent for "drawing," not in a professional or box, pit, and gallery filling sense, but graphically. Mrs. Keeley, who, as Mr. Edward Ledger, the editor of the Era Almanack, cogently remarks, has every right to be considered a veteran draughtswoman, seeing that she first drew breath some seventy-five years ago, heads the list of contributors to the "Eratic" Art Gallery with a pretty "land and water scape" called "A Bad Reflection." But it is a very good one, dear Mrs. Keeley. Miss Kathleen Compton, again, writes, "Dear Mr. Ledger; please, I can't;" but Miss Compton can, for she has drawn a feminine hand holding a quill pen most deftly. Mr. Arthur Pinero's sketch, "M. Alfred Meynard" in the "Corsican Brothers," at the Lyceum, is a very droll caricature; and real technical excellence, in the Caldecott cum Kate Greenaway style, is shown in Miss Nellie Hatherly's full-length figure of a milkmaid. Mr. Luke Fildes should look to his laurels. Miss Hatherly's maid that carries the milking-pail treads on the pretty heels of the famous "Betty."

Mr. Kendal has produced a sketch of his own head as William in "Black-Eyed Susan" which puzzles me. Hitherto I had thought that the accomplished co-manager of the St. James's was of the purest Saxon extraction, and that William, whom he recently so admirably impersonated, was likewise a Briton born; but in Mr Kendal's drawing his complexion is that of a dusky Ethiopian. The William of the Almanack may be defined as "an arrangement in Nubian blacking." Mr. Maltby, Miss Ella Dietz, Mr. Celli, Miss Louise Moodie, Mr. Henry Neville, Mr. Kyrle Bellew, Miss Geneviève Ward, Mr. Howard Paul, Miss Carlotta Leclercq, and Miss Maud Milton are, among others, conspicuous by their artistic talent; and Mr. J. L. Toole closes the procession of "scenic artists" with an outrageously droll scrawl of "A Roman Cottage" and "A Roman Head."

Although I am very frequently accused of egotism because, writing these "Echoes" in the first person singular, I say "I" and not "We," I do not think anyone will charge me with an attempt to puff any book or books which in bygone years I may have written. Indeed, it is with the extremest rarity that I ever allude to these performances of the past; and as most of my books are out of print and nearly all of them must be completely forgotten, the younger generation of my readers very probably know me only as "the compiler of a column of gossip" in this journal, and are unaware that some twenty years ago I was, in a small way, an author. It happens, however, that so cruel (although I have not the least doubt innocent) an act of literary injustice has been done to me by the compiler of a book which has had and is having an enormous circulation, that I am constrained to write these few lines in self vindication.

The work to which I refer is a large volume of nearly seven hundred pages, entitled "Many Thoughts of Many Minds," being "selections from the writings of the most celebrated authors, from the earliest to the present time," compiled and analytically arranged by Henry Southgate. The edition of which I have a copy is dated 1875, and bears on the titlepage "Twenty-Fifth Thousand." This immense issue has, apparently, been exhausted; for, only the other day, I saw a new edition advertised. At page 138 I find quoted, under the head of "Custom-House Officers—Different Manners of," a passage of forty-two solid lines of prose, the authorship of which is ascribed to the late Mr. Charles Dickens. Every word in the passage is of my writing, and the extract is taken bodily from a book of mine, called "A Journey Due North," which was published by Mr. Bentley some two-and-twenty years ago. The apology of the compiler will probably be that he cut the quotation from "Household Words," in which "A Journey Due North" originally appeared as a series of anonymous essays; but the passage which he has appropriated and ascribed to the wrong writer happens to occur in a description of the Custom House at St. Petersburg; and surely one might expect the gentleman with the scissors and paste-pot to have known that Mr. Dickens was never in Russia in his life.

I call attention to this simply for the reason that—drawing the line only at the edition of 1875—I have manifestly been wronged five-and-twenty thousand times over; and, giving to each copy of such a work of reference as "Many Thoughts of Many Minds" the very moderate average of eight readers, it follows that two hundred thousand persons may be labouring under the impression that Mr. Charles Dickens, and not the present writer, is the author of the passage in question. The blunder is, moreover, an injury to the memory of an illustrious English writer, who would never have penned such at turgid, slovenly piece of verbinge as I find the description of the Russian Custom House to be now.

Some weeks ago I half inadvertently and half intentionally misquoted a famous couplet in "Hudibras," giving it the commonly erroneous form—

> The man convinced against his will,
> Is of the same opinion still.

A strong contingent of students of "Hudibras" (or of Dictionaries of Quotations) at once rushed forward to correct me; and I am very much obliged to them all. I will not give the correct quotation here, preferring to send my readers to "Hudibras" itself—a most salutary expedition. But when I say that the misquotation was half intentional, I mean that, all paradoxical as it may seem, that state of mind is quite comprehensible in which we are "convinced" against our will, and yet are "of the same opinion still;" and it is probably in consequence of the frequency of such a mental condition that an erroneous sense is given to Butler's verses.

For example, take the case of "wheat meal" or "whole meal" bread, about which a mild agitation is in progress just now. I find in my common-place books numerous extracts made years ago from Dr. Pereira, Dr. Paris, Mr. Todd, and other authorities on Food and Diet, respecting the nutritive qualities of brown bread as against "fine white bread;" but the movement against the latter has lately taken a tangible form in the shape of a "Bread Reform League," composed of lady and gentlemen philanthropists, who are anxious that our bread should be made not from fine white wheaten flour, but from the meal, the whole meal, and nothing but the meal. Of this League Miss Yates, a member of the Ladies' Sanitary Association, is the zealous honorary secretary, and she has lectured and spoken at conferences, and addressed letters to the newspapers conclusively demonstrating that "whole meal" bread—which differs considerably from brown bread, is the most wholesome and nutritious form of the staff of life—and that after a little education of the popular taste such whole meal bread would be found the most palatable.

But prejudice, Miss Yates. Do you know any oak that throws out stronger roots than prejudice does? The arguments of the Bread Reform Leaguers (who are wholly uncommercial, and are actuated solely by socially philanthropic motives) seem calculated to carry conviction to the most obdurate minds. Professor Church, in his standard work on "Food," has told us that the great superiority of whole meal over white flour consists in the much larger proportion of bone-forming substances which the whole meal contains—namely, 1·7 of mineral matter, whereas white flour only contains 0·7; and the illustrious Liebig further states that whole meal contains 200 per cent more phosphatic salts than the white flour. And it is these phosphatic salts, the Leaguers tell us, which form bones and flesh, and nourish the brain, nerves, and tissues.

Are you convinced? Alas! I am afraid that in vast numbers of instances people will be convinced against their will, and (justifying the popular paradox, which I quoted as from "Hudibras") remain "of the same opinion still." It is mainly a question of colour. Foremost among the civilised nations, the English, the Americans, and the French insist on giving pre-eminence to bread of unsmirched whiteness. I wonder whether the prejudice in favour of "fine white bread" will be broken down in my time. I have witnessed the signal failure of attempts to persuade the community at large to accept lentils and haricots as staple articles of diet; to beguile them into eating horseflesh; to induce the working man to drink cheap claret; and the Irish to vary their rations of potatoes by a diet of maize or Indian corn. In all these cases prejudice has proved to be stronger than reason and common-sense.

Blanqui is dead. The arch-conspirator, who was the son of Dominique Blanqui, a member of the French Council of Five Hundred, and may be said to have been born with Revolutionary blood in his veins, was seventy-five years of age, and was born at Nice, the birthplace of a far nobler Revolutionist, Garibaldi. So soon as he came to man's estate (possibly he had been a conspirator against the ushers at school) he began to conspire; and he was wounded in a street-revolt in Paris so far back as 1827. He fought again in the Revolution of July, 1830. He was one of the most active propagators of the doctrines which led to the Revolution of 1848. He was suspected of complicity with the Corsican Fieschi, who, with Pepin and Morey, attempted the assassination of Louis Philippe by means of an "Infernal Machine" (the mitrailleuse and the Gatling gun have been invented since Fieschi's time). He was a member of the "Society of the Seasons" and the "Montagnards." He was implicated in the insurrection organised by Barbès in 1839. He compassed and headed an armed revolt against the Republic which he had helped to make in 1848. He conspired against the Empire and against the Republic of 1871. I only wonder that he did not conspire against the Commune. Possibly he did. At least one half of his long, acrimonious, and mischievous life was passed in gaol. Ultimately, after his release from the prison of Clairvaux, he appears to have taken to conspiring against himself by publishing a journal of which the very title was an outrage to religious feeling. A very strange, "uncanny" personage the late Louis Auguste Blanqui. His private character was, I believe, blameless, and even amiable. He appears, also, to have been a man of some erudition, considerably versed in the mathematics, and much given to astronomical investigations. Fancy studying the planets from between the iron bars of a dungeon window!

The Paris Figaro paid poor old Blanqui the equivocal compliment of publishing a long biographical notice of him, roundly abusing him into the bargain, while he was on his death-bed. "Before these lines are in print," wrote the amiable ante-mortem Examiner, "Blanqui will probably be no more." The public were then informed that the man who had not yet breathed his last gasp had been a traitor to his fellow-contributors, and was, on the whole, a very bad man.

Last Monday night, after I had witnessed the magnificent performance of Mr. Tennyson's "Cup" at the Lyceum, I crossed the Bridge of Waterloo—no longer a Bridge of Sighs, but of Smiles elicited by the abolition of the tolls—and betook myself to an establishment which was once known as "The Vic":—Queen Victoria's Own Theayter," indeed, as celebrated by Mrs. Brown, and formerly known as the Cobourg. Its name was changed to the Victoria in consequence of the theatre having been once honoured by a visit from her Majesty when Princess Victoria.

Social philanthropy has taken possession of the "Vic," which is now known as the Royal Victoria Coffee and Music Hall. A commodious coffee-tavern is attached to the hall, and the Limited Company of which, I believe, Mr. Ernest Hart is chairman, seem to be resolved to do everything in their power to minister to the amusement of the people in connection with the cause of Temperance. Obviously, nothing of an alcoholic nature is sold in the building; but smoking is permitted in all parts of the house. I was able to stop only a very short time in the balcony-stall, for admission to which I paid two shillings; and I regret the compulsory brevity of my stay all the more because the portion of the entertainment which I witnessed was certainly not one calling for favourable comment. I heard a very long, stupid, and vulgar comic song and recitation—or songs and recitations, for the singer was repeatedly encored, and was continually returning to the stage, and "breaking out in a fresh place" about Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. An incidental allusion to the Father of Mankind "coming home from a dog-fight," did not strike me as particularly witty or decorous; nor did I sympathise with the subsequent roars of laughter which greeted a recitation descriptive of the passion of Love, which struck me as being both dull and coarse. The rest of the programme read well, "Splendid Ballad Vocalists," "Silver Chime Carillonneurs and Ocarina Quintette," "American Comiques," "Wonderful Equilibrists, Juggler and Barrel Artists," "Roman Gladiators with Lime Light effects," "Mr. Arthur Lloyd, the renowned Author, Composer, and Comic Vocalist," "Walter Thornbury (poor Walter Thornbury!), the Lightning Cartoonist, who in one minute will sketch the Ocean with Ship in full sail and Captain Webb Swimming," and last, not least, the "Jolly Nash;" all this gave promise of furnishing forth an adequate music-hall entertainment. The hall (which is handsomely decorated) was fairly filled with a very well-behaved audience. The demand for refreshments did not appear to be very extensive. I sincerely hope that this well-meant experiment may prove successful; yet, from experience of the performances of The People's Entertainment Society, I am inclined to think that the audience at the "Vic" would understand and appreciate vocal music of a refined order quite as well, if not better, than they do coarse and stupid "comic" songs about "Adam and Eve," and the like. I should add that there is a capital band of instrumentalists at the Royal Victoria Music-Hall.

TWELFTH-NIGHT CHARACTERS.

Four-and-twenty individual figures, arranged in three rows, present themselves, each in his or her characteristic attitude, as designed by Mr. F. Barnard, to challenge the discernment of parties meeting for the seasonable mirth of "Twelfth Night; or, What You Will." The "King of Hearts" is Mr. Percy Vere, and Miss Ogle is the "Queen of Hearts," these two being manifestly intent upon exercising their personal fascinations to win dominion over the largest possible number of subjects, belonging to the opposite sex. Those following compose a long train of social varieties, oddities, and eccentricities, which may be met with not only on Twelfth Night, but any night or day of the twelvemonth. The energetic gestures and declamatory voice of the barrister, Mr. Wigan Gowan, are daily engaged, for a competent fee, in advocating good or bad cases at some of our Law Courts. Miss T. Ann Bunn Fyte, the indefatigable patroness of all manner of parish and congregational tea-parties, and a very charitable lady, is always prepared to sell us a few tickets for the next entertainment of that sort. The next two couples are very well matched; Mr. Crutchpick Tooth is worthy of Miss Catchfool, and their courtship goes on quite easily over the bar counter in the refreshment-room. Miss Flora Parson Someday has already got the portrait of the Rev. R. Arthur Rye Church suspended in her room; and she is making suspenders for the original, against his early capture. In the second row of characters, besides one or two notable in private society, we recognise the medical swell, the military swell, and two or three London actors and actresses, or public singers, performing their favourite parts. The third line begins with a pair of skaters, a gentleman and a lady, one of whom, at least, has attained some degree of skill in practice on the spacious pond at the Welsh Harp, Hendon. A certain Indian Native Prince, long since naturalised in England, will at once be recognised by those who have seen him, though a slight liberty has been taken with his proper name. Farther on, we meet with an hospital doctor and an hospital nurse, who turn their backs on each other with strong expressions of mutual dislike. The gouty old gentleman, Sir Bunyan Abercorn, is a perfect contrast to the ballet-dancer in the matter of tripping it on the light fantastic toe. Many of our readers, even without the aid of the significant names invented for these characters, would have no difficulty in identifying some of the persons meant, or the incidents to which they playfully allude.

THE IRISH STATE TRIALS.

The trial of fourteen leaders of the Irish Land League, which began on the Tuesday of last week in the Court of Queen's Bench at Dublin, has been continued every day since, except last Saturday and Sunday. The defendants, or "traversers" as they are styled in this Court, are Messrs. Charles Stewart Parnell, M.P.; Thomas Sexton, M.P.; Thomas Brennan, secretary of the Land League; Patrick Egan, hon. treasurer of the Land League; T. D. Sullivan, M.P.; John Dillon, M.P.; Joseph Gillis Biggar, M.P.; Michael O'Sullivan, assistant secretary of the Land League; Michael Boyton, Patrick Joseph Gordon, Matthew Harris, John W. Mally, John W. Walsh, and P. J. Sheridan.

The indictment charges these persons with a conspiracy, first, to impoverish and injure the owners of farms let to tenants for rent; secondly, conspiracy to impede and frustrate the administration of justice, and the execution of legal writs for levying of moneys due for rent, or for recovery of land on non-payment of rent; thirdly, conspiracy to prevent the taking of any farm from which a tenant has been evicted; fourthly and lastly, conspiracy to excite discontent and disaffection among the Queen's subjects, with ill-will and hostility between different classes—that is to say, between landlords and tenants in Ireland. The unlawful means of this conspiracy are particularly described. They are stated to be, the soliciting and procuring large numbers of tenants to refuse payment of rents due; deterring them from paying rent by threatening them with public hatred and contempt, with exclusion from social intercourse and business; with annoyance and injury, and with violence to their persons and property; also, procuring an agreement to frustrate the sale of goods lawfully seized for rent; and instigating tenants who were evicted to resist the execution of the law, and to retake possession of the farms. Menaces and acts of violence are said to have been used, to the great terror and alarm of the landlords, and "against the peace of our Sovereign Lady the Queen, her Crown and dignity." There are nineteen counts in the indictment.

The following counsel are engaged in the case:—For the Crown—The Attorney-General for Ireland, Mr. Hugh Law, the Solicitor-General, Mr. Serjeant Heron, Q.C., Mr. John Naish, Q.C. (Law Adviser), Mr. David Ross, Q.C., Mr. James Murphy, Q.C., Mr. A. M. Porter, Q.C., and Mr. Constantine Molloy (instructed by Mr. William Lane Joynt, Crown and Treasury Solicitor). For the defendants — Mr. Francis Macdonogh, Q.C., Mr. Samuel Walker, Q.C., Mr. W. M'Laughlin, Q.C., Mr. Peter O'Brien, Q.C., Mr. John Curran, Mr. F. Nolan, Mr. Richard Adams, Mr. L. P. Dillon, Mr. A. M. Sullivan, M.P. (instructed by Messrs. V. B. Dillon and Co.)

The Judges engaged in this trial are Mr. Justice Fitzgerald and Mr. Justice Barry, since Lord Chief Justice May voluntarily left his seat on the Bench. The special jury consists of twelve Dublin citizens, mostly tradesmen—namely, Mr. J. R. Corcoran, a corn merchant, foreman, and Messrs. W. Hopkins, Hurse, Hughes, Bircury, Tyrrell, Crosby, Mitchell, Webb, N. Hopkins, Macken, and Higgins. Eight of these are Roman Catholics, three Protestants, and one a Quaker.

The city of Dublin was perfectly quiet on the day of the commencement of this trial, but special arrangements had been made to prevent any disturbance. The garrison, which includes battalions of the Scots Guards stationed at the Linen Hall and Ship-street Barracks, the Coldstream Guards at Richmond, the 47th at Beggar's-bush, the Scots Greys at the Royal, and the 19th Hussars at Island Bridge, were closely confined to barracks. In front of the Four Courts, on Dublin Quay, was a large detachment of mounted police. A strong force was massed in the court-yard and in the Circular Hall, under the command of Captain Talbot, the Chief Commissioner of Police, and the Assistant-Commissioner, Colonel Connolly, aided by a host of superintendents and inspectors. The approaches to the Court of Queen's Bench were protected by barricades, guarded by constables. A large force, commanded by Inspector Thorpe, was stationed within the Court.

Long before the opening of the proceedings, the court, which is smaller than the court at Westminster, but loftier and better lighted, was quite crowded. The public gallery was almost entirely filled with ladies and Irish members of Parliament. About thirty representatives of daily newspapers, including several from Paris and New York, were accommodated with seats in the grand jury box. The attendance of barristers was very numerous, and some lady friends of the Sheriff had seats at the Registrar's table. At eleven o'clock the traversers, fourteen in number, entered the court and took their places opposite the counsel for the prosecution and the defence. As they passed through the crowd, which had by that time grown to a large multitude, in the streets about the courts and on the quays, many of them were loudly cheered, Mr. Parnell coming in for a special demonstration of popular favour. They were accompanied by about thirty members of the Land League, many of whom were members of Parliament.

The pleadings of the indictment were opened by Mr. David Ross, one of the counsel for the Crown. The Attorney-General, Mr. Hugh Law, then began his speech to state the case for the prosecution. He defined the law with regard to a conspiracy of this nature, and went on to narrate the proceedings of the Irish Land League since June last. He quoted speeches of Mr. Boyton, Mr. Brennan, and Mr. Walsh, who were very active in forming local branches throughout the country. These speeches abounded in gross abuse of the landlords, and in threats of making their property worthless. The speeches also of Mr. Parnell, Mr. Biggar, Mr. Dillon, and Mr. Sullivan were cited, as proving a similar intention. The establishment of the Central Committee at Dublin, in in February, and the more complete organisation of the League, were next described. Above fifty different passages of Land League speeches were referred to by the Attorney-General, which had been uttered within the past six or eight months in various parts of Ireland. It was shown that they had incessantly urged the tenants not to pay rent, and not to permit any one to pay it, or to take land from which others had been evicted, or to buy cattle which had been seized for rent. The Attorney-General finished his speech on Friday, the third day of the trial.

The attendance of spectators or general audience in Court fell off greatly after the first day, and so did the multitude of the crowd outside. Mr. Parnell and the other traversers, on leaving the Court at the end of the day's proceedings, were cheered by the people, some of whom followed Mr. Parnell's carriage as far as Grattan Bridge.

The first witness called by the Attorney-General on Friday was Mr. Alfred Mills, a short-hand writer, who took notes of the speeches of Mr. Parnell and others, at the meetings at Ennis and Kilkenny, on Sept. 19 and Oct. 2, passages of which he read to the Court and jury. He was cross-examined by Mr. Macdonogh and other counsel for the defence. On Monday two other short-hand writers, Mr. Spencer Harry and Mr. Curtis, gave similar evidence of the speeches made at Loughrea, in Galway, at Oulart, in Wexford, at Dungannon, at Belleek, and elsewhere, by Messrs. O'Sullivan, Sexton, Parnell, Biggar, Dillon, and Boyton, in September and October last. On Tuesday further extracts were read from the speeches of Mr. Dillon, in Mayo, of Mr. Sexton, at Sligo, on Nov. 28, and of Mr. Biggar, at Mullagh, county Cavan, on Dec. 12. One of the Irish police, Constable O'Rorke, also gave evidence of what Dillon and Parnell said at Irishtown, in Mayo, on May 30; and of the presence of Boyton, Walsh, and O'Sullivan, at similar meetings in that county, in Cork, Kerry, and Kildare. The witness, however, not being an expert reporter, though he could write short-hand, was put to some embarrassment in his cross-examination by counsel for the defence. The Court adjourned from Tuesday afternoon to eleven o'clock next morning.

It is expected that the trial will last three or four weeks. Our Special Artist furnishes the Sketches in Court which fill the two middle pages of this number, and one that appears on our front page, showing Mr. Parnell and other "traversers" leaving the Court.

THE IRISH LAND LEAGUE AGITATION.

On Monday night of last week, the eve of the commencement of the State Trials at Dublin, a singular performance was witnessed in the market-place of Kildare. A placard had been issued by the local branch of the Land League of Kildare, calling a meeting to be held that evening, for the purpose of publicly burning several of the Duke of Leinster's leases. It was proposed to have a torchlight procession through the town and an illumination of the town. Preparations were made for a great demonstration, and representatives of the Land League in Dublin were going to attend, when a proclamation was issued by the local authorities forbidding the procession. After an interview with the magistrates and an unsuccessful attempt to shake their resolution, the procession and illumination were abandoned. But an open-air meeting was held, which was addressed by Mr. Boyton, one of the fourteen defendants, or "traversers," who were to be tried next day in the Court of Queen's Bench at Dublin. Mr. Boyton had armed himself with an old pike, one of those wielded by the Irish rebels in the deplorable insurrection of 1793. He used this rusty weapon of treason as a kind of spit or toasting-fork, upon which he stuck a copy of the printed forms that are adopted for leases granted on the Duke of Leinster's estates, and solemnly cast it into a small bonfire kindled in the market-place. This was guarded by a number of Land League men, with torches or links, but there was no attempt to stop the proceedings, though a constabulary force was present, with Colonel Forbes, one of the local magistrates. Our Artist contributes a Sketch of this remarkable scene.

The Duke of Leinster's estates about Kildare, extending to 67,000 acres, of which the Government valuation is £47,571, but the rental 10 per cent higher, seem to be fairly and liberally managed. There are about 400 tenants, most of them holding from seventy-five to 120 acres. The landlord is accustomed to borrow from Government, at 6¼ per cent to include repayment, money wanted for building, draining, and other farm improvements, and to charge his tenants from four to 4 or 5 per cent upon this outlay, as additional rent; but he lays out £6000 or £10,000 a year of his own income upon such improvements. He also pays half the poor rate and county rate. The Leinster lease, introduced eight years ago, has been the subject of considerable discussion. In the somewhat uncertain state of law and custom regarding land tenure, the Duke now lets no land excepting under the regular printed agreement. Two or three tenants, refusing to sign, have been got rid of, and this probably occasioned the burning of the leases. Besides a somewhat similar form of yearly agreement, two forms of lease are in use on the estates—one applicable to tenancies under £50 of annual value, the other applicable to tenancies above £50. The lease enjoins maintenance and repair of buildings and fences, and imposes additional yearly rents for all permanent grass broken up for tillage, and all arable land over-cropped or used contrary to an approved course of husbandry. It interdicts subletting, assigning, or conacre, without permission of the lessor. It forbids erection of unsuitable buildings. Provision is made for the termination of the tenancy in the event of the bankruptcy of the lessee, of his breach of covenant, or of his rent being twenty-one days in arrear. The tenant covenants to take the farm under these conditions; to cultivate the land in a good and husbandman-like manner; to alternate green and corn crops; not to grow in succession two crops which ripen their seed; to repair and maintain buildings, fences, and other appurtenances; to pay rent half-yearly; to bequeath the lease to one person only; but on quitting the holding he undertakes to make no claim for compensation under any of the clauses or provisions of the Landlord and Tenant (Ireland) Act, 1870, "in respect of any money or money's worth paid or given by him on coming into said holding." For farms valued at £50 and upwards the clause relating to compensation for any premium or payment for goodwill given by the tenant on entry is omitted; but instead is introduced a provision "that the lessee shall not make any claim for compensation in respect of improvements, except improvements made with the written consent of the lessor, save and except that portion of buildings set out in the schedule hereto annexed which has been erected by the lessee." In brief, no compensation is allowed for disturbance or for improvements effected, unless with the consent of the landlord. In conformity with the provisions of the Land Act of 1870, all tenants under £50 of annual value are entitled on their going away to payments for all suitable buildings and other improvements effected by them. No interference is attempted with these claims. The unpopular clause in the indenture applicable to smaller tenancies, although it does not forbid the out-going tenant receiving a bonus from the in-comer, discountenances the latter being mulcted and burdened on his entry by heavy charges, and covenants that such charges shall not be made in future, as they sometimes have been made in the past, a claim against the landlord. Holders of land valued at more than £50 annually, presumed by the Land Act of 1870 to be able to make their own contracts, under the Leinster indenture are entitled to compensation for improvements only when effected with the permission of the landlord.

DUBLIN CHARACTER SKETCHES.

The metropolis of Ireland was founded by the Danes, eleven hundred years ago; and its re-establishment by the English, in the thirteenth century, owed nothing whatever to the native Irish element. It was never, at any time, the seat of an Irish principality. As for a native Kingdom of Ireland, no such thing is known to history, though a Celtic chieftain once reigned on the Hill of Tara, in County Meath, who is said to have fancied himself monarch of Erin; as King Arthur might have been taken for the Sovereign of Great and Little Britain; or, for the matter of that, "Old King Cole." The site of Dublin, in the Celtic age, was called Bally-ath-Cliath, which means a "town on the ford of hurdles," from a rude contrivance of that kind, instead of a bridge, to cross the tidal marshes of the Liffey. It is therefore to the Danish, and secondly to the English, settlers that Ireland is indebted for the existence of its capital city, as well as for that of Waterford, Wexford, Cork, Belfast, and even Limerick; the Celtic Irish never built anything better than villages of wooden huts.

Dublin is, nevertheless, a town of which modern Irishmen may well be proud; for it represents, brightly and pleasantly, the most agreeable characteristics of good Irish society. It has been, during more than a hundred years past—without going back to Dean Swift—a frequent birth-place and residence of Irish genius, public spirit, eloquence, wit, learning, poetry, and taste and skill in the fine arts; vying with Edinburgh in literary renown, and superior, in these respects, to all other provincial cities of the United Kingdom. Its University ranks second only to those of Oxford and Cambridge. The architecture of its public buildings, the Bank of Ireland (formerly the Irish Parliament House), Trinity College, the Custom House, the Four Courts, and the City Hall, not to speak of its two Cathedrals, presents many noble and graceful features of construction. Several of the streets and squares have a truly metropolitan grandeur. The situation of Dublin, almost on the shore of a very beautiful bay, with fine cliff scenery and the Wicklow mountains at a short distance, and with the Phœnix Park and the rich plains of Meath and Kildare behind it, may stand comparison even with that of the Scottish capital. Dublin people are lively, sociable, hospitable, clever, gay, and tolerably free from religious bigotry. All this and more is to be said in favour of Dublin.

The best of all has not yet been said; and it is that there are more pretty women in Dublin than—in some other great cities we know of, which we do not venture to name, or to say whether they lie north or south of the Tweed, in eastern counties or in western shires. That "Dublin maid," for example, whose sweet little face peeps forth in the middle of the page adorned with Mr. Harry Furniss's Sketches, is not one in a thousand, but one of a thousand to be met with anywhere and everywhere on the banks of the Liffey. This is, perhaps, the best argument for Home Rule that the Irish nation will ever be able to produce. And if they would leave it upon that ground, we might listen with complacency to their patriotic ditty. "The Wearing of the Green"—which does not refer, exactly, to the proposed National Parliament on St. Stephen's Green, but to the adoption of a national uniform and flag. The remaining Sketches are worthy of inspection as fair specimens of the manners, costumes, airs, and employments of different classes of the city and suburban populace; though it will at once be perceived that this description cannot include the grave and dignified College porters, the pupils of the Hibernian Military School, or the exquisitely polished Hansom cab-driver, imported from the West-End of London, who competes to great advantage with the "jovial Jarvey" of the old-fashioned Dublin jaunting-car.

Mr. Robert Dale, the Manager and Secretary of the Printing Exhibition held at the Agricultural Hall in July last, has handed to the Printers' Pension Corporation £100, as the share of the profits of the Exhibition which he had promised to the institution. Mr. Dale has divided the amount among the three separate funds of the institution—the Pension, the Almshouse, and the Orphan Funds.

At a meeting of the Leeds Town Council, it has been decided to sell the surplus land belonging to Roundhay Park, which, it was stated, entails a cost, with management and the payment of interest, of £10,000 a year. The property, comprising 709 acres, was purchased by the Corporation nine years ago at a cost of £130,000, and was publicly opened by Prince Arthur. The proposition is to dispose of 400 acres.

In London last week 2517 births and 1618 deaths were registered. Allowing for increase of population, the births exceeded by 370, whereas the deaths were 221 below, the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. With respect to the increase of smallpox in London, it appears that the number of patients in the Metropolitan Asylum Hospitals, which had steadily increased in the nine preceding weeks from 77 to 330, further rose to 440 on Saturday last—a higher number than at any time since the end of June, 1878.

PARISIAN SAYINGS AND DOINGS.

Paris, Tuesday, Jan. 4.

The venerable conspirator Auguste Blanqui died on Jan. 1 in the house of a friend, 25, Boulevard d'Italie. He had lived seventy-six years on the earth, and out of that number he had spent thirty-seven in prison. Blanqui's death can hardly be regarded as a political event of importance: for a long time he has exercised no serious personal influence. This incarnation of the monomania of conspiracy had long ceased to be a chief; he was only a fetish, and a fetish of which the worshippers were growing somewhat tired. He was elected to the honorary presidency of ultra-revolutionary meetings; he tried to speak before the Socialist clubs; he started a paper called Ni Dieu ni Maitre. But his voice was so feeble that he could not make himself heard, and his writing was so apocalyptic that his journal received no support. Death has, perhaps, saved him from ending in cold neglect. As it is, his funeral to-morrow will be made the occasion of a great revolutionary manifestation.

Blanqui owes his fame to his melodramatic existence. His participation in active revolution, his long imprisonment, his attempts to escape, his supernatural sobriety, his skeleton frame, the mystery with which he surrounded himself, all this made of him an exceptional being of the kind that work upon the popular imagination. But who ever knew what Blanqui's political or social doctrines were? What kind of government did he advocate? Nobody ever thought of asking him. Each time that he appears in the events of the past fifty years it is as a fanatic, a visionary of a domineering temperament, admitting neither contraction nor discussion. He ought to have been born in the Middle Ages, when his sombre and mystical genius would have found its place and time of action. But in an age of universal suffrage and popular sovereignty what is the good of conspiracy? It is an occupation that we have relegated to the heroes of operetta.

Materials will not be wanting to the future historian relative to the lean and enigmatic figure of Blanqui. Armand Barbès, his companion in conspiracy, has left some notes about him. In his history of the "Revolution of 1848" Lamartine has drawn a very notable portrait of the conspirator, to whom, being Minister of Foreign Affairs, he had offered an embassy! The interview between Lamartine and Blanqui on May 15, 1848, forms the subject of a popular print, where Lamartine is seen in his shirt sleeves and Blanqui in a frock coat closely buttoned, a Montagnard hat in his hand, and a black cravat twisted several times round his neck. For an account of the interview I refer the reader to Lamartine's volumes. A writer in Le Temps mentions a monograph by Theophile Sylvestre on the Château de Blagnac, where, in 1824, Blanqui came as tutor to the son of General Cumpuis, and remained there two years, living entirely on fruit and vegetables, and sleeping with the windows open both winter and summer. Then he returned to Paris, and fell in love with a lady pupil, the only daughter of some rich banker, whom he loved in secret for six years before he told her. She became his wife. She bore his name for seven years, and then, when he was condemned to perpetual imprisonment, she languished and died. There was something heroic and grand in the passion of these two beings. Blanqui had by her a son whom, out of hatred for that classical education of which he himself had been a victim, he had brought up as a peasant, not even allowing him to learn to read. This son is still living. Blanqui leaves behind him two volumes, La Patrie en Danger, a collection of newspaper articles written in 1870, and l'Eternité dans les Astres, a strange volume of astronomical hypotheses meditated and written in prison.

This year, 1881, will be remarkable for the triple consultation of the nation, for the entire renewal of the municipal councils of all the communes of France, for the entire renewal of the Chamber of Deputies, and for the partial renewal of the Senate. The municipal elections will take place next Sunday.

M. Cipriani, who was arrested and imprisoned for insulting the police at the Gare Saint-Lazare on the day of the arrival of Louise Michel from New Caledonia, has been invited by the Prefect of the Police to leave French territory. M. Cipriani was condemned in 1871 for participation in the Commune, of which he was one of the heroes, and has passed ten years in New Caledonia.

The publication of the first part of the correspondence of George Sand (1815-1830) has been begun in the current number of the Revue des Deux Mondes. The correspondence will not be quite complete, owing to the refusal of several persons to lend their letters. There is, however, a probability that new light will be thrown on the relations of George Sand and Alfred de Musset by the publication of all the letters that passed between them.

Apropos of posthumous celebrity, it may interest the world of art connoisseurs to know that the Corot of the future is Michel. Two of his pictures have just been bought by the State to be placed in the Luxembourg, and subsequently in the Louvre. Few people probably know who Michel was. He was the precursor of modern French landscape. He produced between 1790 and 1840 some thousands of strange pictures broadly and boldly painted with fine and true tones. He reminds one often of Constable. Michel had his hour of celebrity under the Empire and the Restoration; but it was not until towards the end of his life that he developed that powerful and original talent which the great art-public are now beginning to admire. After his death, Michel was discovered by a few artists and amateurs; but for a long time his pictures rarely gained more than 100f. Now the prices are running up. Michel is becoming fashionable. What would the old man have thought if anyone had told him of this reaction forty years ago, when he made his sale in 1841? He collected and sent to the Hôtel Drouot more than 1000 paintings and drawings, eighteen clocks, 200 walking-sticks, 2000 volumes of books, and some odd nick-nacks; and the whole brought him 2500f. wherewith to console his declining years! Michel had a specialty. He painted nothing but Montmartre, its windmills, its slopes, and the breezy plains that surround the hill.

The past dramatic and musical year has been far from successful from a pecuniary point of view. Out of the twenty-three leading Paris theatres, two have failed utterly, sixteen have existed either with losses or with negative results, and only five have made money. During the past week the Bouffes has produced a new piece with music, by M. Audran, which promises well. It is called "La Mascotte." M. Emile Augier's "Marriage d'Olympe" has been revived without success at the Gymnase. The forthcoming events are M. Alphonse Daudet's "Jack" at the "Odéon" and M. Dumas's "Princesse de Bagdad" at the Français.

The weather in Paris, which up to the end of the past year had been showery and almost spring-like in its mildness, has suddenly become cold and frosty. The rain has ceased and the sky is clear and sunny. The New-Year's fair on the Boulevards has profited by the fine weather, and the petits commerçants have done a fair business. By the end of the week Paris will have resumed its normal appearance and settled down to the labour and pleasure of the year. T. C.

THE PLAYHOUSES.

An exceptionally representative gathering of the Republic of Letters, of the Empire of Art (artists are rarely Republican; Republics need few pictures and fewer decorations), and of the worlds of fashion, finance, and politics were present at the Lyceum last Monday to witness the performance of Mr. Alfred Tennyson's tragedy of "The Cup," which, owing no less to the beauty and majesty of the language in which the thoughts of the poet are clothed, the commanding excellence of the acting of Mr. Henry Irving and Miss Ellen Terry, and the splendour of the scenery and appointments, achieved that triumphant success which a fortnight since I hopefully predicted for it in the "Echoes." I was at that time, it will be remembered, in giving an outline of "The Cup" enabled to correct certain curious errors into which "the usually well-informed" (and withal accomplished) dramatic critic of a contemporary had fallen with respect to the incidents and the characters in Mr. Tennyson's play; and from the actual representation on Monday it appeared that my forecast was throughout an accurate one. The scene of "The Cup" is laid in Asia Minor—"even in a city of Galatia." Camma, the heroine, is the loving, faithful wife of a Galatian Tetrarch, and not of a "Governor of Massilia;" it is not "a Roman General," but the ex-Tetrarch Synorix who causes her husband, Sinnatus, to be murdered, seeing that he murders Sinnatus himself. The widowed Camma, after she has consented to become the bride of the assassin, Synorix, does not avenge her first husband's death by stabbing his murderer at the altar. She poisons him and herself with a death-dealing draught from the Fatal Cup which gives the name to the tragedy, while its tragic intensity and remorseless exposition of the ἀναγκη—Necessity—is as Greek as a play by the Grecian Æschylus. We commiserate the brave, generous, murdered Sinnatus, and loathe the profligate assassin Synorix just as we pity Agamemnon and hate Ægisthus in the first part of the Orestian trilogy; but it is not horror, not indignation with which we are inspired by Camma, although she does a deed as dreadful as that of Clytemnestra.

The tableau on which the curtain rises is a triumph of scenic art, recalling, as it does, some of those grand "sets" which won so much renown for Clarkson Stanfield at Drury Lane and for William Beverley at the Princess's. But a new departure in scenic art has been made since the days when the scenery in "Acis and Galatea" at the National Theatre, and in "A Midsummer Night's Dream" at the house in Oxford-street, took the town by storm. The plastic has now been added to the pictorial and the graphic in the pictorial embellishment of the stage; and in this opening scene — a lovely Anatolian landscape — actual bas-reliefs adorn the plinths and pedestals of the solidly built-up stairs leading to the Temple of Artemis. The beginning of the story of the play is succinctly and intelligibly told; and in this fact is manifest a vast improvement in dramatic construction on Mr. Tennyson's part since he wrote his "Queen Mary" and his "Falcon." We behold the Roman General Antonius (Mr. Tyars), not making love to any Governor of Massilia's wife, but dispatched with a force of Roman legionaries to demand the payment of tribute from a certain Galatian Tetrarchy, of which Sinnatus, the husband of Camma, is the head. The Roman Senate, we have all read, was accustomed to work with all and any human tools that suited its purpose; and to bring about the submission of Sinnatus and his subjects the Conscript Fathers have employed a licentious desperado named Synorix (Mr. Henry Irving), who had formerly held supreme sway in this very Tetrarchy, but had been chased from his reign by his indignant subjects for his Tarquin-like malpractices. A double motive and a double passion sway this bad man. He is moved, first, by a fierce ambition to regain his lost sovereignty which Rome has half promised him if he succeeds in making the Galatians tributaries of the Republic; and next he burns with an unholy passion for Camma, to whom he sends anonymously, and with a scroll ambiguously worded, an antique cup of beauty and price, which has been one of the sacred vessels used in the worship of Artemis, and which Synorix has rescued from a conflagration in which the Artemisian temple perished. Camma, who is a devout votary, and, indeed, a priestess of the goddess, accepts the mystic gift with joy, and deposits it on the altar of the Asian Diana.

Meanwhile Synorix, having received instructions from Antonius, together with a warrant empowering him to arrest Sinnatus, should that somewhat impetuous Tetrarch speak treason against Rome, falls across him in the hunting-party which he is leading; is, not very willingly, allowed to take part in the chase; and is duly provided with a javelin. The scene now changes to a most beauteous apartment in the palace of Sinnatus, the decoration of which is almost too elaborately Pompeian for a chamber in the house of a petty Asiatic chieftain; but as no precise date is fixed for the occurrence of the story, the scene-painter was perhaps entitled to lodge his Galatian Prince as gorgeously as M. Gérome his Hetaeleidan King Candaules. In this palatial chamber Camma awaits, reclining on a classic trichinium, the return of her beloved husband from the chase; and while awaiting him she sings with infinite grace and pathos a ballad to a weird melody of which the burden is "Bring him Home." Home Sinnatus accordingly comes; but he is accompanied by the mysterious and forbidding Synorix. A dispute as to whether Sinnatus or Synorix (who pretends to be a Greek, and assumes the name of Strepho) actually struck with his javelin the stag that has been that day slain is invested with a grim kind of humour, altogether characteristic of Mr. Tennyson; but to this brief episode of trifling swiftly succeed sterner words and deeds. Synorix takes advantage of the temporary absence of Sinnatus to tell Camma that he sent her the Cup; that he loves her; and that it is in his power to seize upon Sinnatus; although, to show how ardent and self-sacrificing his passion is for Camma, he somewhat inconsistently tears up and casts away the warrant with which he has been provided by Antonius. He further works upon Camma's fears by telling her that the Romans intend the destruction of her husband, and to subject him to unspeakable tortures; and at length he persuades her to place herself in the way of Antonius, when he visits the Temple, and plead for mercy to her husband. In the interval, the people of the city have discovered that the deposed and detested Synorix is once more among them; and they surround the palace, demanding his blood. The generous Sinnatus, although he dislikes Synorix thoroughly, is not desirous that he should be murdered under his roof, assists him to escape by indicating to him a secret passage leading from the palace to the forest. Synorix departs, secretly reminding Camma of the necessity of pleading to Antonius in favour of Sinnatus; and Camma consents to go on this perilous errand, adding sotto voce that she will take her dagger with her. The scene now changes to the beauteous Anatolian landscape again, with the Temple in the foreground. The object of the wicked Synorix is not that Camma should have an interview with the Roman General, but that he shall carry her off from her husband; and, when he meets her outside the Temple, he endeavours first to persuade and at length to force her to accompany him to the Roman Camp. This force he is using; he has wrenched from Camma's hand the dagger with which she is endeavouring to defend herself, when Sinnatus arrives on the scene and seizes the would-be abductor by the throat. Quick as lightning the wretch Synorix strikes the dagger into the heart of Sinnatus, who only a few hours before had been instrumental in saving his murderer's life. The shrieking Camma takes refuge and finds sanctuary in the Temple; and with this the act would have most dramatically concluded, but it is somewhat unnecessarily protracted to allow Synorix to soliloquise now to the footlights, and now over the dead body of his victim. I believe that when a man commits a murder his first impulse is to conceal, or in some way to escape from the Ugly Thing of his making. Hamlet only takes one furtive look at the corpse of Polonius. The equanimity with which Synorix discourses in the presence of the slain Sinnatus is the solitary piece of "stagyness" in this otherwise superb drama.

The second act, consisting of one scene, is necessarily brief, turning as it does only on the catastrophe—the slaying of Synorix, who has been created Tetrarch by the Romans, and the suicide of Camma by means of the same poisoned Cup. Since the Cathedral scene in the "Prophète" I have not seen so magnificent a spectacle of stage decoration as this tableau—the interior of the Temple of Artemis—presents; indeed, in some respects it excels the splendour of the coronation of John of Leyden; since at the Lyceum there are rows of real fluted columns, real moulded capitals, and real bas-reliefs on the plinths. The sanctuary of the goddess, with her gigantic statue, made in the likeness of the many-mammæd Diana of the Ephesians, looms awfully in the distance; and when the stage is filled with the priests and priestesses of Diana, the youths and maidens who take part in the matrimonial procession, the children bearing baskets and wreaths of flowers, and the Roman soldiers in the train of Antonius; when the aromatic fumes of the incense pervade the great expanse, and solemn litanies are chorally chanted in response to the invocations of Artemis, first by Synorix, and afterwards by Camma, standing on the steps of the central altar, the effect is almost appallingly grand. As a piece of spectacular effect it has certainly never been surpassed on the English stage, and, merely as examples of scene-painting, the whole of the scenery in "The Cup" reflects the highest credit on the artists engaged in its production, Mr. W. Telbin, Mr. W. Cuthbert, and Mr Hawes Craven. But it is not alone scene-painting which makes the mounting of "The Cup" virtually perfect. Down to the smallest detail of dresses, decorations, and stage management, everything bears trace of the consummate artistic taste of Mr. Henry Irving.

To the acting of this master of his art as Synorix, and of Miss Ellen Terry as Camma, I have really not space this week to do justice; and it would be cruelly unjust to slur over in a paragraph the splendid services as exponents of Mr. Tennyson's nobly poetic drama rendered by the actor-manager of the Lyceum and the accomplished lady who charmed us as Portia, and now moves us to love and sympathy as Camma. Of the grandeur and eloquence of Mr. Irving, of the exquisite gentleness, pathos, and refinement of Miss Terry in this tragic, yet not in one line repulsive play, I must speak next week.

To the "Playhouses" this week must be appended a short postscript. On Thursday week only the admired burlesque actor, Mr. J. D. Stoyle, was playing the boatswain in the opera of "Billee Taylor," at the Imperial. It was noticed that while he was singing the droll ditty "All on Account of Eliza," he gave a sudden gasp, and uttered a half-suppressed cry. He went home, and the next day died. The poor gentleman has left a wife and three children, quite destitute. Lest he should be accused of lack of thrift and frugality, let it be remembered that he had been, prior to his appearance at the Imperial, in wretched health, and for two years without an engagement. I am glad to learn that a subscription is being organised for the benefit of the poor widow woman and her children, and that the recognised Honorary Almoner of the dramatic profession, Mr. Edward Ledger, will receive donations for the "Stoyle Fund," at the office of the Era newspaper, Catherine-street, Strand. On New-Year's Day the new bridge over the Ouse at Skeldergate Ferry, York, was thrown open for passenger traffic.

Yesterday week the Bishop of London consecrated the new Holy Trinity Church, which is situated at Crouch-hill, Hornsey.

The Leicestershire magistrates have presented a requisition to the authorities in London asking them to close the whole of the markets in the county for the sale of store stock, owing to the spread of cattle disease.

The Era Almanack for the current year is much increased in size, the augmentation of bulk not being accompanied by any increase in price. Crammed, like its predecessors, with a mass of theatrical information equally useful and interesting to all who need a reference book of dates recording events connected with the past and recent history of the stage, this valuable repository of dramatic lore and literature again bears conclusive testimony to the care and energy bestowed upon its compilation by the conductor, Mr. Edward Ledger.

New-Year's Day was ushered in with the usual demonstrations in the Tron Church, Edinburgh, where a large crowd had assembled. According to ancient custom, when the clock struck twelve there was an outbreak of cheering, which was followed by a general interchange of compliments and drinking of healths. In St. Giles's Cathedral a service was held between eleven and twelve, which was largely attended.

Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., presided last Saturday at a crowded gathering of railway servants at the Memorial Hall in Farringdon-street, when the Lord Mayor, on behalf of a considerable number of subscribers, presented a testimonial to Mr. F. W. Evans, the general secretary of the Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, in recognition of the assistance which he had rendered towards the passing of the Employers' Liability Act.

During the year which has just closed the life-boats of the National Life-Boat Institution saved a total of 577 lives and twenty-seven vessels from destruction. In the same period the institution granted rewards for saving 120 lives by fishing and other boats and other means, making a total of 697 lives saved last year mainly through its instrumentality. Altogether, since its foundation, the society has contributed to the saving of 27,600 shipwrecked persons. It should be mentioned that the operations of the National Life-Boat Institution now cover the whole coasts of the British Isles, and that all the life-boats of the United Kingdom belong to it, with the exception of a score or so of life-boats which are under the charge of harbour trustees and other local bodies. It will thus be seen that an institution possessing so national a character must necessarily need a very large income to carry on its benevolent work with the success which has hitherto characterised the operations of the National Life-Boat Institution. We hope that the public will continue to extend to it their sympathy and liberal support.

THE COURT.

On New-Year's Day her Majesty, assisted by Princess Louise of Lorne, Princess Beatrice, and Prince Leopold, distributed her annual gifts to all the servants of the Royal household at Osborne, Christmas-trees bearing the presents being both in the steward's room and in the servants' hall. The Hon. and Rev. Francis Byng joined the Royal dinner circle.

The Queen, Princess Louise, Princess Beatrice, and Prince Leopold attended Divine service on Sunday, performed at Osborne by the Hon. and Rev. Francis Byng.

The Right Hon. G. J. Goschen, her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople, and the Hon. William Bagot, Aide-de-Camp to the Governor-General of Canada, dined with the Queen on Monday, and left Osborne the next day.

A Council, preliminary to the opening of Parliament, was held by her Majesty on Wednesday.

The Queen, accompanied by Princess Louise of Lorne and Princess Beatrice, has taken her usual daily out-of-door exercise; as also Prince Leopold, who remained at Osborne until the opening of Parliament.

The Right Hon. Hugh Childers and the Rev. Canon and Mrs. Prothero have dined with the Queen.

The Hon. Mary Pitt has succeeded the Hon. Harriet Phipps as Maid of Honour in Waiting, and Lieutenant-General the Hon. Arthur Hardinge has succeeded General Viscount Bridport as Equerry in Waiting to her Majesty.

Colonel Sir John Carstairs M'Neill has left Osborne.

The Queen's New-Year's gifts to the poor of Windsor, Holy Trinity, and Clewer were presented on New-Year's morning to 809 families resident in the district, the distribution of beef and coals taking place in the riding-school of the Royal Mews at Windsor. Her Majesty also gave a donation of £100 to the Royal Clothing Club.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince and Princess of Wales, who had been entertaining a large party at Sandringham, closed the week by joining the hunt of the West Norfolk Hounds last Saturday. The meet was at Westacre, near to the residence of the master, Mr. Anthony Hamond, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught being of the "field." On Sunday the Prince and Princess, with their daughters and the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, and their other guests, attended Divine service at St. Mary Magdalene's Church, Sandringham Park, the Rev. F. Hervey and the Rev. Canon Tarver officiating. The Royal party at Sandringham broke up on Monday, and the Prince left for Wadhurst Park, Sussex, on a visit to the Marquis and Marquesa de Santurce. His Royal Highness returned to town for the opening of Parliament, the Princess and her daughters having remained in Norfolk during the Prince's absence.

The Prince and Princess will pass next week at Normanton Park. They will leave London on Monday, and will arrive, by special train, at the Duffenham Station, where they will be met by Lord Aveland, and conducted to Normanton Park, Rutland, remaining there as the guests of Lord and Lady Aveland till the following Saturday. Shooting on Lord Aveland's estates will occupy the mornings of Tuesday and Thursday. On Wednesday the Prince will shoot with Lord Aveland, at Grimsthorpe Castle, Lincolnshire, the residence of his Lordship's mother, the Baroness Willoughby de Eresby. On Friday there will be a special meet of the Cottesmore hounds, at Burley-on-the-Hill, near Oakham, the residence of G. H. Finch, Esq., M.P., at which their Royal Highnesses will be present. On Friday evening a grand ball will be given at Normanton Park; and, on their leaving there on Saturday, they will be escorted by the Rutland troop of the Leicestershire Yeomanry to Stamford, where they will receive an address from the Mayor and Corporation, and will then proceed to Burghley House to luncheon with the Marquis and Marchioness of Exeter; after which they will leave for London by the Great Northern Railway.

Next week we shall give views of Normanton Park, in connection with the Royal visit.

The Standard correspondent at Vienna states that the Prince will be present at the approaching nuptials of the Austrian Crown Prince with the Princess Stéphanie. A separate residence, near the British Embassy, has been engaged for his Royal Highness during his sojourn in Vienna.

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught, after leaving Sandringham, went to Crichel on Monday, to be present at the festivities of the week in honour of the coming of age of the Hon. Humphrey Napier Sturt, the eldest son of Lord and Lady Alington. Their Royal Highnesses travelled from London by ordinary train to Bishopstoke, and thence by special train to Wimborne station, where they were met by their host and hostess and the heir; the Dorset Volunteers, with the battalion band, being in attendance. The town of Wimborne was en fête, and an address was presented to Lord and Lady Alington on their route expressing good wishes for their son and pleasure at the reception of their Royal guests. The week has been passed with the utmost éclat, with shooting and hunting parties, illuminations and fireworks in the Park, and concluding with a ball last evening at Crichel House. The Duke and Duchess take their departure to-day.

The Duchess of Cambridge received with sorrow the sad news of the death of her elder sister, the Dowager Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, which occurred on the 30th ult. at Neustrelitz. Since the funeral of the Princess the Duke of Cambridge has been passing a few days with Prince and Princess Christian at Cumberland Lodge.

FASHIONABLE MARRIAGES.

The marriage of Lord Wentworth and Miss Mary Caroline Stuart-Wortley, eldest daughter of the Right Hon. James and the Hon. Mrs. Stuart-Wortley, took place on the 30th ult. at St. Anne's, Soho. The bride wore a dress of white satin, trimmed with embroideries, executed at the Royal School of Art Needlework, and, over a wreath of orange-blossoms, a veil of antique Brussels lace, her jewels being a diamond locket and earrings, the gift of her father. The bridesmaids were Misses Blanche, Caroline, and Katherine Stuart-Wortley, her sisters, and Miss Mary Talbot. The ceremony was performed by the Hon. and Rev. Stephen Willoughby Lawley, uncle of the bride, assisted by Canon Wade, Rector of St. Anne's. The wedding party went to the Right Hon. James and Mrs. Stuart-Wortley's residence in Mandeville-place for luncheon; after which Lord Wentworth and his bride left for Crabbet, the seat of Mr. Wilfrid and Lady Anne Blunt, sister of the bridegroom, near Crawley, Sussex.

On Tuesday, the marriage of the Hon. Arnold A. C. Keppel (Scots Guard), eldest son of Viscount Bury, and grandson of General the Earl of Albemarle, with Miss Gertrude Lucia Egerton, only child of the Hon. Wilbraham Egerton, M.P., and Lady Mary Egerton, took place at All Saints' Church, Emsmoor-gardens.

Prince Leopold has consented to act as "best man" to Lord Brooke, eldest son of the Earl of Warwick, on his marriage to Miss Florence Evelyn Maynard, eldest daughter of the late Colonel the Hon. C. H. Maynard. The marriage will take place in Westminster Abbey in February.

MUSIC.

The first week of the New Year has offered but little that calls for detailed comment. The earliest performance of 1881 was Mr. John Boosey's afternoon ballad concert on New-Year's Day at St. James's Hall, the precursor of the resumption of the evening concerts on Jan. 12. The programme of last Saturday's performances was as varied and attractive as usual, the Hall having been filled by an appreciative audience. Madame Patey was encored in Adams's new song "The Children of the City," and in Blumenthal's ballad, "The old, old story," as was Madame Antoinette Sterling in Cowen's "The Better Land," Miss M. Davies in Marzials' "A Summer Shower," Mr. E. Lloyd in Blumenthal's "Far away where Angels dwell," Mr. Maas in Allen's "Maid of Athens," and Mr. Santley in Maude Valleric White's "Montrose's Love-Song"—other successful performances having been contributed by these artists, Miss C. Samuell and Mr. Maybrick, and members of the South London Choral Association, directed by Mr. L. C. Venables. Mr. Sidney Naylor conducted the concert, as usual.

Another resumption was that of the Monday Popular Concerts, which took place this week, when the string quartet in E flat, by Dvorák, was given for the second time, the first occasion having been at the final Saturday afternoon performance of last year. The work consists of the usual four divisions, in each of which laboured effort is more apparent than intrinsic musical interest. The last movement is, perhaps, the best; at all events, it is the least dull and dreary. The quartet was finely played by Madame Norman-Néruda, Mr. L. Ries, Mr. Zerbini, and Signor Piatti. The instrumental solos were: Handel's sonata in D, for violin (with pianoforte accompaniment), exquisitely rendered by Madame Néruda; and Mendelssohn's prelude and fugue in E minor (from his op. 35), effectively (the fugue somewhat hurriedly) executed by Mr. Eugène D'Albert. Each was encored, the lady having replied by giving Leclair's "Le Tambourin," and the gentleman, Mendelssohn's Lied Ohne Wörte in C (from the sixth book). Both artists were associated with Signor Piatti in Beethoven's Pianoforte Trio in D (from Op. 70). Mr. Oswald sang, with special effect, Buonoucini's aria, "L'esperto nocchiero," and Gounod's "Au Printemps." Mr. Zerbini was, as usual, an efficient accompanist. The Saturday afternoon performances associated with the Monday Popular Concerts are also resumed this week; and, on the same evening, Berlioz's "Faust" music is to be repeated, again under the direction of Mr. Charles Hallé, in consequence of the success of the previous performance.

Next week's musical proceedings will comprise the second of this year's Monday Popular Concerts, and of the Saturday afternoon performances associated with them, and, as already said, the resumption of the evening London Ballad Concerts. Other important approaching musical events have been referred to in a previous notice—the chief of them, during the present month, being the fourth concert of the tenth season of the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society on Jan. 20, when Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" and Rossini's "Stabat Mater" will be given; the third performance of the Sacred Harmonic Society's forty-ninth season (in its new locality of St. James's Hall), the programme comprising Handel's Coronation Anthem, "The King shall rejoice," Cherubini's "Requiem," and Mendelssohn's music to "Athalie;" the Scotch concerts on Jan. 25, at St. James's Hall and the Royal Albert Hall, in celebration of the anniversary of Burns's birthday, Mr. Sims Reeves being announced to appear at the former, and Madame Christine Nilsson at the latter.

Among the arrangements for the forthcoming sixty-ninth season of the Philharmonic Society (beginning on Feb. 24) it is in contemplation to give Berlioz's great dramatic symphony, "Roméo et Juliette," written for solo voices, chorus, and orchestra.

We are glad to learn that Mr. John Ella has recently undergone a successful operation, performed by Mr. Bowman, the eminent oculist. Mr. Ella—who has just entered on his seventy-ninth year—is arranging for the transfer of the direction of the Musical Union (which has been for thirty-six years in his hands) to M. Lasserre, the well-known violoncellist.

Sir Julius Benedict has undertaken to produce a new cantata at the Norwich Festival in the autumn. The text, it is said, is to be founded on Lamartine's "Graziella."

A rendering of "The Messiah," which Handel could scarcely have anticipated, took place in Dundee in Christmas week. The treble and alto parts of choruses and solos were sustained by children from the elementary schools of the town, trained by Mr. Frank Sharp, their music-master. The children, who were trained on the Tonic Sol-Fa system, had no assistance whatever from adults. The rendering is said to have been excellent throughout. A body of tenors and basses completed the harmony. Mr. J. S. Curwen, presided.

According to the annual table given in the Publishers' Circular, there were issued during the past twelve months 4293 new books and 1415 new editions, making together 5708. Divided into fourteen classes, there were published:—Theology, sermons, biblical, &c., 708 new books and 267 new editions; educational, classical, and philological, 507 and 168; juvenile works and tales, 564 and 155; novels, tales, and other fiction, 380 and 200; law, jurisprudence, &c., 87 and 58; political and social economy, trade, and commerce, 204 and 22; arts, sciences, and illustrated works, 362 and 117; voyages, travels, geographical research, 211 and 74; history, biography, &c., 286 and 77; poetry and the drama, 132 and 55; year books and serials in volumes, 353; medicine, surgery, &c., 148 and 54; belles lettres, essays, monographs, &c., 80 and 86; miscellaneous, including pamphlets, not sermons, 271 and 82. In the year preceding the numbers were:—New books, 4294; new editions, 1540; together, 5834.

Six new Acts of Parliament passed in the late Session came into force last Saturday. On that day imprisonment for debt was abolished in Scotland, persons in custody to be released without prejudice to the rights of the creditors. The statute provides for the punishment of fraudulent debtors. Another and very long Act was to consolidate and amend the law on the management of taxes under the Inland Revenue Board in respect of the land tax, inhabited house duty, and the income tax. In the 24th chapter, the law relating to the manufacture and sale of spirits was consolidated and amended. The next statute passed was to extend and regulate the liability of employers to make compensation for personal injuries suffered by workmen in their service, which includes railway servants and all persons to whom the Employers and Workmen Act of 1875 applies. Another Act is to make provision for the safe carriage of grain cargoes, and the Board of Trade is to enforce the provisions. Penalties for infringement can be imposed to £100. The new law is to protect persons engaged in the merchant shipping service. Lastly, a statute then came into force for the protection of all wild birds. Between March 1 and Aug. 1 in any year penalties are to be imposed for shooting and taking wild birds. The new Act is extended to the United Kingdom. There are as many as eighty-five wild birds enumerated in the schedule.

MEETING OF PARLIAMENT.

As with every other English Ceremony of mark, the opening of the Parliamentary Session is graced with the inevitable round of feasting. It is not divulged to the outer world, whether the movers and seconders of the Addresses in reply to Her Majesty's Message—who are this year Lords Carrington and Yarborough in the House of Lords and Mr. Stuart Rendel and Mr. John Slagg in the Commons—rehearse their more or less graceful speeches before the select company of political partisans invited by the Ministerial Leaders to meet them at dinner on the eve of the assembling of Parliament. But it is pretty well known that the Queen's Speech (which could not be given in the earliest portion of our current Issue) was not only read on Wednesday evening to the Ministers and Ministerialists entertained by Mr. Gladstone and Earl Granville; but that Her Majesty's Address was also communicated the same night to the Earl of Beaconsfield and Sir Stafford Northcote for transmission to the leading members of the Opposition asked to dinner by them, in accordance with established custom. In passing, it should be mentioned that the Wednesday morning papers contained an intimation "that Lord Beaconsfield's new residence in Curzon-street not being ready for occupation, he is unable to receive his political friends this evening."

The Prime Minister (who was cheered, by-the-way, on being recognised in the Lyceum Theatre on the first night of Tennyson's tragedy, "The Cup") found it necessary to prepare for the Session by holding frequent Cabinet Councils in the little house in Downing-street. A "Conference" with the leading members of the Conservative Party on Monday sufficed Lord Beaconsfield.

Her Majesty's Ministers and "Her Majesty's Opposition" (to repeat an anomalous phrase in vogue) meet each other in 1881 without any material change in their compositions. Right and left of the table respectively in the House of Lords, Earl Granville, the Duke of Argyll, Earl Spencer, Lords Northbrook and Kimberley continue to face the Earl of Beaconsfield, the Marquis of Salisbury, the Duke of Richmond, the Duke of Northumberland, Earl Cairns, and Lord Cranbrook, Lord Selborne presiding on the woolsack as Lord Chancellor. In the Lower House, the most noticeable change will be the descent of Mr. Leonard Courtney from his comparatively independent position on the upper Ministerial seats to the Treasury Bench as Under-Secretary to the Home Department, in place of Mr. A. Peel, who has retired from ill-health. Conspicuous by his absence will be the new Governor of Madras, Mr. Adam, succeeded in the office of First Commissioner of Works by Mr. Shaw-Lefevre.

The political hardihood which appears to be ingrained in Mr. Parnell received a fresh exemplification when, undeterred by the fact that he and several of his colleagues of the Land League were under trial in Dublin, the member for Cork issued a ukase announcing his intention to move an amendment to the Address in order to discuss at length the affairs of Ireland. Simultaneously with this announcement came the disturbing intelligence—doubly unpleasant as it followed close on the heels of similar alarms in Birmingham and Sunderland—that the War Office had directed special precautions to be taken to guard against any attempt to seize the arms at certain Volunteer quarters in the metropolis.

It is not to be wondered at that under these circumstances Ireland monopolised the attention of the speakers, whose utterances outside the walls of Parliament alone call for notice. Mr. Fawcett, who has been the "lion" of the week in Manchester as the guest of Mr. William Agnew, M.P., was on Tuesday evening entertained at a soirée given in his honour by the Reform Club of Cottonopolis. He had to pay for his entertainment with a speech, the pith of which was that if the Country stimulated the Liberal majority in the House of Commons to accord a hearty support to the Ministerial measures dealing with Irish questions, the House of Lords would deem discretion the better part of valour, and not offer serious opposition to them. Mr. James Lowther, on his side, being in the enjoyment of freedom from attendance in Parliament, declared at Ilkley, the same evening, that prominent members of the Cabinet were morally more responsible for the existing troubles in Ireland than the traversers now on trial. Mr. Joseph Cowen, addressing his constituents in the Newcastle Townhall last Monday, advised, on the other hand, that a fair support should be given to the Government in their endeavours to settle the Irish problem.

Turning from the other controversial addresses delivered this week by Sir Wilfrid Lawson, the Earl of Jersey, Mr. C. S. Wortley, and Mr. Bradlaugh, it is pleasant to be able to add that Mr. Mundella had not to touch on the debatable ground of politics last Tuesday in distributing the prizes to the City of London Collegians. The social side of politics has also been exhibited at Dewsbury, where Mr. Serjeant Simon has been honoured with a banquet and a service of plate; in Tynemouth, where the Conservative candidate at the last election, Mr. H. J. Trotter, has received a similar compliment; and in South Ayrshire, where the Earl of Stair had the gratification of receiving a service of plate on behalf of his son, the Hon. North Dalrymple, the unsuccessful Liberal candidate at the General Election.

THE CHURCH.

The usual children's service in Westminster Abbey on Innocents' Day (Tuesday) was preached by Dean Stanley to an enormous congregation.

Mr. Durrant, a non-resident proprietor of land in Bournemouth, has given £500 towards the new memorial church to Mr. Bennett in that town.

An anonymous donor, "A. B. C.," has given to the National Society for Promoting the Education of the Poor in the Principles of the Established Church £2000 to meet the numerous and urgent calls on the funds of the society.

The Archbishop of Canterbury on Thursday week consecrated a handsome new chancel, chancel aisle, vestry, and organ-chamber, now added to the district parish church of St. James, Croydon. Mr. C. Henman was the architect.

A handsomely carved oak pulpit has been presented to St. John's Church, Upper Holloway (Rev. H. W. Dearden Vicar), by Mr. Charles E. Fry, one of the churchwardens. It was designed by Mr. W. Smith, and executed by Mr. Forsyth.

Lady Burdett-Coutts laid the foundation-stone of a new church in Hendon last Saturday. Previous to the ceremony she was presented with a splendid silver trowel, the gift of the Vicar and churchwardens. Her Ladyship has contributed £100 towards the church.

The Church of St. Edmund the King, Lombard-street, which for the last six months has been undergoing extensive alterations and repairs under the supervision of Mr. Butterfield, was reopened on Christmas Eve. A new organ-chamber has been built, and the walls and ceiling have been painted in a very bold and striking style.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

ITALY.

King Humbert yesterday week received the Grand Duke Paul of Russia. The various members of the diplomatic body in the capital afterwards waited on the King and Queen to present their congratulations for the New Year.

The King and Queen, and a distinguished party, left Rome last Monday on a visit to Sicily. They embarked at Naples, where their Majesties met with a very enthusiastic reception. At Palerno, where they arrived on Tuesday morning, they were most warmly received.

As the Queen on Saturday night alighted at the theatre in Rome she lost a diamond worth 5000 lire. It was picked up by a policeman, who restored it. The Queen sent him a handsome present.

SPAIN.

King Alfonso opened the Cortes on Thursday week with a speech from the throne, in which he said that, actuated by no ambition abroad, and fettered by no fears at home, Spanish diplomacy was endeavouring to extend the commercial relations of the country with America and Europe, and would neglect no effort to obtain from foreign nations equal advantages with those which Spain granted to them by treaties of commerce. His Majesty also stated that it was necessary to increase the naval forces and strengthen the national defences.

PORTUGAL.

The Cortes were opened on Sunday. The King in his speech from the throne stated that the late loan had been completely subscribed by home and foreign capital, and that the relation of Portugal with all foreign Powers was satisfactory.

RUSSIA.

Further details are published of severe fighting between the Russians and the Turkomans near Geok Tepe. There seems to have been more than one engagement.

An Imperial decree, which is to come into force at the beginning of the Russian New Year, has been published at St. Petersburg, reducing the import duty on salt, increasing the import duty on foreign goods, and doubling the tax of trade guilds.

Professor Nordenskjöld arrived at St. Petersburg last Saturday morning by special train from Hango. He was received at the station by the Swedo-Norwegian Ambassador and delegates from the Russian societies. In the course of the day he was received at the Foreign Office. He has been fêted by the municipality and by the learned societies.

TURKEY AND GREECE.

A note has been dispatched by the Porte to the Powers on the Hellenic question, bringing forward arguments against arbitration, and proposing that a meeting of delegates of the Powers, including Turkey and Greece, should be held at Constantinople, for the purpose of fixing the Turco-Greek frontier. The Ambassadors proceeded to the Porte on Monday, and strongly advised the Minister for Foreign Affairs to reconsider the matter.

The debate in the Greek Chamber on the Foreign Loan Bill has ended, and that measure has been passed, after M. Coumoundouros had declared it to be one of imperious necessity, and the President of the Council had defied the Opposition to obtain a loan on better terms.

AMERICA.

The Philadelphia correspondent of the Times gives some further information respecting the recent Census of the United States. As already stated, the approximate population on June 1, 1880, of the entire United States was 50,152,559, being an increase of 11,594,188 in ten years. About a quarter of the increase is due to immigration. New York State, it has been ascertained, has a population of 5,083,173; Pennsylvania, 4,282,738; Ohio, 3,197,794; Illinois, 3,078,636; Missouri, 2,169,091; New York City, 1,206,599; Philadelphia, 846,984; Brooklyn, 566,689; Chicago, 503,304; Boston, 262,535; St. Louis, 350,522; Baltimore, 332,190; Cincinnati, 255,708; San Francisco, 233,956; and New Orleans, 216,140.

The troops at Fort Buford have fought an engagement with a portion of Sitting Bull's tribe of Indians, commanded by the Chief Gaul. They killed one, wounded two, and took 300 prisoners.

Snow has fallen heavily in the Eastern and Southern States, and the railroads have in consequence been blocked. The cold registered in some places has been 25 deg. below zero.

CANADA.

The Marquis of Lorne has referred Professor Hind's recent letter to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Meanwhile, Professor Hind has written another letter, pointing out further falsifications in the Dominion departmental reports relating to the fish trade with the United States, and declaring the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to have been deceived thereby.

The comments of the British Columbian Press on the arrangement entered into by the Dominion Government with the Pacific Railway Syndicate are generally favourable.

SOUTH AFRICA.

The news from the Transvaal is chiefly an amplification of reports already published. Telegraphic communication is completely cut off except through the Orange Free State. The excitement in this State is said to be very great, and it is reported that President Brand has telegraphed that he finds himself unable to restrain the Boers of the Orange Free State from joining the insurrection in the Transvaal, and that he may in a few days be compelled to resign. The Boers are also said to have sent representatives to the Pondos and other native tribes. The Times correspondent at Cape Town says that "in the Cape Colony the revolt is regarded as a terrible calamity. It is hoped that reinforcements will speedily be forthcoming. The military authorities do not deem it advisable to denude Cape Town of its garrison." Sir George Strahan reports that the situation in Basutoland is unchanged; and an official telegram from the Cape Government announces a victory of the colonial forces over the Tambookies, in which eighty of the latter were killed, and 8000 cattle and 5000 sheep captured.

A despatch from Durban of Tuesday's date announces that a force of Boers have entered Natal territory, and that they intend opposing the British advance from the Natal side of the Drakensberg.

We learn from Bombay that the 11th Bengal Lancers have volunteered for service in South Africa. The troops under orders to proceed to Natal are the 15th Hussars, a battalion of the 60th, and a battery of artillery.

INDIA.

The Times correspondents in India in their weekly telegrams state that the Viceroy, although now able to leave his room, is not considered sufficiently recovered to justify his starting from Allahabad on Monday, as was proposed. Major Baring assumed charge of the office of Finance Minister on Monday. Mr. Rivers Thompson resumed his seat in the Supreme Council on Thursday week. From Cabul it is stated to be difficult to obtain trustworthy news, but "it seems to be beyond doubt that the Ameer is ruling with some severity, and raising what revenue he can by forced loans and otherwise." The latest news from Herat is that Ayoub Khan is collecting the Herati regiments defeated at Candahar with the intention of sending them to Taiwara to attack the Taimani tribes, and that the Herat people are in distress owing to the forced requisitions of grain and other supplies.

A telegram from Sibi published in the Standard says that the construction of the Candahar railway has been abruptly suspended at a point seventeen miles beyond Sibi, and that this step "is considered to be an indication that Government has determined to abandon not only Candahar but the Pishin Valley, and to hold only the Quetta frontier."

M. Heldewier, the Minister of the Netherlands to the Court of Spain, was one morning last week found dead in his bed.

The Golos states, apparently on authority, that, in return for concessions made by Russia, the Pekin Government has consented to open the Chinese Empire to Russian commerce.

In token of the friendly relations between Servia and Greece, Prince Milan has sent to King George the insignia of the Takovo Order.

Sir Hercules Robinson, the Governor of the Cape Colony, accompanied by Lady Robinson and Captain and Mrs. St. John, left England on Thursday week for Cape Town, in the Union Steam-Ship Company's steamer German.

Floods of a serious character have occured in the Eastern provinces of Holland. By the breaking down of the dykes between Nieuwkuyk and Vlymer, eighteen villages have been flooded.

On Tuesday the first English public school in Cyprus was opened at Nicosia. The High Commissioner delivered a speech, in which he said that all classes would derive benefit from a knowledge of English.

Telegraphic advices have been received from New Zealand announcing the safe arrival, all well, of the Lady Jocelyn, which left England on Sept. 27 last for Tauranga, Bay of Plenty, conveying the first party of about 500 souls to Mr. G. Vesey Stewart's third special settlement at Te Puke.

The Roumanian Chamber of Deputies has adopted the Convention of Commerce and Navigation with Italy by sixty-eight to sixteen votes; and, the Senate having passed the commercial treaty with Italy and the consular convention with Switzerland, Parliament adjourned for the Christmas recess.

An address to the people of England in favour of the independence of the Transvaal is being circulated by Professor Harting, of the University of Utrecht, and has received the signatures of a number of influential men, including many members of the States General.

The Gazette contains the following:—The chiefs of the island of Rotumah, in the Western Pacific Ocean, having prayed that they may be brought under the sovereignty of the British Crown, her Majesty has been pleased to direct Letters Patent to be passed under the Great Seal of the United Kingdom declaring that the island of Rotumah and its dependencies shall form part of her Majesty's dominions, and shall be annexed to the colony of Fiji.

Arrivals of live stock and fresh meat from the United States and Canada at Liverpool last week were considerably below those of the preceding week, and there were no live sheep landed. The total imports consisted of 427 cattle, 6959 quarters of beef, 304 carcases of mutton, and 597 pigs; against a total of 904 cattle, 262 sheep, 7893 quarters of beef, 643 carcases of mutton, and 299 pigs in the preceding week.

Prince Alexander closed the Session of the Bulgarian National Assembly on Thursday week. In his speech, which was delivered in the Bulgarian language, his Highness thanked the deputies for having worked so indefatigably for the advancement of the internal organisation of the country, and enumerated the laws passed during the Session. These measures, he said, had filled up a gap in the fundamental statutes, and constituted a solid foundation for the future development of the country.

King Oscar of Sweden has just published a volume entitled "Poems and Leaflets from My Journal;" and King Louis of Portugal has completed his translation into Portuguese of Shakspeare's "Richard III.," a second edition of his Majesty's translation of "Hamlet" having just issued from the press. The first edition was limited to 1000 copies, which his Majesty distributed among his friends; but a publisher in Rio de Janeiro struck off a cheap edition of the book, which met with a very remunerative sale in the Brazilian capital. His Majesty, it is stated, to prevent a repetition of this conduct, has made a present of the copyright of the new edition and of his future translations to one of the charitable asylums of Lisbon.

The usual New-Year's receptions were held on Saturday, among other capitals, at Berlin, Paris, Rome, and Brussels. At Berlin, the Emperor William expressed his satisfaction at the preservation of peace, and also at the improvement apparent in commercial and trading circles. At M. Grévy's reception Monsignor Czacki, the Papal Nuncio, expressed, in his own name and that of the other members of the diplomatic body, their sincere wishes for the continued prosperity of France. M. Grévy briefly expressed his thanks. He afterwards spoke to each of the members of the Diplomatic Corps individually. The King and Queen of Italy received the grand State dignitaries and the members of the diplomatic body, and are stated to have expressed great satisfaction at their approaching visit to Sicily. The King and Queen of the Belgians, with Count and Countess de Flandre, received the Diplomatic Corps, deputations from the Senate and the Chamber of Representatives, and from the law courts and other public bodies. The members of the Liberal party in the Hungarian Diet waited upon M. Tisza, the Minister President, in order to offer their congratulations for the New Year. From Washington it is announced that President Hayes's New-Year's reception was "brilliantly attended." The British Minister, Sir E. Thornton, headed the diplomatic body.

It has been decided by the Secretary of State for War, on the recommendation of the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, to grant commissions in the Line to those Militia officers who qualified, but were unsuccessful, at the military competition held last September; they will not, however, receive their commissions until after the gentlemen cadets who have just passed out of Sandhurst have been appointed to the Army.

A peal of five new bells for Sandhurst, Berks, has been procured by subscription to perpetuate the memory of the Rev. Henry Parsons, who was for twenty-six years Rector of the parish, and who died at a great age in 1876. His name, and the names of his deceased son and daughters, are inscribed on a stone slab let into the inside wall of the tower. Mrs. Dumbleton, a very aged resident in the parish, is also in like manner commemorated as the donor of the large bell and clock.

The subscription amounted to £1430.

SCENES FROM THE PANTOMIMES.

Our well-known contributor, G. A. S., in last week's Number of this Journal, filled more than a page with his lively descriptive commentary upon some of the Christmas pantomimes at the different London theatres. The scenes delineated by our Artist on a page of the present sheet will at once be recognised, either by readers who have already witnessed those diverting performances or by those who have perused the account of them to which we refer. At Drury Lane, for instance, in the pantomime extravaganza of "Mother Goose," there is the scene in which Dr. Syntax and Whimwag enter into conversation with "a human donkey," who looks not the less a real donkey because "so very human." There is also, at the same theatre, the very pretty dance of Dresden China figures, which is like a scene in miniature from the pastorals of Watteau. At Covent Garden, we behold the figures of our old romantic acquaintance, Valentine and Orson, with rapier and club prepared for mutual combat, in which the savage yields to the impersonation of chivalry. At the Gaiety, where "The Forty Thieves" is or are brought upon the stage, we may see Ali Baba, Ganem, Hassanac, and the ingenious Morgiana playing their ancient tricks. At the Surrey, there is Hop-o'-my-Thumb, fighting his duel with the Ogre, in the Frost-bound Glade. The droll travelling exploits of the Hanlon-Lees fraternity, in their "Voyage en Suisse" at the Imperial, have amused a great multitude of visitors to that place of entertainment.

THE LATE ADMIRAL JOHNSON.

A veteran naval officer, who fought on board Lord Nelson's ship, the Victory, at the battle of Trafalgar, but who retired from active service thirty-seven years ago, and never saw a modern ironclad ship, died the day after Christmas Day. This was Admiral William Ward Percival Johnson, who entered the Royal Navy in July, 1803, being then thirteen years of age. He was, like Pollard, Carslake, Bingham, and others we have known, a midshipman of the flag-ship at Trafalgar. His subsequent commissions were dated, as Lieutenant, Jan. 22, 1814; Commander, Jan. 10, 1837; Captain, Dec. 5, 1842; Rear-Admiral, May 20, 1862; Vice-Admiral, Oct. 18, 1867; and Admiral, July 30, 1875. When a Lieutenant he was awarded the gold medal of the Royal National Life-Boat Institution, on Nov. 11, 1829, "for very gallantly putting off, with twelve men, in a life-boat from Kingstown, Ireland, and saving eleven persons from the brig Duke, wrecked at Dalkey." He died, at the age of ninety, at his residence, Little Baddow, near Chelmsford.

THE LATE MR. MECHI.

The death, on Sunday, the 26th ult., of this well-known gentleman, formerly an Alderman of the City of London, an active tradesman and an enthusiastic agriculturist, has already been noticed. It was preceded but a few days by the announcement, which excited general sympathy, that increasing pecuniary losses and embarrassments had brought him to a situation of comparative poverty; and some of those who recognised the integrity of his personal character were beginning to discuss the propriety of starting a subscription to provide for the wants of his old age. Mr. John Joseph Mechi was the eldest son of Mr. James Mechi, of Bologna, Italy, who in early life settled in England, and, having been naturalised, obtained a post in the household of George III. The late Mr. J. J. Mechi's mother was Elizabeth, daughter of Mr. J. Beyer, of Poland-street, London, and he was born in the year 1802. At the age of sixteen he was placed as a clerk in a mercantile house in the Newfoundland trade. He contrived to turn his leisure time to profitable account by selling, among his friends and acquaintances in the city, a small and inexpensive article of which he had bought the patent. He was enabled, about the year 1827, to set up on his own account in a small shop in Leadenhall-street. In the course of a few years he realised a handsome fortune by the "magic razor-strop" which bears his name, and established a large retail cutlery business in the City and Regent-street. In 1840, having attentively studied the defects of English farming, he resolved to try his hand on improvements in agriculture. He bought a small farm of some 170 acres, at Tiptree-heath, in Essex, and here carried out his system of deep drainage, liquid manure, steam ploughing, and other methods of cultivation, so that his model farm was brought into a state of productiveness which annually yielded a profit. In 1856, Mr. Mechi was appointed Sheriff of London, and in the following year he was elected an Alderman; but he resigned his aldermanic gown about eight years afterwards. About the same time his services to the science of agriculture were rewarded by the presentation to him of a handsome testimonial of the value of £500, subscribed for by noblemen and gentlemen at home and abroad. Mr. Mechi was for many years a member of the Council of the Society of Arts, and was a juror in the Department of Art and Science at the Great Exhibition of 1851, and at the Industrial Exhibition at Paris in 1854, to which he was specially sent by her Majesty's Government. In 1858 he published an account of his improved agricultural system, of which, in 1864, a new and enlarged edition was issued, under the title of "How to Farm Profitably." Mr. Mechi was a magistrate for Middlesex and a Commissioner of Lieutenancy for the City of London. He was twice married—first, to Fanny, daughter of Mr. Frost; and secondly, to Charlotte, daughter of Mr. Francis Ward, of Chillesford, Suffolk.

THE LATE WARDEN OF MERTON COLLEGE.

The only one among the Heads of Colleges at Oxford who was not a clergyman, but the oldest of them all, was Dr. Robert Bullock-Marsham, Warden of Merton College, Oxford. He died at his residence, Caversfield House, near Bicester, at the age of ninety-four. The eldest son of the late Hon. and Rev. Jacob Marsham, Canon of Windsor (brother of the first Earl of Romney), by his marriage with Amelia Frances, only daughter and heiress of Mr. Joseph Bullock, of Caversfield, he was born in June, 1786. He was educated at Eton and at Christ Church, Oxford, where he took his Bachelor's degree in 1807. In 1811 he was elected to a Fellowship at Merton College. In 1826 he was chosen to fill the Wardenship—a post to which, even half a century ago, laymen were eligible. He was the senior head of a house at Oxford, Dr. Hawkins, the Provost of Oriel, having been chosen two years later. Dr. Marsham was a magistrate and Deputy Lieutenant for Oxfordshire. He was called to the Bar, and became a Recorder of Rochester, and was at one time one of the Charity Commissioners. He was elected Fellow in 1811, and Warden in 1826, succeeding Dr. Vaughan, formerly Dean of Chester. He took but little part in the affairs of the University, never won any great honours in learning, and may be regarded as the type of the country gentleman Head of a House. In 1854 he was put up by the Conservative party in Convocation with Sir William Heathcote, to contest Mr. Gladstone's seat, but was unsuccessful. He continued to assist in college business till the last University term. He married, in 1828, Jessie, daughter of the late General David Dewar, of Gilston House, Fifeshire, and widow of Sir John C. Anstruther.

THE LATE "GEORGE ELIOT."

The funeral of Mrs. Cross, formerly Miss Mary Ann Evans, but much best known by her assumed nom de plume of "George Eliot," took place in Highgate Cemetery on Wednesday of last week. It was attended by a large number of gentlemen distinguished in literature, amongst whom were Mr. Herbert Spencer, Mr. Robert Browning, Mr. Frederick Harrison, Dr. Congreve, Mr Kegan Paul, Professor Tyndall, Professor Huxley, Sir Theodore Martin, Mr. John Morley, Mr. Leslie Stephen, and several eminent artists, besides some of political and social distinction. The funeral service was performed by the Rev. Dr. Sadler, Unitarian Minister, of Hampstead. The grave chosen for her interment was near the tomb of the late Mr. G. H. Lewes, her friend and literary associate. There was an inscription on the coffin, recording the dates of her birth and death, Nov. 22, 1820, and Dec. 22, 1880, with a line and a half from Dante—

Quella fonte,
Che spande di parlar sì largo fiume.

The brain of Mary Ann Cross was, indeed, a "fountain that sheds a broad river of discourse;" not so great in quantity, however, as in width of thought and sympathy, which may be deemed the main characteristic of her writings. It may be said of "George Eliot," as Mrs. Barrett Browning says of "George Sand," that her faculties as an author were those of a "large-brained woman and a large-hearted man." Yet there is nothing unfeminine in anything she has ever written.

MR. JOHN SLAGG, M.P. FOR MANCHESTER, SECONDER OF THE ADDRESS.

"Adam Bede," "Silas Marner," "The Mill on the Floss," "Middlemarch," and "Daniel Deronda," whatever may be thought of the views of moral and religious philosophy they insinuate, are perfectly free from the unseemly tone of license which some other female novelists have adopted in our day. "Romola" is a noble historical romance, and its spirit is elevated almost to the heroic pitch, though its portraiture of Savonarola must be pronounced a failure. It is undeniable that "George Eliot" possessed a stronger power of dramatic imagination, with a greater share of dramatic humour, than any other writer of her sex; but in some high qualities of genius, notably in the reach of moral enthusiasm to the loftiest of human motives, she was far below Elizabeth Barrett Browning. Such a theme as that of the life and death of the Florentine Reformer, saint, prophet, statesman, and martyr, would have been treated more effectively, we cannot doubt, by the author of "Casa Guidi Windows." Or it may have been the unspiritual dulness and narrowness of "George Eliot's" philosophical creed that deprived her mind of the greatest source of inspiration. At any rate, with all the ethical truth and force of her delineations of life, they fall short of poetic ideality; and she has failed to conceive a genuine hero, a man working or fighting for the highest aims, though she has portrayed more than one heroine, or woman of exceptional loftiness of sentiment. It is probable that "Adam Bede," for its interest as a story, and perhaps also "Silas Marner," will retain popularity longer than any of her other productions. But some of the shorter tales, called "Scenes of Clerical Life," are most touching and pathetic, leaving the deepest impression on the heart. As we have been unable to procure, for reproduction in this journal, any portrait of the late Mrs. Cross, we present only a view of the house, in Cheyne-walk, Chelsea, where she resided at the time of her death.

MOVER AND SECONDER OF THE ADDRESS.

At the opening of the Session of Parliament, on Thursday last, the Address of the House of Commons, in reply to the Queen's Speech, was moved by Mr. Stuart Rendel, M.P. for Montgomeryshire, and seconded by Mr. John Slagg, M.P. for Manchester. The portraits of these two gentlemen are now presented to our readers.

Mr. Stuart Rendel, who was born in 1834, is a younger son of the late eminent engineer, Mr. James Meadows Rendel, C.E., F.R.S. He was educated at Eton, and at Oriel College, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1856, and was fourth class in classics. In June, 1861, he was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple, but did not practise, having joined the great engineering firm of Sir William Armstrong and Co., of Elswick, Newcastle, and of London. He married, in 1857, the second daughter of Mr. W. Egerton Hubbard, of Leonardslee, Horsham, Sussex. He was elected M.P. for Montgomeryshire in April last year.

Mr. John Slagg, who was born in 1841, is eldest son of the late Mr. John Slagg, cotton manufacturer and merchant, of Manchester, who was a leading member of the Council of the Anti-Corn-Law League, and an intimate friend of Mr. Cobden. Mr. Slagg carries on his father's business, and is President of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce. He married, in 1866, Miss Katherine German, daughter of Major German, of Sevenoaks, Kent. He was returned M.P. for Manchester at the general Election of last April, polling the greatest number of votes ever recorded in any constituency of the United Kingdom.

FINE ARTS.

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY.

The collection of water-colour drawings by contemporary artists, which for a second time forms the major part of the winter exhibition at this gallery is, on the whole, somewhat superior to that of last year. The members of the Old Water-Colour Society evidently continue to regard the claims of their own winter exhibition as paramount, Mr. Carl Haag being almost the only contributor from their ranks. His single drawing, however, depicting "A Caravan of Bedaween encamping near the Sphinx of Gaza during a Sand-storm" (154), is one of the finest works that he has recently exhibited. The Institute is numerically much more largely represented; but the "outsiders," including many of the better-known exhibitors at the Dudley, are in far greater force; and, thanks in a great measure to the very respectable quality of their contingent—witnessing as it does to the extensive and growing cultivation of water-colours—the Grosvenor seems to suffer much less than might be expected from the abstention of the close little corporations and coteries in Pall-mall.

There are, however, two other elements in the water-colour department which augment the interest of the display—viz., some forty works by members of the Liverpool Society of Painters in Water-Colours, which society comprises several painters of ability, the best being, however, known more or less to the London public; and about fifty drawings described as by French artists, but which include among their authors artists of Dutch, Belgian, Spanish, American, and other nationalities. This last auxiliary collection, though it includes several works of mark, is decidedly disappointing. It cannot for a moment be accepted as conveying any adequate impression of the recent achievements of the great French school in water colours. We must, however, find another opportunity for reviewing these several sections.

Incomparably the most novel feature of the show, indeed, an almost new constituent in the plethora of current exhibitions, remains, however, to be noticed—i.e., a series of decorative designs for mosaic, fresco, distemper, oil, and other mural paintings, or ornamental panels, for stained glass, tapestry, needlework, ceilings, mantlepieces, friezes, for reproductions in metal, and for reredoses. This is a most excellent idea, and we regret it has not been carried out in a broader spirit—for there is too much of the narrow peculiarities of a clique that has clung from the first with parasitic tenacity to the Grosvenor Gallery, greatly impeding its growth as a natural and inevitable consequence. We ought to have seen among these designs some of the noble cartoons and studies of Watts, some of the decorative conceptions—and, as such, always eminent for beauty and grace—of the President; some of Poynter's classical subjects, and not merely his "St. George," in the pseudo-"romanticism" of which he is hardly seen to advantage; as likewise some of Marks's clever and curious contrarieties, in which we have realistic imitation and humorous ideas rendered upon monumental principals in treatment. The public would also have liked to see Madox Brown's and Shields' designs for mural works in hand, so as to form some idea of what is being done at Manchester, the Duke of Westminster's, and elsewhere throughout the country. Examples of all these, together with those on view, would have filled the Grosvenor Gallery, and have furnished a vastly better raison d'être for a winter exhibition than a water-colour gathering competing with the Dudley Gallery and the societies. Nay, why should not the scheme be extended so as to include decorative works of all kinds—sculpture in all its phases, "applied art," and even ornamentation of the highest description, keeping prominently in view the association of all these with architecture? Such an exhibition would be instructive in a high degree, and no less attractive, in the present rage for decoration. The decorator of the present day is too often little more than a tradesman or mechanic, whereas all true decoration flows from fine art: all the great decorators of old were in truth artists; and such an exhibition as we have indicated would directly tend to place decoration on a right basis, by showing the interdependence and essential identity of all the arts.

The works exhibited in this department on the present occasion are mostly by Messrs. H. Holiday, Walter Crane, and Burne Jones. The large coloured design by Mr. Poynter for the mosaic in the Westminster Palace—"St. George, with allegorical figures of Fortitude and Purity"—is, as we have intimated, not in his happiest vein; the style has dignity, but, not being distinctly classical, or Renaissance, the artist does not seem at home, and, apart from the position of the mosaic, the proportions of the figures should be longer. Professor Richmond has a cartoon in coloured chalks of the "Birth of Venus"—the goddess rising in a graceful curve from the parting waves and sea-foam—which, though slight, if not weak, has much sweetness and beauty in the as yet slender form. Mr. Holiday is a well-practised draughtsman of the human figure, with some imagination and a considerable sense of beauty (see the allegorical figures of the Arts in No. 329*), while his groups are well composed and well adapted to widely different requirements. There are works large and small by him here, including sketches for stained-glass windows; a design for a fresco in the Townhall, Rochdale; a sketch for a Reredos for Bolton Abbey; a "St. Michael," "Hope Parting a Dark Cloud," and "Fortitude Vanquishing Evil," the female figure of Fortitude being armed in allegorical scale armour fitting close to her whole form. Mr. Crane is insufficiently trained in the higher technicalities of art; he has not mastered the human figure; with increase of scale, as in "The Goose-Girl," a cartoon for tapestry, the queerness of his draughtsmanship, added, in this instance, to the oddity of the conception, almost reaches the ludicrous. Yet these very drawbacks seem to lend a charm of quaint naïveté to his rendering of simpler subjects on a smaller scale, and he becomes quite delightful when dealing with childish themes—as in his nursery wall-papers (334), nursery tiles, &c. He has, besides, considerable command of ornament; whilst occasionally his invention is original and striking, as in "Night and Day," a design for the decoration of a ceiling (360), where on one side a black-robed n..l black-winged figure, and in the opposite compartment a corresponding figure, white-winged and white-draped, support a globe, the signs of the zodiac filling the oblong border.

But most remarkable here, if only for their phenomenal singularities as the productions of a living painter, are an extensive series of designs by Mr. Burne Jones. These are mostly cartoons for stained-glass windows in coloured chalks or distemper; but other designs for single figures and groups in the same materials, or in oil, are for mural or other decorations. Among the most important designs for windows, are "The Judgment" for Easthampstead, "Two Groups of Angels" for Salisbury Cathedral, and "Paradise," in four long lights. The cartoons for these do not, of course, do justice to the artist's fine sense of the harmonics of colour—decorative, not true or naturalistic colouring being understood—which has done much towards qualifying the garish horrors of modern glass-painting. From the technical standpoint, and particularly as regards the draughtsmanship, one of the best of all the designs is "Elijah" fed by the ravens; it is simple, large, and impressive, with little affectation in treatment. The modelling of the torso of "A Sea Nymph" (326) is also unusually good as from this artist; the flying fish, which the siren is sportively catching, are likewise painted with the sweeping precision of hand of a Japanese. The bulbous curves of blue which stand for tumbling sea-billows scarcely, however, reach the realism of the Chinese. "Cupid's Hunting-Ground" (327) is a startling novelty in decoration, the figures and accessories being of stucco, we presume, raised in relief, gilt, and tinted transparently. The subject is the Love God blindfold, drawing his bow at random, with one foot on a prostrate victim, while other nymphs watch him in fascinated bewilderment. We need hardly say that in all the female faces of these designs we have one and the same type of melancholy, sentimental, piteous beauty—if beauty it can be called, borrowed partly, perhaps, from Botticelli—a type characterised by thin cheeks, hard jaws, blunt noses, grey-frised dreamy eyes, thick upper lip and nether lip purple with fevered blood. Nevertheless, decoration is a fairer field for conventions of all kinds than fine-art proper—thus much must be conceded. And Mr. Burne Jones is in his proper element in decoration. The first impression of these designs, especially those for church windows, is one of surprise at the perfect familiarity they show with early Italian art. In every one we are reminded in whole or in part of Mantegna, Masaccio, Fra Angelico, Perugino, Botticelli, and the Florentines. They are, in fact, neither more nor less than a cento from those early masters. They even exceed the peculiarities—peculiarities to us, unconscious to them—of these masters, as in all too servile imitation. And admitting, as we have said, the wide license that may be claimed for decoration, can this be the true end of art—such entire surrender of an artist's birthright in time, such rehabilitation of the ignorance and superstition of the "Ages of Faith;" such neglect of all the fruit of centuries of observation, experience, and thought. Is this not rather pandering to the puerile and dilettante excesses of the most advanced Ritualism? Is this not indeed mere amateur painting in excelsis?

Brierly, is a not unworthy companion to the Laureate's stirring poem on the same event, and will doubtless attain a wide popularity.

Mr. G. B. O'Neil's picture in the last Academy Exhibition, entitled "Gee Up!" has been engraved. The subject—a little boy riding pick-a-back on the shoulders of his young mother, or elder sister, and pretending to whip her with a twig—cannot fail to be popular, and the engraver, Mr. Arthur Tyrrell, has rendered the expressions happily, and relieved the figures with much depth of tone in the background. Messrs. Tooth, of the Haymarket, are the publishers.

We have to record the death of the landscape-engraver John Cousen, whose works after Turner, Stanfield, and others those conversant with the art of landscape engraving in its best period hold in high esteem. In consequence of weak health, he retired from the practice of his art about sixteen years ago. He was a native of Bradford, in Yorkshire, and died at his residence, at South Norwood, on Sunday week, in his seventy-seventh year.

We are requested to state that upon the last Saturday of each of the periodical exhibitions held at the Hanover Gallery, New Bond-street, free admission will be granted (between the hours of three and eight p.m.) to persons employed in banks and wholesale warehouses in the City and at the West-End upon presentation of the card of their employers or other necessary means of verification. The present Saturday will be the first day on which this arrangement will take effect.

An Etching Society has been formed at Antwerp, under the auspices of the Cercle Artistique, from which excellent work may be expected. The contributors to the first two livraisons now before us, are C. Verlat, F. Lamorinière, H. Schaefels, J. B. Michiels, P. Verhaert, W. Linnig, jun., E. Farasin, A. J. Verhoeven-Bale, A. and Madame Elsen. The productions of these artists are of widely different degrees of merit, but several have fine and rare qualities; and we know of no publication of the kind so good at so moderate a price.

Mr. J. W. Mackay, the American millionaire, has shown his appreciation of the English water-colour school by the purchase of many important works in the present Exhibition of the Water-Colour Society. Amongst the most important may be mentioned Oswald Brierly's "Autumn Squall in the Lagoon," Samuel Read's "Burgos Cathedral," Basil Bradley's "Slightly Contrarie," Collingwood Smith's "Devil's Bridge," and Carl Haag's "Montenegrin Peasant." Mr. Mackay made several purchases also at the Institute.

Under the title "Along the Thames," Mr. A. Ballin has produced a first series of seven etchings of favourite spots and points of view "up stream" along our noble river. Mr. Ballin has brought to the execution of these a feeling for composition, a sense of aerial effect, and the right balance of freedom and precision in touch; and such qualities, conjoined with the charm of the subjects, cannot fail to ensure success with the public. The work, which it is proposed to extend, in similar successive sets, is being published by Mr. Dunthorne, of Vigo-street.

The annual prizes to students at the Female School of Art, Queen-square, have been awarded thus:—Queen's Scholarship, Florence Reason (second year); national Gilchrist Scholarships, Ethel Spiller (second year), and Ethel Chapman Nisbet (first year); Clothworkers' Scholarship, Catherine Martha Wood; Subscribers' Scholarship, Norah Waugh; Queen's gold medal, Florence Reason; national silver medal, Edith Harris and Ethel Chapman Nisbet; national bronze medal, Florence Reason; national Queen's prizes, Alice Jane Chaplin, Elizabeth M. Lovell, Ellen Rouse, Ethel Mary Spiller, and Lydia Whitaker. A painting, "British Sailor," in water colour, by Florence Reason, has been purchased by her Majesty.

About six months ago Messrs. Tangye, engineers, of Birmingham, offered to subscribe a sum of £10,000 towards the erection of an art gallery, on condition that the Town Council would vote for the erection of the art gallery and an industrial museum, and that a further sum of £5000 be obtained by public subscription. At the meeting of the council on Tuesday it was announced that £6500 had been subscribed or promised. The council, who had previously given their sanction for the establishment of an art gallery, passed a vote of thanks to Messrs. Tangye for their munificent gift. The art gallery will be situated in the Council House, and already many presents of valuable works of art have been made.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers on the last day of the fourth week in December was 92,651, of whom 51,547 were in workhouses and 41,107 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding week in 1879, these figures show a decrease of 2385; but as compared with 1878 and 1877 they show an increase of 7881 and 9598 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 697, of whom 550 were men, 121 women, and 26 children under sixteen.

In place of the usual weekly entertainment, a most enjoyable evening was provided for the inmates of the Brompton Consumption Hospital on the last night of the old year, by means of a Christmas-tree distribution, through the energetic benevolence of the lady superintendent, Miss Cameron, who found willing contributors in the physicians' wives, Mrs. J. E. Pollock, Mrs. S. Thompson, Mrs. C. T. Williams, Mrs. R. D. Powell, and Mrs. R. E. Thompson. Various articles had also been given by Lady Marcia Cholmondeley, Lady Louisa Finch, Lady Napier, Lady Titc, Mrs. Annesley Gore, and others. Of the two large trees (kindly sent by Messrs. Veitch and Sons), one was placed in the "Jenny Lind" gallery, for the female patients; and the other in the "Sir Henry Foulis" gallery, for the male inmates. These were thickly hung with pretty ornaments and small gifts, among which the Christmas candles twinkled brightly; whilst presents of a useful and practical character covered long tables. The resident medical official (Dr. Hicks), the clinical assistants, and other officials who had helped with the preparations, also assisted in the distribution of the gifts by Miss Cameron. Thanks to a bountiful supply of evergreens for Christmas decorations, sent from the country by Mrs. Wingfield, Sir W. R. Brown, Sir Philip Rose, and Mr. R. C. L. Bevan, the dining-halls and spacious corridors formed a pleasant picture; and the evening passed off most successfully.

SULPHOLINE LOTION.—An external means of curing Skin Diseases. There is scarcely any eruption but will yield to SULPHOLINE LOTION in a few days, and commence to fade away even if it seems past cure. Ordinary pimples, redness, blotches, scurf, roughness, vanish as if by magic; while old, enduring skin disorders, that have plagued the sufferers for years, however deeply rooted they may be, Sulpholine will successfully attack them. It destroys the animalcule which causes these unsightly, irritable, painful affections, and always produces a clear, healthy, natural condition of the skin. Sulpholine Lotion is sold by most Chemists. Bottles, 2s. 9d.

CONSUMPTION AND WASTING DISEASES.

IN "NOTES on CONSUMPTION and WASTING DISEASES SUCCESSFULLY TREATED with HYDRATED OIL, with Cases showing the immediate increase in weight by it," see Book published by Diprose, Bateman, and Co., Lincoln's-inn-fields. The ANGLO-AMERICAN DRUG COMPANY, Limited, 33, Farringdon-road, will send a copy free on application.

G. OVEREND DREWRY, M.D., Physician to the National Free Dispensary for Consumption and Wasting Diseases, Author of "Common-Sense Management of the Stomach," &c., referring to cases treated at the National Free Dispensary for Consumption and Wasting Diseases, says that "Hydroleine" (or Hydrated Oil) produces an effect such as neither cod-liver oil nor any preparation of it with which I am acquainted even faintly approaches, and patients are unanimous in their statement that the appetite is much increased by taking Hydrated Oil," and that, so far from possessing the unpleasant taste of ordinary cod-liver oil, the taste of "Hydrated Oil" is agreeable rather than the reverse, and is described by some as resembling Devonshire cream. These, I submit, are very important points in cases usually attended by great irritability of stomach. The general improvement in strength shown within a fortnight was in many instances surprising, even to myself, who had seen already in private practice many startling results from its use. My experience, however, shows that in cases where cod-liver oil or an emulsion of it has been depended upon, increase of weight is rarely obtained."—Page 46.

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil), Equal to Ten times the quantity of Cod-Liver Oil.

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil) Entirely supersedes plain Cod-Liver Oil.

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil) Produces rapid increase in flesh.

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil) Is certain in result, and is pleasant to take.

TRY YOUR WEIGHT!!

TRY YOUR WEIGHT.—HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil) has proved of the highest value as a food in consumption and all wasting diseases, invariably producing increase in flesh and weight. This preparation of Hydrated Cod-Liver Oil is tonic, digestive, and ten times more strengthening and nourishing, as well as far more pleasant to taste, than plain cod-liver oil. Hydroleine may be described as partially digested oil, which will nourish and produce increase of weight in those cases where oils or fat, not so treated, are difficult or impossible to digest. All tendency to emaciation and loss of weight is arrested by the regular use of Hydroleine, which may be discontinued when the usual average weight has been permanently acquired. Of all Chemists, 4s. 6d.; or sent direct, carriage paid, to any address in England for 5s.—Sold wholesale by the ANGLO-AMERICAN DRUG COMPANY, Limited, 33, Farringdon-road, London.

READ the following Extracts from a few among the hundreds of letters received, showing that HYDROLEINE will nourish, and cause young or old to increase in weight where plain cod-liver oil will not; the original letters, with many others, may be seen at our office.

DR. AUSTIN, of Sunnyside, East Grinstead, writing on May 13, 1880, says:—

"I recommended one patient to get it, and he gained 5 lb. weight in a week; left it off next week, and lost 4 lb. This speaks well."

MR. JAS. STEWART, Chemist, of Dalkeith, writing April 28, 1877, says:—

"I weighed only 116 lb. on March 26, took the Hydroleine very irregularly I must confess, and on April 19 weighed 124 lbs. I found it very pleasant to take, never experienced the least approach to eructation, and rather think it acted very much as a tonic."

WRITING of Hydrated Oil on May 14, 1877, Mr. KENNETH M'DONALD, of Dunkeld, says:—

"I had been taking cod-liver oil all winter myself, and thought I would first experiment on myself with the Hydroleine and I must say, whether it is that or not, I am much better; in fact, all right again; and I certainly give it the credit, and will recommend it to all in preference to the ordinary oil—it is much easier taken."

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil) has been favourably received by all classes of people, as well as the Press, as the following extracts will show:—

MRS. ELLEN COOKE, Weston-super-Mare, in a letter dated May 24, 1879, says:—

"I think the last bottle you sent me has saved the life of a little boy three years old."

MR. J. H. GREGORY, Master of Caxton Workhouse, Caxton, writing on March 12, 1878, says:—

"The effect of the bottle I received from you was marvellous, as I increased nearly 4 lb. in weight, and felt better in every way."

MRS. MARYATT, Bayswater, W., writing on Jan. 23, 1877, speaks of the Hydrated Oil in the following terms:—

"My little boy (aged five and a half years) is sometimes fond of it that he will take it just as it is, without the ginger or orange wine, and will smack his lips after it. As for myself, I can never sound its praises too loudly. I consider it a perfect life-giver."

MR. JOHN MILTON, writing from Liverpool on May 7, 1877, says:—

"Five weeks ago a small pamphlet was handed to me descriptive of your HYDROLEINE, and since that time my wife has been taking just one bottle a week with certain success."

MR. A. BOYCE, Chemist, Hayward's-heath, writing on July 9, 1877, says:—

"I have given it to several consumptive cases, and am pleased to inform you with very good result. The effect of it on two persons (children) has been wonderful. I am trying to make it known every where I can."

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil) Is a patent medicine.

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil) Has the formula up in every bottle.

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil) Is used to increase flesh.

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil) May be relied upon to increase weight.

THE CHEMICAL PRINCIPLES upon which HYDRATED OIL is prepared were first described in a treatise on the Assimilation and Digestion of Fats in the Human Body, by H. C. Bartlett, Ph.D., F.C.S., published by Messrs. J. and A. Churchill, New Burlington-street (Fat in the Human Body, page 41):—"Nothing appears to restore the healthy functions of the liver and pancreas in these cases except the frequent ingestion of oil or liquid fat, so treated artificially that it is already partially transformed by fermentation and the reaction of bile. Seized on with avidity by the absorbents, it is insensibly assimilated by the digestive organs, until they gradually become strengthened, not only to provide their own nourishment, but to transform a sufficient quantity of fat to supply the inevitable waste throughout the body."

ALL persons taking HYDROLEINE are particularly urged to keep an ACCOUNT from WEEK to WEEK of their WEIGHT, that the gain and improvement may be shown. The makers, having devoted special attention to perfecting a process by means of which uniformity in the production of HYDRATED OIL is secured, desire to direct the attention of the medical profession and the public to this preparation, to distinguish which the name of HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil) has been registered under the Trade-Marks Acts. Ask your Chemist for it. If your Chemist has not the "Hydroleine" in stock, a bottle will be sent from the Factory (carriage paid) to any part of England, on receipt of Post-office Order, 5s. Sold wholesale by the ANGLO-AMERICAN DRUG COMPANY, Limited, 33, Farringdon-road, London. Pamphlet sent free to any address.

"THE LADIES' GAZETTE OF FASHION" for October, 1880, says:—
"The warm reception accorded to the
in Paris—that City of the fashionable—is enough to assure it of success, even were its own intrinsic merits of colour, fineness, lightness, and excellent wearing qualities to constitute an insufficient recommendation.
"LOUIS." It was, indeed, a "happy thought" of its manufacturers to stamp it with its own name on every yard, for, having once made a trial of it, we shall not desire to become the purchasers of any other, and there are so many new kinds in the market that there is plenty of competition. Many ladies have adopted the
in place of real velvet, for evening wear, and the list of colours in which it is manufactured is so long that every purchaser can suit her own complexion.
Ladies are respectfully informed that on and after this date all Louis Velveteen, both "LOUIS." Black and the New Autumn and Winter Colours, have stamped on the back plain instructions for removing all creases, folding-marks, &c., made in conveyance by rail, post, or other causes.
WHOLESALE AGENTS,
who will send on inquiry, post-free, the names of the nearest Drapers from whom the genuine "LOUIS" VELVETEEN can be obtained:—
"LOUIS." J. H. FULLER, 97, Watling-street, London, E.C.
JOHN FREEMAN, 20, Wicklow-street, Dublin.

REINDEER CAMP IN KING WILLIAM'S LAND.

AT THE GALWAY ASSIZES.

Galway, Dec. 17.

Perhaps for extreme unadulterated specimens of the uncultured and entirely original Irish peasantry to be found in a concentrated group one could not possibly hit upon a more fallow field of study than the ancient "City of the Tribes," otherwise Galway, during the time of assize. For there you can find the natives of the wild outlying districts all heaped together on their various missions of legal import, either as plaintiffs or defendants—mostly, I think, as defendants or witnesses. It was my peculiar privilege to visit Galway during the Assizes. I found on the very verge of the Midland Great Western Railway Station—the morning train of which company had borne me hither through a marvellous country of rich brown and green bog, which shook under the vibration of the cars like a jelly and gave a peculiar hushed motion to the journey not unlike a towed barge—a huge hotel built by the company for the prospective purposes of a line of steamers to America.

BARON DOWSE READING THREATENING LETTER.

The place at first looked bleak; but, under the immediate care of the manageress, Miss Hoyne, of whose hospitable talents I had read in the Daily News, I found life was quite possible. The journey to Galway from Dublin is slow and tedious—perhaps on account of its monotony—until it nears a finish; then the fresh, hard ozone of the Atlantic sings against the carriage window, and almost makes the jaded traveller volatile. There is an indescribable influence in this Galway air that is worth experiencing. The place itself is too quaint and unusual to deal with all at once; and as my object was to attend the Assizes, holden under the judgeship of Baron Dowse, I will leave other matter characteristic of Galway for another time. Of course, the excitement here was, as in other portions of the Green Isle, very intense; people talk of nought but the burning question, "What will happen? what will be done?" On my way to discover the whereabouts of the court-house, I met with a strange being, who loudly called upon me not to discard him because he was "an Alien," or, as he put it, an "Eelian in wan fut." I was not at all inclined to discard him, if he had happened to be an Eelian all over, for I was thirsting for information not only as to the whereabouts of the court-house, but other matters of general interest. Looking down at this individual's "fut" (the left one), pretentiously thrust out, I found that, unlike the other, it was unshod. I soon learnt that the hapless possessor of it had been in years gone by almost deluded into the acceptance of the Protestant faith through a seductive offer of soup from a Mephistopheles in the guise of a missionary; but, fortunately for the sake of the rest of his person and his immortal attributes, he had withdrawn just when his "fut" was on the threshold. That foot is destined to walk through the world, or the small portion of it that its owner infests, in a state of naked penance for the rest of its earthly career. The "Souper," as this wild-looking individual is called, thought his condition quite worthy of my monetary attention—so did I, provided that he gave me an indication of where the court-house stood. This he did cheerfully, but did with deliberate falsehood, for I soon discovered that by walking in the direction he pointed out I was in the Claddagh, the far-famed fish-market of Galway. In order to avoid the clamorous attentions of the short-skirted dames who occupy this district, and who were mightily anxious that I should purchase large baskets of whiting, any one basket of which would have troubled me to lift, I, with much pretence of knowing my own business, wandered down to the water's edge and looked at the fishing-boats, with their strange build and gear (of which more at another time): on the stern of each was the legend bearing the name of the craft. I was puzzled to see that four out of every six bore the title of "St. Patrick," printed backwards, exactly after the manner of my Sketch. My only solution of it is this, that, like Charles Dickens's strong memory of seeing the words "Coffee-room" reversed upon the panel of the room where he performed his meagre boyish meal and read the legend "MOOR EEFFOC," so some local genius of the Claddagh, having studied the name of the patron saint from the wrong side of the church window, had instituted the strange legend that may be seen on two thirds of the fishing-craft in Galway Bay. I presently discovered that it was growing over late to pay any attention to the proceedings at the Assizes; so, repairing to my hotel, I determined to visit the scene of justice at half-past ten of the clock next morning, being the hour fixed by Baron Dowse for the daily sitting of the Court. A strange sight the entrance to the court presented. Armed constables stood about intermixed with a scattering of strange diffident civilians in quaint costumes, seeming in all about one third of the gathering. Just as I entered the court, a bleak building like a very poor white-washed lecture hall in a moribund college, the tipstaff cried out "silence," in which duty he was assisted by the Clerk of the Crown, an elderly gentleman, who had laboriously trained his scanty stock of hair over one side of his head—the right side—the side from his position in court I observed the Judge would have to look upon him. No sooner had Baron Dowse entered the bench than in an off-hand querulous manner he announced that he had, before the business of the Court would be proceeded with, to draw to the jury's attention "a matter of some public importance." He then produced a letter, and, stating that he had received it that morning, and that, "as the time for delicacy had passed in such matters, he would read it in its entirety." He then, in a sharp, clipped north of Ireland dialect, proceeded to read aloud the foul language of a monstrous threat against his life, "even in the very Court." He then handed the document to County Inspector Cullen, and told the Court to proceed with its business. This is a story now old through newspaper reports, but may give interest to sketches made at the moment. Then the jury was sworn, and distinguished counsellors, all with a plentiful supply of Irish brogue and manner, commenced their pleadings and their invective. The Crown prosecutions were led by "The MacDermot," who, I find by the Irish Peerage list, is "The Prince of Coolavin." Unlike many Princes, he is an exceedingly shrewd cross-examiner, and made many an innocent-looking scoundrel as black as night before he parted with him. By The MacDermot's side sat Counsellor Jordan (everybody who wears a wig, saving the Judge, is a "Counsellor" in Ireland), and in stern opposition for the defence was the chiefest ornament of this Western people, the hope of "the City of the Tribes," Mr. O'Malley. Counsellor O'Malley is one of those fine old-fashioned Irish orators, whose style of invective and ornamental sentiment became almost obsolete in the last generation. The case I was most interested in was that of an attempt at wreckage. A large steamer had gone ashore between rocks, upon which the natives of those parts (a wild portion of the county Galway) came down with reaping hooks in hands to welcome her. The coastguard, who had fortunately taken earlier possession, arrested one gentleman for having, with his particular reaping hook, cut one of the hawsers by which she was made safe to the rocks. The other gentlemen, who came up to swear to his innocence, all ignored the English tongue, and the aid of an interpreter was necessary. "Ask him if the prisoner had a hook," said the Counsel. Answer: "There were plenty of hooks in the crowd, but he had not one." "Why, ask him, had they their hooks with them at this time of year?" Answer: "It is the fashion in that part of the country to go down and meet a stranded vessel with hooks in their hands." Charming hospitality! I thought. I know not what became of the prisoner; but I do know that the learned Judge had his suspicions that the witnesses understood every word that was spoken in English; and I am inclined to agree with him. In the corridor of the court might be seen knots of the Arran Islanders in their strange costumes of white rough flannel and raw-hide mocassins, their bright blue socks and Tam-o'-Shanter caps—everything home spun and made, and with the inevitable Spanish stamp of feature of the Western Irish. They do not stand about, for the most part, but squat silently and moodily for hours; and in the dusk of the corridor you will have to pick your way amongst them like so many sacks or dwarf bushes.

WALLIS MACKAY.

THE AMERICAN FRANKLIN SEARCH EXPEDITION.

We continue from last week the publication of a series of Illustrations, furnished by the Sketches of Mr. H. W. Klutschak, a Bohemian artist, who accompanied, during nearly a twelvemonth of 1879 and 1880, the overland sledge expedition fitted out by the New York Geographical Society, and commanded by Lieutenant Frederick Schwatka, a cavalry officer of the United States Federal Army, from the northern shore of Hudson's Bay to Simpson's Strait, and thence to the north-western coast of King William's Land. This expedition was in search of any relics or documents of the fate of Sir John Franklin's party, the officers and crew of H.M.S. Erebus and Terror, lost in that region above thirty years ago.

A narrative of the American Franklin Search Expedition, with a Chart of its course, was printed in the Supplement to our last week's paper, accompanied by Engravings from Mr. Klutschak's sketches of the "Noonday Rest of the Sledge Party under Divide Hill;" the discovery of the "Grave of Lieutenant John Irving, R.N., near Victory Point," and the Monument erected there by Lieutenant Schwatka; also, the scene in conversation with the Esquimaux Indians, who were delighted by showing them an English illustrated newspaper.

The subjects of Mr. Klutschak's sketches engraved for this week's publication are, the "Reindeer Camp in King William's Land;" a reindeer-hunt in kayaks, or Esquimaux canoes; the party crossing Simpson's Strait by a similar mode of conveyance; and views of Lake Daly, Starvation Cove, and the Salmon Creek. We derive some information from Mr. Klutschak's private diary, also placed by him at our disposal. The exploring party consisted of Lieutenant Schwatka, Mr. W. H. Gilder, correspondent of the New York Herald, Mr. Klutschak, and Mr. Frank Melms, of Milwaukie, volunteers; with Joe Ebierling, of Croton, Connecticut, an experienced Arctic traveller, engaged as huntsman and Esquimaux interpreter. A number of the Esquimaux, of different tribes, with their teams of dogs for the sledges and their "kayaks" for crossing the rivers and straits, were induced to aid the expedition overland. The summer months of 1879 were employed in the journey northward, from Camp Daly, named after Chief Justice Daly of the United States, a place near Dépôt Island, Hudson's Bay, to the shores of Simpson's Strait. The crossing of the strait, on Sept. 17, by the aid of the Esquimaux

...ances is the subject of one of our Illustrations. Other sketches represent the hunting of reindeer, and the salmon fishing, by which the party were enabled, with some assistance from their native followers, to obtain a sufficiency of food during the open season. As this drew to a close, the reindeer were to be seen in immense herds. On Sept. 23 a herd of fifty was encountered, and Toolooah, the Esquimaux hunter, killed seven with a Winchester repeating carbine in less than ten minutes. On that day the different members of the party killed no fewer than twenty-six reindeer. During some time the food consisted of reindeer tallow and meat, which was eaten, raw and frozen, for breakfast; the evening meal was generally made as warm as possible. Fuel was very difficult to obtain, and chiefly consisted of a species of moss. Reindeer tallow was used for a light, and a piece of fibrous moss served as a wick. The mean temperature for the month of September was 21·1 deg. F., and the lowest 5 deg. above zero. During October the mean temperature was 0 deg., and the lowest 38 deg. below zero; but, although the party wore only their woollen clothes and an overcoat, the cold was not very annoying. The temperature rose at noon to 22 deg. or 24 deg. above zero.

On Oct. 14 the ice was sufficiently strong for the reindeer to cross over to the mainland, and not a single one was seen after this. Joe, one of the Esquimaux, built an igloo, or snow hut, adjoining that occupied by the search party; but on Oct. 30 he wanted to get away, as the medicine man of the tribe was constantly advising the Esquimaux to kill some of the party. Some Esquimaux would, no doubt, be very glad to get possession of the guns and knives, but were afraid to attack the party. Lieutenant Schwatka decided that he would start from the camp and go through the inlet from Wilmot Bay. He would thus meet another tribe of natives who would give them a supply of fish sufficient to last until the party should again reach the reindeer country. On Nov. 12 Sherman Inlet was reached, where a very large camp of Esquimaux was encountered. The men were standing outside to receive the strangers. They welcomed the party, and during their stay provided for their comfort. Here a piece of wax candle was found with the natives. They met with an old woman, who had seen white men on Boothia Isthmus when she was a girl, and who had also been with the party who had found the boat and skeleton at Starvation Cove, near Richardson Point. The mean temperature for November was 23·3 deg. below zero, and the lowest noted was 49 deg. below zero. The highest at noon was little above zero. The salmon caught by the natives were remarkably large and fat. We present a view of Starvation Cove, with the monument erected there, by the American party, to commemorate the fate of the British explorers thirty-three years ago.

During the summer the natives had found near Starvation Cove the skeleton of a white man and two pieces of his clothes, which indicated that he was a sailor, not an officer. On the 20th Lieutenant Schwatka observed a meridian culmination of the moon in latitude 67 deg. 32 min. 42 sec. It was very difficult to make astronomical observations with a sextant in a temperature 70 deg. below freezing-point. The ice on the sextant glasses has to be removed by the warm finger, which in turn gets blistered, and it was a difficult matter to keep the glass in working order, as every substance had frozen. Sometimes the igloos or snow huts separated, and the breath of the occupants could be seen oozing at a distance of miles. The highest temperature in December was 26 deg. below zero, and the lowest 69 deg. below zero, or 100 deg. below freezing point. This was at noon on Dec. 28.

The party now began to be assailed by wolves, and Esquimaux ingenuity was called into requisition to deal with the beasts. Equeesik, one of these people, made a trap in the following manner:—He set two keenly-sharpened knife-blades covered with blood in the snow. These the wolves licked, at the same time slitting their tongues. The cold kept them from feeling the wounds at the time, and their own warm blood tempted them to continue till their tongues were scarified in such a manner that death was inevitable. The Esquimaux also got a strip of whalebone and rolled it up in meat, which was held together by the frost until it was swallowed by the wolf, when the meat thawed, and the whalebone, opening out, caused a most agonising death.

On the western shore of King William's Land, where the Erebus and Terror were abandoned in 1847, these American explorers found some interesting relics of Sir John Franklin's party. They came upon the camp of Captain Crozier, and in a grave found a skull and some other bones; also a handkerchief and a silver medal, two-and-a-half inches in diameter, with a bas-relief portrait of George IV., surrounded with the words "Georgius IV., D.G. Britanniarum Rex, 1820," on the obverse, and on the reverse, "Second Mathematical prize, Royal Naval College," inclosing the words "Awarded to John Irving, Midsummer, 1830." This identified the remains as those of Lieutenant Irving, the third officer of the Terror; and Lieutenant Schwatka brought them to New York, and entered into correspondence with the Admiralty with reference to their transmission to this country. In answer to a communication from the Admiralty, the Anchor Line Company asked to be allowed the privilege of bringing over the remains to this country. The offer was accepted, and the box containing them was handed to the Captain of the Circassia, which brought them to Glasgow. They were consigned to Lieutenant-Colonel Irving, a brother of the deceased, at present residing in England. It was arranged to inter the remains in Edinburgh, the native city of Lieutenant Irving. The funeral ceremony was to take place, with naval honours, yesterday (Friday), in the Dean Cemetery, at Edinburgh.

The anchor and chain belonging to the ill-fated Terror, which were recently found near the Nore light-ship by a party of Leigh fishermen, have just been brought to Sheerness Dockyard. The Terror is supposed to have slipped her anchor at the Nore when she started, in company with the Erebus, upon the Arctic Expedition in which Sir John Franklin perished. The anchor is to be preserved as a relic of the unfortunate ship.

We shall give some more of Mr. Klutschak's Sketches of the American Franklin Search Expedition next week.

The new Act for issuing postal money orders is in operation. The amounts for which postal orders are to be issued are as follows:—1s., 1s. 6d., at a commission of one half-penny each; 2s. 6d., 5s., 7s. 6d., at a commission of one penny each; and 10s., 12s. 6d., 15s., 17s. 6d., and 20s., at a commission of twopence. A part of the machinery necessary for the transaction of money-order business which will be dispensed with in the case of postal orders is the application form. In fact, the sale of postal orders will greatly resemble that of postage stamps, for they will require no writing on the part of the issuing postmaster beyond his signature; and, moreover, they will be purchasable in books, to be used at convenience, so that, as Mr. Chetwynd remarked, "the purchaser will practically open an account at a Government bank, and the cheque-book issued to him will enable him to draw upon any of the 5000 (this number has since been increased to over 6000) banks to the extent of the amount deposited by him, but to no larger amount."

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

GENERAL PROPERTIES OF MATTER.

Professor James Dewar, M.A., F.R.S., the Fullerian Professor of Chemistry, gave the first of a course of six lectures on atoms on Tuesday, Dec. 28. Before proceeding to the consideration of the unseen tiny particles, termed atoms, of which all bodies are composed, the Professor explained and illustrated the general properties of matter which are manifest to our senses, such as volume, weight, mobility, and chemical action. He showed that air and other gases have weight, and differ from each other in this respect; that two special gases may combine to form a solid; that lead reduced to a very fine powder ignites by contact with the air; and that by bringing into contact a bar of sulphur and a bar of white-hot iron, so great a heat is produced that the iron melts more rapidly than the sulphur. An entirely new substance (sulphate of iron) is thus formed, which does not retain the magnetic power of iron. This increase of heat is due to chemical action. The properties of the pendulum were then illustrated. Referring to a three-seconds' pendulum suspended from the roof, the Professor stated that the motions are equal in time, and that the time of an oscillation is independent of the weight of the suspended body, and that it varies with the length of the string and with the force of gravity at different parts of the earth's surface. He next showed and explained the experiments of Foucault, who, in 1851, proved the rotation of the earth by the variations of the angle between the plane of oscillation of a pendulum and the plane of the meridian. The varied graphic curves and figures formed by combined pendulums vibrating in different directions were then exhibited; and similar luminous figures were produced by vibrating tuning-forks to which very small mirrors were attached. The vibratory movements of the forks were identical with those of the pendulums, the amplitude being smaller.

THE LAWS OF MOTION.

Professor Dewar, in his second lecture, given on Thursday, Dec. 30, resumed his illustrations of the laws of motion, common alike to the greatest masses and the minutest atoms. After exhibiting the various kinds of movements always going on, produced by torsion, pressure, electricity, and magnetism, the Professor commented on the great law of gravitation or attraction, which is the statement of the way in which all bodies tend to approach each other, and especially to the centre of the earth, to which all bodies fall with the same degree of velocity. Atwood's ingenious machine, in which the intensity of this force of gravity can be diminished and the atmospheric resistance made imperceptible, was exhibited as a means of accurately determining the relative velocity of falling bodies in a given time. The Professor next proceeded to exhibit and explain more complicated motions, produced by different forces, beginning with rotation, especially illustrating and explaining those due to the centrifugal force, which always attends all matter moved round a centre, shown in the tendency of the rotating body to recede from the centre of revolution. This was well illustrated by means of the whirling-table and other apparatus, including a top invented by Professor Clerk Maxwell. When a soap film was rotated, the central part became thinner and gorgeous colours appeared. The action of this force upon liquids was also shown in a beautiful manner. Reference was also made to the operation of this force in the movement of small bodies round larger ones—such as that of a stone in a sling. The manifestation of this force in doing work, such as lifting and driving, was also exemplified in a singularly interesting manner.

CORRELATION OF FORCES.

Professor Dewar began his third lecture on Saturday last, the 1st inst., by showing the effect of flashes of intermittent light upon rotating disks, in revealing figures otherwise invisible. He stated that all bodies are in a state of constant vibration; that such motion is universal, there being no rest in nature. When moving bodies are suddenly stopped they become hot, which is really due to the invisible movement of the minute particles of which they are composed. All heat is really "a mode of motion." After explaining the principle of the ordinary thermometer, and the construction of the exceedingly delicate thermoscope, the movements of which were rendered visible by the electric light reflected by a small mirror attached to the magnetic needle of a galvanometer, the Professor showed the effects of a very slight rise in temperature, such as that produced by one blow of a hammer upon an anvil. An example of the way in which heat is transformed into work and sound was shown by placing a piece of hot iron upon a mass of cold lead. The rocking of the iron thereby induced became so rapid as to produce a musical note. The enormous expansive force of heat was also illustrated. This was followed by examples of the effects of pressure upon gases, liquids, and solids, by which the forms of bodies are sometimes changed, their density being increased. Melted paraffin became solid by pressure. Ice, which is liquefied by pressure, is a remarkable exception. The effect upon glass under a pressure of about a ton to the square inch was well shown. Besides many other experiments, it was shown, by mixtures of water with ether, sugar, and carbonate of soda, that the volume of the mixture is sometimes less than that of the sum of their components, due to the greater cohesion of the atoms.

THE PHYSICAL FORCES.

Professor Dewar began his fourth lecture, given on Tuesday last, the 4th inst., with illustrations of the changes in the condition of matter produced by heat; from the solid to the liquid and gaseous states. Water transformed into steam increases about 1700 times its bulk. That all bodies do not expand when heated was proved by the contraction of an indiarubber ball containing water. A small fountain, produced by a minute hole pierced in it, was kept in action by slightly warming the ball. The effect of pressure upon the boiling point was demonstrated. When the pressure of the atmosphere (15 lb. to the square inch) is much reduced water boils at a temperature considerably below 212 deg. Fahr. (100 centigrades), and when the pressure is increased a higher temperature is proportionally required. The absorption of heat by evaporation was also illustrated. After explaining how gases by great pressure and intense cold may be converted into liquids, the Professor exhibited carbonic acid gas in the form of snow. This, by means of a hydraulic press, he transformed into a block of transparent ice, which gave off the gas rapidly from its surface; actually boiling at a temperature of about 100 deg. below the freezing-point of water. After commenting on the enormous amount of work silently done by the invisible molecules, perpetually in motion, the Professor exhibited on the screen the lifelike formation of crystals in a saline solution. The enormous power of cohesion possessed by the molecules of bodies was also well shown, especially by the extremely smooth surfaces of Whitworth's planes, which, when in contact, will sustain an enormous weight.

The season will begin on Friday evening, the 21st inst., when Mr. Warren De La Rue, the Hon. Secretary, will give a discourse on the Phenomena of the Electric Discharge with 14,400 Chloride of Silver cells. The courses of lectures are postponed for a week.

THE MAGAZINES.

SECOND NOTICE.

The sober sense of a good average number of Fraser is lit up by a contribution of real genius, "Vernon Lee's" tale of "A Culture Ghost." Considered merely as a story of the supernatural it ranks among the best specimens of its class, but its peculiar charm consists in the exquisite setting of the incidents, the thoroughly Italian atmosphere in which it is steeped, the vivid landscape pictures and profound glimpses of the Lombard peasant's life; above all the intense feeling for music, only possible to a consummate judge of the art. Taken altogether, the blended effect of these elements is nearly that of the best of Hoffmann's "Fantasies," but with nothing strained or repulsive. Great attention will also be accorded to "O. K.'s" panegyric on the Emperor Alexander's reforms, which, however, will hardly promote the object which the writer evidently has at heart. The more clearly the internal state of Russia is shown to have called for such sweeping measures, the more reckless and unjustifiable seems the policy of foreign aggrandisement which, by destroying financial credit, threatens to bring all the Emperor's well-meant schemes to nothing. Mr. Brodrick's "Last Chapter of Irish History" is a still more important paper, and indeed the most valuable contribution to the subject we have seen, alike in its clear statement of the points at issue and its dignified warning against attempting to purchase a temporary settlement by deliberate injustice. Miss Carrington's essay on "Folk Lullabies" contains some charming translations.

The Contemporary Review has two articles of special mark. In one, Professor Jevons brings forward the claim of Richard Cantillon to be regarded as the real father of modern political economy. Cantillon, probably Irish by birth, was a merchant both in London and in Paris about the time of the South Sea Company. His posthumous "Essai sur la Nature du Commerce," originally composed in English, seems to have anticipated both Hume and Adam Smith in some of their main propositions. The other article is a very beautiful essay, by Miss Julia Wedgwood, on the "unconscious Christianity" of Plutarch, dwelling on the great moral elevation which, independently of Christian influence, was in Plutarch's time transforming the ethical ideals of the ancient world. "Taxation in the United States" points out the strong and weak points of American finance; and "The Jews in Germany" alleges such paltry excuses as it is possible to find for the late disgraceful outbreaks of an intolerance which is only the more odious for being, as the authoress truly asserts, in no respect prompted by religious bigotry. "Latin Christian Inscriptions," by the Rev. G. T. Stokes, abounds with interesting facts and inferences deduced from the study of these valuable documents.

Mr. Hyndman's "Dawn of a Revolutionary Epoch," in the Nineteenth Century, sounds alarming, but, in fact, contains hardly anything upon the present critical times unfamiliar to those who have reflected upon them. Of three papers on the Irish question the most important is that by Mr. Scebohm, who warns us against intensifying present difficulties after a short respite "by making artificial and uneconomical provision for the Irish where they ought not to be." In a very able and temperate paper, Sir Bartle Frere vindicates the policy of the Cape Government in attempting to disarm the Basutos, and expresses great confidence in the good feeling of the colonists towards the natives generally. Lord Dunraven's "Glimpse at Newfoundland," Captain Elsdale's "Day in a War Balloon," and Mr. Payn's "Penny Fiction" are very readable articles. Mr. Justice Stephen protests against the abolition of dignified judicial posts, on the ground of its tendency to exclude first-rate men from the Bench, and Professor Monier Williams contributes an interesting account of the Zoroastrian religion, the sublimity of whose essential principles contrasts singularly with the childishness of the ceremonial prescriptions of which its sacred books chiefly consist.

The Fortnightly is not very attractive, Mr. Herbert Spencer's essay on "Political Integration," though weighty, being decidedly hard reading, Sir George Campbell's remarks on "Land Legislation for Ireland" superficial, and Lord Houghton's notes on "Endymion" disappointing. Mr. Pattison's review of Mr. Christie's biography of Etienne Dolet is little more than an abstract of that excellent book. Dr. Pole's paper on aerial navigation is, at all events, a token that the subject is not considered by competent judges entirely outside the limits of the practical. "Geist's Grave," by Matthew Arnold, does not proclaim the entire extinction of German Geist, as evinced by the anti-semitic movement, but is a graceful, half serious, half playful copy of verses in commemoration of a German terrier.

The contribution to Scribner most likely to attract attention here is a paper on the London theatres, illustrated with flattering portraits of the leading London actors and actresses, and criticisms not always equally complimentary. The portrait of Mr. Irving as Vanderdecken is especially striking. "Recollections of American Society" are pleasing reminiscences of life half a century back. Mr. Gosse contributes a graceful poem, "The Charcoal Burner." The principal illustrated articles are the new instalment of Mr. Schuyler's Peter the Great; the very chic sketches of contemporary Parisian art; and the excellent memoir of the French painter, Millet. Millet's remarks on the right way of translating Theocritus are well worth attention. In one of his letters he is made to speak of "people who roll logs more persistently than I do." We should like to know how this sentence ran in the original.

Besides the long list of serial works published by Messrs. Cassell, Petter, and Galpin, mentioned in our last publication, they announce a new issue of the Illustrated Book of Pigeons, by Robert Fulton, arranged and edited by Lewis Wright, and illustrated with coloured plates drawn from life by J. W. Ludlow, and numerous engravings on wood. It is to be completed in twenty-five shilling monthly parts; and, judging from the first number, now before us, it bids fair to be a most interesting work. The second parts of Old and New Edinburgh and Cassell's Cookery, published by this firm, are also issued this month.

On Monday afternoon the first of the year's lectures at the London Institution, Finsbury-circus, was given by Dr. Andrew Wilson, F.R.C.S.E., before a large audience. The theatre was crowded to excess. Dr. Wilson took as his subject the Past and Present of Cuttle Fishes.

The Institution of Civil Engineers, which was established for the promotion of mechanical science, has entered upon its sixty-fourth year. It now numbers 3839 of all classes, distributed thus—Members 1231, associate members 1335, associates 569, honorary members 18, and students 686.

A meeting of the Victoria (Philosophical) Institute took place on Monday, when a paper was read by Mr. J. E. Howard, F.R.S., in which he considered the Early Destinies of Mankind as viewed by Science, Philosophy, and Religion. It was announced that the Institute's members now number nearly 900, and that upwards of a hundred—of whom one half are residents in India and the Colonies—joined last year.

OBITUARY.

SIR R. BARRY.

Sir Redmond Barry, K.C.M.G., LL.D., Senior Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Victoria, whose death is just announced, was born in 1813, the third son of Major-General Henry Greene Barry, of Ballyclough, in the county of Cork, by Phœbe, his wife, daughter of John Armstrong Drought, Esq., of Lettybrook, King's County. He received his education at Trinity College, Dublin, and was called to the Irish Bar in 1838. In 1851 he became Solicitor-General of Victoria, and was appointed in 1852 Judge of the Supreme Court. He was also Chancellor of Melbourne University from 1853, and took at all times a prominent part in the public affairs of the colony. Sir Redmond was created a Knight Bachelor in 1860, and a K.C.M.G. in 1877.

MR. UPTON-COTTRELL-DORMER.

Mr. Clement Upton-Cottrell-Dormer, of Rousham Hall, Oxford, J.P. and D.L., died there on the 29th ult. He was born Sept. 20, 1827, the only son of Mr. Charles Cottrell-Dormer, of Rousham, by Frances Elizabeth, his wife, eldest daughter of Mr. Walter Strickland, of Cokethorpe Park, Oxon, and of Flamborough, Yorkshire. He married, in 1858, Florence Ann, second daughter of Mr. John Upton, of Ingmire Hall, Westmorland, and leaves issue. Mr. Cottrell-Dormer succeeded his father in 1874, and, by Royal license, he and his wife assumed, in 1876, the additional surname of Upton on Mrs. Cottrell-Dormer succeeding her sister, Miss Eliza Frances Upton, of Ingmire Hall. The family of Cottrell, of which the deceased gentleman was the male representative, derives its descent from Sir Clement Cottrell, for twenty years Groom Porter to King James I. The head of each generation from his time down to the death of Sir Clement Cottrell-Dormer, the grandfather of the gentleman whose death we record, was Master of the Ceremonies at the Court of St. James's, and each received the honour of knighthood.

We have also to record the deaths of—

Mr. Thompson Russell, J.P., at Shelbourne, Limerick, on the 23rd ult., aged eighty.

Colonel John Francis Vaughan, of Court Field, in the county of Hereford, J.P. and D.L., on the 17th ult.

The Hon. R. Hamilton Westenra, Lieutenant 9th Lancers, brother of the present Lord Rossmore, aged twenty-six.

Elizabeth, wife of Captain Fleming and widow of Sir George Buckley-Mathew, K.C.M.G., C.B., at Brighton, on the 25th ult. She was originally Miss Gerard, of New York.

The Rev. Dr. Jobson, for forty-six years a minister of the Wesleyan denomination, and President of the Conference eleven years ago, on the 3rd inst., from an attack of paralysis, in the sixty-ninth year of his age.

Miss Macleod, at Manners-road, Hampstead, in her 101st year. She had been residing latterly with her nephew and niece, Major-General and Mrs. Douglas-Hamilton, celebrated her hundredth birthday on New-Year's eve, having been born Dec. 31, 1780. She survived that anniversary only two days.

The Dowager Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, elder sister of the Duchess of Cambridge, recently, at Neu-strelitz. She was daughter of the Landgrave Frederick of Hesse-Cassel, and was born Jan. 21, 1796, and married, Aug. 12, 1817, George, Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, by whom she leaves surviving issue two sons—namely, the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz and Duke George of Mecklenburg-Strelitz.

The Hon. Charles Bushe Plunket, second son of John, third Lord Plunket, by his wife, Charlotte, third daughter of the late Right Hon. Charles Kendall Bushe (Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench in Ireland), Chief Magistrate of Police at Hong-Kong, on the 21st ult., on board ship, while on his way home on sick leave. The deceased gentleman, who was in his fifty-first year, married, Oct. 18, 1860, Emmeline, daughter of Mr. Robert Murrell, by whom he leaves a family.

Dr. John Stenhouse, F.R.S., in the seventy-second year of his age. He was a native of Glasgow, where he was educated and long resided. He removed to London after the failure of the Western Bank of Scotland had deprived him of his fortune bequeathed to him by his father, and was appointed Lecturer on Chemistry at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, but was obliged to resign in 1857 owing to a severe attack of paralysis. In 1865 he succeeded Dr. Hofmann as non-resident assayer to the Royal Mint, but the office was abolished in 1870.

Major Edward Rodney Cecil Pechell, at Toronto, Canada, on Nov. 12, 1880. He was the fourth son of the late Captain S. G. Pechell, R.N., and brother of Sir G. S. Brooke-Pechell, Bart., of Alton, Hants. Major Pechell was in his forty-third year. He joined the Royal Canadian Rifles as Ensign in May, 1858, exchanged to the Military Train in 1863, and served until the reduction in June, 1870. Two years later he was brought into the second battalion 22nd Regiment. On that regiment going abroad, he exchanged to the 106th Light Infantry. He was Adjutant of the 1st Durham Militia for over three years, when he retired on a pension last May. Major Pechell married, in 1859, Alice Alleyne, eldest daughter of the late Rev. John Rothwell, and leaves two daughters.

The Rev. William Atkinson-Clark, of Belford Hall, Northumberland, hon. Canon of Durham, on the 30th ult., at his country residence. He was fourth son of Mr. George Atkinson, of Morland Hall, Westmorland. He married, in 1833, Jane Margaret, daughter of Mr. William Clark, of Belford Hall, and assumed the additional surname of Clark under the will of his brother-in-law in 1870. He was born in 1803, the eldest son of Mr. William Vaughan, J.P. and D.L., of Court Field, by Teresa, his first wife, daughter of Mr. Thomas Weld, of Lulworth Castle, Dorset. Colonel Vaughan was twice married, first, in 1830, to Eliza Louisa, daughter of Mr. John Rolls, of The Hendre; and, secondly, in 1860, his cousin, Mary Charlotte, only daughter of Mr. Joseph Weld, of Lulworth Castle; and, by his first wife, leaves a numerous family, of which the eldest son is Dr. Herbert Alfred Vaughan, Bishop of Salford. The Vaughans of Court Field, a very ancient Roman Catholic family, descend from William ap Jenkin Herbert, Lord of Gwarandee.

Mr. John Thomas Towson, well known for his works on navigation, at Liverpool, on the 3rd inst., from the effects of an accident. In 1857 his labours in the science of navigation were acknowledged by the presentation to him by the shipowners, principally of Liverpool, of a dock bond of the value of £1000, and an additional gratuity of more than £100. In 1850 Mr. Towson was appointed Scientific Examiner of Masters and Mates for the Port of Liverpool—a post from which he retired in 1873, still holding that of Chief Examiner in Compasses. In 1863 he was instructed by the Board of Trade to prepare a manual on the deviation of the compass, which was subsequently published at the expense of the board. In 1864 Dr. Woolley adopted this work as a text-book for the examinations conducted in the Department of Science and Art, South Kensington; and in 1870 Mr. Towson prepared a syllabus, which the Board of Trade adopted, for the examinations of masters and mates in compass deviation.

THE COUNTIES' CHESS ASSOCIATION.

The causes which have led to the decadence of this once useful and flourishing association are tersely and accurately stated in the following letter received from the Rev. Mr. Skipworth. No one has a better title to be heard on the subject of its fall than its founder, and no one is better qualified to advise what steps should be taken to effect its regeneration than its most successful manager. Mr. Skipworth needs, therefore, no excuse for the length of his letter. The existence of a Society which has for its motive the promotion of a wholesome, because disinterested, pursuit of chess depends now upon the amateurs of Great Britain and Ireland, and we hope that within the next few weeks they may prove worthy of themselves and the occasion:—

To the Editor of the "Illustrated London News."

Dear Sir,—I hope it is not a fact that the C. C. A., which has had so many successful and pleasant meetings, has done its work and must give way, or that it is aged and infirm and must shortly die a natural death. Present appearances are not, I confess, too favourable. The meetings held latterly, though pecuniarily successful, have not been well attended. The competitors in the classes have been far too few, though the play itself has in no way deteriorated; on the contrary, I believe it has been of a much higher tone. What, then, has been the cause of the falling off in numbers? There are, I think, two main reasons:—(1) Provincial amateurs have now found their level, and have got settled into their places, and many of them do not like to come to the meetings of the society year after year only to be told continually by the score-sheet that they are just below prize standard; and (2) many chessplayers cannot afford, and others do not care to afford, expensive hotel charges for a week. There are not a few who are precluded by business or professional engagements, and some who never will risk the loss of local reputation (who prefer not to be sorted); but we can never calculate upon the support of these, at all events as far as any attendance is concerned. I would venture, however, now to suggest a remedy for the unsatisfactory state of things in connection with the society. In the case of (1), I think we have got a little spoiled by the good prizes which have been invariably offered. We have gone to the meeting with the one idea of playing to win a prize—self has been too much alone in the foreground (a state of things frequently remarked upon by casual visitors), and no wonder, because the society has gone on in the old grooves in which it started. It has not grown in usefulness as it has grown in years. I would propose a programme which would not necessarily bring men into such determined conflict. I would give scope for more promiscuous play; nay, I would make it an honourable part for a man, if he wished so to do, to spend the greater part of the chess week in such encounters as would benefit and interest the players of the town or club where the society's meeting was being held, enjoyable chess for the man himself; for, speaking personally, the two pleasantest and most successful meetings I ever attended were meetings where no prizes whatever were offered. The programmes at Grantham and Boston were intended to favour promiscuous play; but real success in this direction could scarcely be expected until the idea had been thoroughly ventilated. When they receive us literally and hospitably, as Boston in particular did about a year ago, we ought to try and render good service, at all events in a chess point of view, in return for the reception accorded us. The society is not now invited to the strong centres of English chessplaying as it was in its earlier years, and I think for this simple reason, that it meets and carries away very much of the money subscribed without giving its quid pro quo. I should like to see the society's meetings thrown open to all British amateurs, and should like, at all events, the strongest of them to place themselves at the disposal of the committee for the time being, following the example of our friend Macdonnell at Boston, who, when asked to play Mr. Y. or Mr. Z., or to take part in this tournament or that, said, "Do just as you like with me, I'm ready for anything!" If my proposal is not too Utopian in its nature, I believe the old society will come out more vigorous than ever; and I fancy as a remedy for (2), hospitality would be freely offered when local subscriptions were not demanded to guarantee a specific prize-list. I certainly would do away with slight match-playing and prizes (special prizes would always be thankfully received by the society), but I should prefer to see promiscuous play and handicap classing occupy the more prominent places. More than once the members of the club in the town where the society has met were conspicuous by their absence from the close-lists, and, in a great measure, from the rooms. The reason was evident; and I don't think, under a revision of our scheme, that the same thing would readily occur. Our chess meetings, moreover, should be acceptable not for chess only, seeing that among our chess amateurs are many talented and highly-cultivated men.

I should be extremely glad to have any suggestions (by letter) from amateurs interested in the matter. I should also be glad if any town would offer the society a meeting, say, the latter part of next February, when our new proposals could be tested. Without detriment to others, would (may I ask) the scheme commend itself, in the first instance, to the members of the Oxford or Cambridge Club (many members of the society being Oxford or Cambridge men), so that they would take up the matter, and residents in the town join them in their invitation to the society—a meeting out of term-time would not be attractive.

I am afraid, Sir, I have trespassed very much on your valuable space, but the subject, as far as chess is concerned, is a very important one, and I crave your indulgence, and remain yours, very faithfully, Tetford Rectory, Horncastle, Dec. 21, 1880. A. B. Skipworth.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated June 3, 1869) with a codicil (dated Jan. 27, 1876) of the Right Hon. Elizabeth Mary, Viscountess Gort, late of No. 1, Portman-square, and of East Cowes Castle, Isle of Wight, who died on Oct. 11 last, has been proved by Herbert Henry Walford and the Right Hon. Standish Prendergast Vereker, Viscount Gort, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £140,000. The testatrix bequeaths all her diamonds and lace to the Right Hon. Caroline Harriet Vereker, Viscountess Gort; £12,000 to her stepson, the Hon. John Prendergast Vereker; £10,000 to her stepson the Hon. Henry Prendergast Vereker; £1000 to the minister and churchwardens of the parish of East Cowes to found a coal, food, and clothing fund for the poor of the said parish, distributable at Christmas; and legacies and annuities to her godchild, servants, and others. The residue of her real and personal property she leaves to her stepson Viscount Gort.

The will (dated June 19, 1871) with a codicil (dated Feb. 12, 1879) of Mr. Robert Oldrey, late of Harpole Hall, Haypole, Northamptonshire, who died on Nov. 23 last at West Brighton, was proved on the 11th ult. by John Coles, Edmund Paige Oldrey, the brother, and Walter Tidboald Coles, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £140,000. After giving a few legacies, and bequests, amounting to £5500, in favour of each of his daughters, the testator gives the residue of his property, real and personal, to his sons.

The will (dated March 30, 1870) of Mr. William James Holt, late of Gorphwysfa, Bangor, Carnarvonshire, who died on Sept. 16 last, was proved on the 2nd ult. by the Rev. Edward Denies Barrowes, the acting executor, the personal estate being sworn under £90,000. The testator bequeaths £500 each to the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, the Incorporated Society for Building and Repairing Churches, the Church Missionary Society, the Church of England Scripture Readers' Association, the Gloucester Infirmary, the National Life-Boat Institution, for building, equipping, and furnishing a life-boat to be placed on some station in the Bristol Channel, and to the Dean of Gloucester, towards the fund for repairing and restoring the Cathedral Church of that city; and numerous legacies to relatives and others. His estate of Gorphwysfa and all the residue of his property he leaves upon the trusts of the marriage settlement of his sister Mrs. Elizabeth Atcherley Symes.

The will (dated Sept. 30, 1876) with a codicil (dated May 15, 1878) of Mr. John Frederick Stanford, J.P., D.L., F.R.S., barrister-at-law, late of No. 5, North Bank, Regent's Park, who died on the 2nd ult., was proved on the 17th ult. by William Henry Kerr, Giuseppe Li Calsi, and William Vance, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £70,000. The testator bequeaths £25,000 to St. Mary's Hospital, Paddington, to build a new wing to bear the name and as a permanent memorial in honour of his late mother, Mrs. Mary Stanford; £5000 to the National Life-Boat Institution, for the purpose of placing and maintaining a life-boat or steam-tug on the coast, to be named after his mother, and as a permanent memorial in honour of her; £5000 Consols to the Chancellor and Masters of the University of Cambridge, for the purpose of completing and publishing his Etymological Dictionary of Foreign Phrases and Words; the portrait of a gentleman, a cotemporary of Shakspeare, by Cornelius Jansen, to the National Gallery; his manuscript papers and notes relating to Shakspeare's "Merry Wives of Windsor," to Mr. Wheatley, with £100 for the purpose of his completing and publishing same; and some other bequests. The residue of his property he leaves to Colonel Kerr. The testator, in appointing Mr. Vance one of his executors, says that he is "a diamond in the rough," and that he believes his other executors are all good men, otherwise he should not have appointed them. The deceased represented for some few years the borough of Reading in Parliament.

The will (dated Oct. 9, 1874) with a codicil (dated July 26, 1879) of Mr. William Edward Swaine, formerly of Leeds, but late of Brabœuf Manor, Guildford, who died on Nov. 13 last, at Ilkley, Yorkshire, was proved on the 7th ult. by Henry Paget Swaine and John Rowland Swaine, the sons, and John William Mellor, Q.C., the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £70,000. The testator leaves to his wife, Mrs. Mary Swaine, his furniture, plate, effects, horses and carriages; to each of his said sons, £2500; to each of his five daughters, Mary Eliza, Frances Gertrude, Edith Caroline, Lucy Beatrice, and Alice Muriel, £3000; legacies to his executors; and the residue of his real and personal estate to his wife.

The will (dated Aug. 28, 1863) with two codicils (dated Feb. 27 and Nov. 20, 1878) of Mr. Basil Sparrow, J.P., D.L., late of Gosfield-Place, Essex, who died on Sept. 21 last, was proved on the 18th ult. by Mrs. Julia Sparrow, the widow, and the Rev. Basil James Harold Sparrow, the son, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £60,000. The testator bequeaths to his wife £500, his leasehold interest in Gosfield-Place, and all his household furniture and effects and farming stock; and there are annuities to his children. The residue of his property is to be held upon trust for his wife for life and then for his children. The testator gives certain shares in the banking firm of Messrs. Sparrow, Tuffnell, and Co., of Chelmsford, of which he was the head, to his son Herbert Edward, if they will admit him as a partner, and he is then to take no other interest under the will.

The will (dated June 9, 1873) of Mr. John Henry Browne, late of Hethersett, Norfolk, who died on Oct. 18 last, was proved on the 1st ult. by Robert Blakemore Perkin and Frederick Fairlie Elderton, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £60,000. The testator gives to his wife, Mrs. Louisa Gertrude Browne, £200, a residence and furniture for life, and he makes up her income to £500 per annum; to his son, Henry Edward John Browne, on attaining twenty-six, the Hethersett estate; and there are some other bequests. The residue of his real and personal estate is to be held upon trust for all his children in equal shares.

The will (dated Nov. 26, 1873) of Mrs. Elizabeth Allan, late of No. 27, Sussex-square, Hyde Park, who died on Oct. 26 last, has been proved by the Rev. John Gott and James Macbraire, the nephews, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £30,000. The testatrix leaves all her real and personal estate upon trust for her sister, Mrs. Harriet Gott, for life; at her death there are considerable legacies to her other sisters, nephews, nieces, and godchildren; and the ultimate residue is given to her nephew, the Rev. John Gott.

The will (dated Oct. 9, 1876) of Mr. John David Bell, late of No. 45, Chowringhee, Calcutta, barrister-at-law, who died on Aug. 15 last, was proved on the 7th ult. by Mrs. Christina Lucy Bell, the widow, the executrix, the personal estate being sworn under £16,000. The testator gives his property to his children, subject to a life interest to his wife.

The will (dated March 5, 1879) of Mrs. Rosamond Croker, the widow of the late Right Hon. John Wilson Croker, late of Kensington Palace, who died on Nov. 7 last, has been proved by the Rev. G. S. Barrow, and Follett Pennell, the nephews, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £4000.

THE RISING IN THE TRANSVAAL.
TO
NON-COMMISSIONED and OTHERS,
VISITING OR RESIDING IN HOT CLIMATES.

From the "European Mail" of Nov. 5, 1880.

"Of all the trials that man almost recklessly places upon his constitution, none perhaps is so severe and pregnant with danger as that which accompanies a sudden and extreme change from a hot to a mild and cool climate, or in the reverse direction. At such times it is of the most vital importance that the body should be kept cool, and free from the most minute germs of disease. To effect this object, the judicious use of a saline is unquestionably the best safeguard that can be called into requisition, and of such preparations ENO'S FRUIT SALT may be said to be one of the best-conceived compounds. To residents in tropical climates the use of a medicinal comfort of this kind is indispensable, while its value in preventing prickly heat, boils, and whitlows is simply incalculable.

"Whatever may be the climatic conditions, the human body stands at all times, and under all circumstances, in need of some agent that will as thoroughly disinfect all its pores and arteries against the liability to epidemic diseases as the disinfectants of sanitation purge the sewers of a populous town. At the same time, such are the special therapeutical properties of the FRUIT SALT that a tone is given to the system, the strength is fortified, and the spirits exhilarated.

"With the temperature upwards of 100 deg. in the shade, and the system consequently unstrung through fatiguing occupation, exercise, or study, a saline of the character like that prepared by Mr. Eno is a boon the value of which is scarcely to be estimated by those who have never lived under similar climatic conditions. In cases where the liability to attack from jungle, marsh, and yellow fever exists to an alarming degree, the daily use of the FRUIT SALT will be found a thoroughly effective preventive.

"Speaking more generally, it may be said that the use of the preparation has a marked effect in improving the general health of persons of scorbutic habit, as well as of those who are liable to epileptic affections. In the latter case attacks may be warded off by the patient taking a full dose of the saline in a tumbler of cold water immediately upon feeling unwell, while persons suffering from nervous and dyspeptic headaches should take a spoonful in about half the quantity of water. Mention has been made of the mode of applying the remedy prepared by Mr. Eno for use in regard to these two classes of disorders with the view of showing the extreme simplicity of the mode of action, no less than that of the agent employed.

"In cases of irritability of the stomach, nausea, vomiting, sea-sickness, rheumatism, gout, and many other of the ills which human flesh is heir to, ENO'S FRUIT SALT not only claims, but has been proved again and again to possess remedial properties of a marvellously high order, and no household that wisely consults the comfort and safety of its members—whether located under the sun of England or India, or Southern Africa, the West Indies, or Australasia—will neglect to provide itself with a safeguard to health at once so pure, simple, and effective as the preparation which has caused the patentee's name to be a household word from one end of the earth to the other."

SUCCESS IN LIFE.

"A new invention is brought before the public and commands success. A score of abominable imitations are immediately introduced by the unscrupulous, who, in copying the original closely enough to deceive the public, and yet not so exactly as to infringe upon legal rights, exercise an ingenuity that, employed in an original channel, could not fail to secure reputation and profit."—Adams.

FLORIMEL OF PALM.

A white and delicate hand is the first attribute of beauty and civilisation. "The hand," says Sir Charles Bell in the "Bridgewater Treatise," "distinguishes man from the brute: be careful of it, for in polite society it is an index not only of the body but of the mind."

The Florimel of Palm being rubbed over the skin is to be removed with a little water, then dried with a soft towel. Once using will convince the most sceptical that, if daily applied, too much cannot be said in favour of Florimel of Palm for rendering the skin or hands white, delicate, soft, and fair.

Sold in Jars, 3s. 6d. each.
PIESSE and LUBIN, 2, New Bond-street, London.
May be obtained of any Chemist or Perfumer in the world.

TURKISH PASTILS.

"Through all my travels few things astonished me more than seeing the beauties of the harem smoking Narghiles at Stamboul. After smoking a sweet aromatic lozenge or pastil is used by them, which is said to impart an odour of flowers to the breath. I have never seen these breath lozenges but once in Europe, and that was at PIESSE and LUBIN'S shop in Bond-street."—Lady W. Montagu.

SWEET SACHETS.

PIESSE and LUBIN compose every variety of Sachet Powder the same odours as their many perfumes for the handkerchief. Placed in a drawer, etui, or travelling-bag, they impart a grateful and pleasing perfume without being too pungent. Piesse and Lubin also have, on demand, Dried Odorous Flowers, Spices, and Odoriferous Gums. Per ounce, 1s. 6d.; per lb., 21s.

FLORILINE. For the Teeth and Breath.

Is the best Liquid Dentifrice in the world; it thoroughly cleanses partially-decayed teeth from all parasites or living "animalcules," leaving them pearly white, imparting a delightful fragrance to the breath. The Fragrant Floriline removes instantly all odours arising from a foul stomach or tobacco smoke, being partly composed of honey, soda, and extracts of sweet herbs and plants. It is perfectly harmless, and delicious as sherry. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, at 2s. 6d. per Bottle.

VALUABLE DISCOVERY for the HAIR.

If your hair is turning grey, or white, or falling off, use "The Mexican Hair Renewer," for it will positively restore in every case Grey or White Hair to its original colour, without leaving the disagreeable smell of most "Restorers." It makes the hair charmingly beautiful, as well as promoting the growth of the hair on bald spots where the glands are not decayed. "The Mexican Hair Renewer" is sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, at 3s. 6d. per Bottle.

A MASS of CURLS is assured by regularly using two or three times a week COX'S CURLING FLUID, warranted harmless. Protected by Government stamp, signed John Robert Cox. Price 2s. 6d. per Bottle, with full directions, of all Chemists, or forwarded by L. N. MARSHALL, 36, St. Mary-le-square, Kennington, London, S.E., on receipt of amount.

PROSPECTUS.

The Falstaff Club is intended for the association of gentlemen of artistic tastes, and others interested in the drama, music, literature, art, and science.

The Club is non-political, and is designed to afford a means of social, intellectual, and recreative intercourse and amusement amongst its members. Conducted upon similar principles as the Mirlitons in Paris, the Falstaff will enter into friendly rivalry with that admirable and well-known club.

The premises acquired are those so widely known as Evans', situate at the corner of the Piazza, King-street, Covent-garden. They consist of the hotel of that name, and the large concert-hall (seating 1200 persons), and which will be converted into one of the prettiest and most commodious bijou theatres in London, fitted with a stage and its accessories, for entire property occupying over 20,000 square feet.

The Club-house will possess dining, smoking, billiard, supper, card, and reading rooms, a large drawing-room, and seventeen other apartments. Several of the latter will be set apart as dressing-rooms for the convenience of members visiting the theatres. The central situation of the Club, in close contiguity to both Opera-houses, the theatres, and other places of amusement, is in itself a manifest advantage to both town and country members.

Smoking concerts will be established, of which Mr. Ganz has consented to take the direction.

Musical soirées, concerts, conversaziones, and dramatic performances will from time to time be arranged by the members, and special performances will be given at intervals by professional artistes, for an occasional extra will be constituted from amongst the members of the Club, the formation of which has been undertaken by Mr. J. Radcliff, of the Royal Italian Opera.

The admission of guests to any of the Club entertainments will be by ticket of invitation only, issued by the Committee.

The Club-house will be entirely re-decorated and re-furnished; and it is anticipated that it will be ready for occupation early in February. Telegraphic and telephonic communication will be provided with the leading theatres.

The Club being proprietary, members will be relieved of all responsibility beyond their subscriptions.

The annual subscription for the first 500 members will be 6 guineas for town and 4 guineas for country, after which the entrance fee will be 10 guineas. Foreign members and officers on foreign service, 2 guineas annually. Country members are such as reside beyond a twenty mile radius of London. A limited number of membership for fifteen years will be granted at a reduced subscription of 40 guineas, without entrance fee.

Forms for membership can be obtained upon application to the Hon. Secretary, the Falstaff Club, Piazza, Covent-garden, London, W.C.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, JANUARY 15, 1881.

The meeting of Parliament, on Thursday se'nnight, and the discussions which have subsequently taken place on the Address in response to the Royal Speech, can hardly be said to have removed as yet the suspense which brooded, like one of our winter fogs, over the public mind, or to have revealed with any definiteness of detail the situation to which the country is moving forward. The Queen's Speech is never constructed upon the principle of throwing as much light as possible upon the topics which it embraces. A dry record of the past, and a hasty glance at the future are, perhaps for good reasons, all that can be looked for within its four corners. The principal interest in it this year centred upon the immediate condition of Ireland, and upon the steps which her Majesty's Government deem it their duty to take for the pacification and contentment of that part of her dominions. Proposals for intrusting the Executive with additional powers, not only for the vindication of order and public law, but for the protection of life and property and personal liberty of action, are to be made on the one hand, and on the other a further development of the principles of the Irish Land Act, "in a manner conformable to the special wants of Ireland, both as regards the relation of Landlord and Tenant, and with a view to giving a permanent proprietary interest in the soil to a larger portion of the people." There will also be a measure for the establishment of County Government in Ireland, framed upon representative principles. Until the Bills relating to these subjects are put before the House of Commons in a somewhat more complete and substantial shape than that of outlined sketches in Ministerial Speeches, it would be unsafe even to form, much less to pronounce, a decided judgment as to what is before us, or what is likely to be the ultimate issue of legislative deliberation. Ministers may see their way clearly enough. But the general public, both at home and abroad, still remains confused by a multiplicity of conflicting rumours, and without that explicit guidance upon which alone they can surely depend.

The ceremony of moving and seconding the Address to the Throne was performed in both Houses with a full average of ability and tact—in the Upper House by Lord Carrington and the Earl of Yarborough; in the House of Commons by Mr. Rendel and Mr. Slagg. In neither House, as it strikes us, was the interest excited quite up to the level of the occasion. This, perhaps, was inevitable. Everybody feels that a debate on the Address is but a preliminary exchange of courtesies and of intended hostilities between contending political parties. Nothing practical is expected to come of it. No resolution of party strength is likely to be evolved from it. There is much eloquent speaking on all sides, but it does not clearly indicate whither the progress and destiny of the nation is manifestly tending. Even Mr. Parnell's Amendment to the effect that "the peace and tranquillity of Ireland cannot be promoted by suspending any of the constitutional rights of the Irish people"—an amendment which is thrust at the heart of any Coercion Bill—can hardly be said to lead directly to any practical result. It presents an opportunity for clever and even brilliant skirmishing; and, as such, may be welcome by the most thoughtful of the political world. But it will contribute indirectly only, and in no very imposing proportions, towards the settlement of the actual business which Parliament has been called together to transact.

There is some danger in both Houses, we fear, lest opinion should be led astray by the confusion of questions perfectly distinct one from the other. The Bill for the protection of life and property in Ireland is altogether a separate matter from the Bill or Bills intended to develop Land Tenure Reform. They have no necessary correlation, the one being directed against crime, the other being proposed with a view to the encouragement of agricultural industry. We see no reason why the priority of the one should, in any respect, damage the prospect, or deaden the effects, of the other. The authority of law must needs be asserted where it has been assailed, and no Government can be expected to acquiesce in an imperium in imperio. Whether suitable means will be found to relieve from terrorism what is asserted to be a majority of the Irish people, is one question; whether the lines upon which a reform of Irish Land Law may best be projected are adapted to the permanent settlement of Irish agricultural affairs is quite another. Each must be discussed and decided upon its own merits. Crime cannot be connived at merely because there are grievances calling to be redressed; grievances cannot be set aside as deserving no notice merely because crime is rampant. Much of the terrorism which prevails in Ireland may have its roots within a comparatively narrow space, and will probably disappear, as a troubled dream, when those roots have been struck at. But even if such should be the case, it will not, in any appreciable degree, assist the public in solving the problem presented by the existing relations of landlord and tenant, or of the distribution of land amongst a wider proprietary. The doubts existing on this question are not so easily to be disversed as some people imagine. The pretentions put forward by this or that party—viewed, at least, in the light of history—are not always so extravagant as many might suppose. But, be this as it may, it is quite certain that the changes to be made in the Irish Land System, in order to conciliate the Irish tenantry, must be large and, if we may so say, fundamental, or, in other words, must place the system upon an entirely new basis. Of course, facts, whether for or against this or the other class, have to be reconciled; rights, personal or corporate, have so far to be respected as in no case to be abrogated without compensation; but, in the main, the bent of Irish ideas, the bias of Irish history for centuries part, and the inextinguishable aspirations of the Irish people (using that word in a social and not a political sense) have to be complied with, either by this measure or by some future one, before the union of Great Britain and Ireland can be a living tie conducive to happiness on both sides.

It is not the intention of Ministers, however, to restrict the attention of Parliament to Irish affairs. Her Majesty's Speech gave notice of Measures relating to other matters. For instance, there will be a Bill for the Abolition of Corporal Punishment in the Army and in the Navy; for the further reform of the Law of Bankruptcy; for the conservancy of Rivers and the prevention of Floods; for the renewal of the Act which established Secret Voting; for suppressing corrupt practices at Elections; and for revising Endowed Schools and Hospitals in Scotland. Here, at any rate, is a full programme for one Session, holding out, perhaps, more hopes than will be realised. We will not venture on a prediction. Hitherto, what has been and is cannot be set down as any sure indication of what will be. But we earnestly trust, and we are disposed to believe, that the present Parliament will, in the main, adopt such measures as will be best calculated, in human wisdom, to promote the well-being of all classes of her Majesty's subjects.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

Dean Stanley, in an eloquent sermon preached last Sunday, took occasion to refer to the contemporary Newspaper Press of England; and the terms in which one of the most accomplished, the most enlightened, and the most tolerant of living Anglican divines spoke of the Fourth Estate should go far to compensate the singularly one-sided and inaccurate conspectus of English journalism in the recent article (written, I believe, by Mr. Hitchman) in the Quarterly Review.

The Dean of Westminster alluded to the Press as "that mighty engine which is wielded as it never before has been wielded in this or in any other country." Some galled jades may wince, while the withers of others may be unwrung, at Dr. Stanley's parenthetical rebuke administered to "the vileness, and folly, and vice which a section of the public journals foster and favour," and to "the bitterness with which the so-called religious journals of the day address themselves to inflame, pervert, and exaggerate every topic of personal and party rancour." But that journalism which is neither vile nor vicious, neither bitter nor rancorous, will not fail to appreciate most gratefully the complimentary language of Dean Stanley when he declares, with respect to the great organs of public opinion, "that in the reasonableness, the purity, and the moderation of their utterances there is amidst all these shortcomings a ground of hope for the future of the English people that will require generations to shake."

I do not go altogether with the Dean when he bade his hearers compare the great English newspapers "with the like journals of other nations, notably with those whose language and utterances are so unworthy of the Great Republic of the West." I know a good deal about the American press, past and present; and about seventeen years ago I had frequently to thank the leading organs of public opinion in the Great Republic of the West for unstinted douches of sound hearty Billingsgate. I have been called a "Bloated Miscreant," a "Fat Cockney" (that soft impeachment I never denied), "a hired scribe," a "venal hack," and so forth. The New York Tribune, noticing my name in the list of contributors to a magazine published at Boston, genially remarked that my presence there was as distasteful as would be that of Satan among the Angels; and one of the most distinguished of American humorists publicly insinuated that I had printed an apology for the assassination of President Lincoln; nor had he the grace to retract his calumny, although the London publisher who reproduced it here was glad to compromise the action for libel which I brought against him.

But all this, you must remember, was in the bygone. From what I saw of the Transatlantic press between November, 1879, and April, 1880 (and they were getting ready then, you must bear in mind, for the Presidential Election campaign), it seems to me that, within the last decade at least, a wonderful improvement has taken place in the tone and temper of journalism throughout the States, and that the reasonableness, the purity, and the moderation of the utterances of the leading journals in the great cities of the Union are fully on a par with the characteristics of the most important English newspapers.

Mem.: In the dissemination and collocation of news the American press beats Europe altogether out of the field. The system, too, of mutual "exchanges" among editors "fosters and favours" a universal circulation of droll stories and quaint locutions (some of the drollest and quaintest come from the remotest ends of the Republic), and make the newspapers very entertaining reading. The chief shortcoming of the press in America is, to my thinking, the paucity of hebdomadal journals, in which matured and cultivated Thought can resume and comment on the incidents of the week. This is, indeed, a deficiency which is being slowly remedied; but no American city, to my knowledge, supports weekly journals of the solid and thoughtful calibre of the Spectator, the Athenæum, the Academy, the Builder, and the Saturday Review. The Scientific American is, on the other hand, an admirably digested periodical.

A large number of clergymen, nestling under the wing of the Dean of St. Paul's, have addressed a memorial to the Archbishop of Canterbury, in response to an invitation on the part of the Primate of All England to the clergy who feel dissatisfied or alarmed at the present circumstances of the Church to state what they desire should be the way of remedy. The memorialists, in reply, respectfully express their desire "for a distinctly avowed policy of toleration and forbearance on the part of our hierarchy in dealing with questions of ritual," and "a tolerant recognition of divergent ritual practice." The meaning of this seems to be that the memorialists claim the privilege of doing precisely as they please in matters of vestments and ceremonies.

Into the doctrinal questions affected by Ritualism I should, obviously, no more dream of entering in this place than I should of discussing the Irish land question, inditing an essay on the Æolic Digamma, or penning a prolusion on Chinese Metaphysics. My interest in what is called Ritualism is purely and simply artistic; and from an artistic point of view I have long been an attentive student of a book called the "Manuale Clericorum," edited by the Rev. Frederick George Lee, D.C.L., F.S.A., Vicar of All Saints', Lambeth. Dr. Lee's manual is an abridgment of the larger "Directorium Anglicanum," and is a complete "Costumier" for the conduct of public worship on the Ritualistic model. I am not about to argue about the book one way or another. I only ask moderate Churchmen to read the "Manuale Clericorum," and see what is said about credences, piscinæ, aumbryes, sedilia, processions and introits, albs, stoles, chasubles, amices, girdles, maniples, dalmatics, sandals, mitres, palls, amysses, and birrettas. Read all about these things, and then state your opinions thereupon to your families and friends. Non ragionam di lor; ma guarda—I need not complete the quotation.

There are some outcomes of human study and thought which seem intuitively to group themselves together geometrically, so to speak—now in circles, now in triangles, now in parallel lines. To my thinking, artistically considered, Ritualism, as a generality, appears to form a square; one side of which is formed by the "Tracts for the Times," another by the dogma of Præ-Rafaellitism, as propounded by Mr. Gabriel Dante Rossetti, Mr. Ford Madox Browne, and Mr. E. Burne Jones; a third by the Encyclopædia of vestments and ceremonies, compiled by the indefatigable erudition of the Rev. Dr. Lee; and the fourth by—well, it is almost a comic, it is certainly a satirical book, by a most learned and pious, although very eccentric, English architect, long since deceased.

Do you know the "Apology for the Revival of Christian Architecture in England," by the late A. Welby Pugin (not the unfortunate gentleman who was always writing libels against Mr. Herbert, the Royal Academician, but his distinguished father, who built so many Gothic churches, and aided Sir Charles Barry so notably in designing the Gothic details of decoration for the New Houses of Parliament)? "Pugin's Apology" is the book which I mean, and which forms the fourth side of my mentally-pictured square. In some fifty quarto pages, copiously illustrated with superb etchings, Mr. Pugin sounded the réveille of the Gothic revival and the death knell of the Nash, or stucco and "compo" style in architecture. Mingled with splendid designs for churches, public buildings, and even railway arches and tunnels in the Gothic manner, are savage caricatures of existing and sham classical edifices, among which the grand and gloomy arch fronting the Euston Terminus as a "grand Cab and Omnibus Entrance" does not escape ridicule. One of the drollest of the illustrations (although the drollery is wholly unconscious) is a series of examples of modern female costume adapted to Sepulchral Brasses. English ladies of the year 1843 are drawn, with their arms meekly crossed over their bosoms, or their finger tips touching in the act of orison, in garments so Gothicised as to give them a vague resemblance to English matrons and damsels of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries. Nor Ritualism nor Præ-Rafaellitism, I venture to think, would have come to a head without the aid of the erudite and eccentric A. Welby Pugin.

A contemporary on hospitably Christmas thoughts intent lately obliged its readers with a recipe for stuffing a turkey. Among the ingredients was "morel." This week my contemporary announces that it has been warned by several correspondents that "morel" is the black nightshade, and a deadly poison. This caution may be useful to persons who are imperfectly acquainted with culinary practice, and who, in a fit of amateur enthusiasm, might be tempted to try their hands at stuffing a turkey; but the experts know full well that there is "morel," and that there are "morils" or "morels." The various orthography of the word is positively exasperating.

The Library Dictionary (Collins, London and Glasgow, 1871) states that the "morell" (the German morchel) is an edible fungus, allied to the mushroom, and largely employed in the manufacture of ketchup. Unfortunately, it is also the name of a plant of the genus Solanum, garden nightshade. The same Library Dictionary goes on to say that "moril" (the French morille and the German morhila) is a mushroom of the size of a walnut, full of little holes. I suppose that most of us have partaken of omelette aux morilles at a Parisian restaurant. But in "Worcester's Webster's Dictionary" (London, Routledge, 1873) we have "morel" with one l, and with the definition that it is "a plant, a fungus or mushroom, used in soups and gravies, &c., and a kind of cherry. See morello." Nothing is said about black or garden nightshade; but further on Smart is quoted for "moril" being a mushroom of the size of a walnut. But Bailey, in his very big dictionary, clears the atmosphere by telling us, on the authority of the Jesuits' "Dictionnaire de Trévoux," that "morel," or "petty morel," is the garden nightshade, and that the "morille" is the smallest and most delicate kind of mushroom. Clearly, then, we should stuff our turkeys and accommodate our omelettes with "morilles" and not with "morel;" yet I am afraid that many marchands de comestibles in London, and many more cooks, know the tiny mushrooms, not as "morilles" but as "morels."

An excellent and practically philanthropic idea is that about to be carried out by an association in course of formation for the supply of hot food to the labouring population, at the docks, and at large factories in and about the metropolis. The industrial poor experience the greatest difficulty in obtaining warm victuals at a low price; and their commons during the hours of the working day are often of the shortest and the hardest. The association, of the starting of which I read in the Daily News, intend to send out barrows or trucks, fitted with heating apparatus, which are to be wheeled about from place to place as required, supplying hot soup, bread, and other provisions of the best quality and at the lowest possible price. It is proposed to add slices of tinned meat made hot; and I am told by the authorities of the Gymcæum attached to this establishment, that the peripatetic restaurateurs ought to be able to sell a comforting bowl of hot soup, thickened with rice or oatmeal, for three halfpence; and a good mess of Irish stew, made of "scrags" of mutton, or Australian meat, and with plenty of onions and potatoes, for twopence. Collops of baked beef, too, should be procurable for twopence; and I hope that penny-worths of pudding—the regular Charles Dickens "plum-duff," familiarly known as "Spotted Covey"—will not be forgotten. I have seen some very beautiful and moving things in my time, from the Venus de Medicis and the Apollo, from Frascati and Ningara, from Pompeii and the Bay of Dublin to the Charity Children at St. Paul's, and a June sunset on Hampstead-heath; but I certainly know no more deeply interesting spectacle than that of a ragged lad on a very cold day in a cookshop in Long-acre devouring a penn'orth of pudding. It does him good evidently. It should do you good, even to the unloosening of your purse-strings, to see him eat that succulent "duff."

I repeat that the peripatetic restaurant notion is an admirably excellent one. It seems perfectly practicable; and I see no reason whatever why it should not prove a commercial as well as a social success. Very soon, I should say, the enterprise will be self-supporting; but, in the outset, it will be necessary to raise some money by public subscription for the purchase of the barrows, the heating apparatus, and the batterie de cuisine. Durable pots and pans are somewhat expensive articles. The promoters of the undertaking propose that any donor of an entire barrow shall have the privilege of nominating an attendant, who will be able to earn from four shillings a day and upwards, according to his activity as a salesman. I am glad to learn that a deputation of gentlemen interested in this "Hot Food for the Working Poor" scheme have waited on the Lord Mayor at the Mansion House, and that the Chief Magistrate of the City has expressed his approbation of the movement and promised it his support. This implies, I trust, the concurrent adhesion of Colonel Fraser, the Commissioner of City Police; but, at the same time, it is most desirable to obtain the approval of Sir Edmund Henderson, the Chief Commissioner of Metropolitan police. The attendants on the barrows must be, as a sine qua non, honest, civil, and industrious fellows, and they should wear proper uniforms or badges; but a most sensible and beneficent movement will surely collapse if the superintendents and inspectors of the Metropolitan Police do not receive the strictest instructions from head-quarters to prevent their constables from harrying and interfering with the peripatetic restaurateurs.

I was offered lately what purported to be an undeniably genuine autograph of Napoleon I. when First Consul for a comparatively trifling sum. Much against the grain, I declined to purchase it. I am as credulous, I suppose, as most folks; but there is one thing in which I am a confirmed and incurable sceptic. I refuse to believe in the authenticity of any autograph whatsoever, unless I have seen the person to whom the autograph is ascribed write it with his own hand, or unless I have direct and positive evidence (in the way of pedigree from possessor to possessor) that he did so write it. Start with this positive, although slightly paradoxical postulate, and you will save yourself an immensity of trouble. You will run no risk of squandering your money on the purchase of autographs which, for all their carefully traced and ostensibly perfect histories, may be spurious; and you will not be worried every time you leave home by the dread that your precious autographs may be devoured by the rats, or destroyed by fire, or in some manner or another, come to grief.

Thus, I have set not the slightest store by the autographs (neither few nor uninteresting) which have fallen in my way during a tolerably lengthened career. I have given away my Hogarth, my Molière, my Broughams, my Victor Hugos, my Dickenses (with a few exceptions of letters relating to matters not presently communicable), and my Thackerays. Nor can I understand the autograph-hunting craze any more than I can comprehend that for collecting postage stamps.

Curiously enough, even while I am penning these "Echoes," there has come to my hand a copy of a newspaper called the Daily Examiner, published at San Francisco, in which, in the "London Letter" of the Examiner's correspondent, there is a "screed" of violent abuse of my humble self, quite in the old style of seventeen years ago. I am accused of having been "dead-headed" over twenty-five thousand miles of railway in the United States (!) of not having paid my hotel bills (!) (I spent a thousand pounds in four months and a half's travelling and hotel bills), and of being "ungrateful" for the courtesies extended to me; and it is further stated that I "vapour against America" in the "Echoes." Whether I have ever so "vapoured" I must leave the readers of this page and the readers of this column to determine. The London correspondent of the Daily Examiner is also classical; for, after telling me that I am "an insufferable egotist," he advises me to improve my literary style by reading Cæsar's Commentaries, in which the word "Ego" does not once occur. I think that I read a great many years ago in the Latin tongue of the summary diligence with which Cæsar made his entry into Gaul; but what would you say of these "Echoes" were they written in the third person instead of the first? What would you say if I wrote "'G. A. S.' read the amiable remarks of the anonymous writer of malicious untruths in the San Francisco Daily Examiner? At the outset, 'G. A. S.' felt inclined to think that Dean Stanley was right after all, and that he ought to cancel the paragraphs in which he spoke of a marked improvement in the tone and temper of the American press. On second thoughts, 'G. A. S.' resolved to let the paragraphs stand; first because he knows gross personal abuse of harmless individuals to be quite an exceptional blot upon modern American journalism, and next because he is persuaded that the writer of the abuse in question is no more an American than he is a gentleman."

I think that, were I to adopt this style, you would soon wish "G. A. S." at Jericho. Shall I write as "We?" I write "We" in a leading article three hundred times a year; and, surely, I may be suffered to say "I" by way of a change on Saturdays.

Mem.: Unless I am mistaken, the well-known missionary and traveller, the Rev. Dr. Wolff, sometime Rector of Isle Brewers, did use the third person in his Bokhara book, which I must have read some thirty years ago. I have a dim remembrance of a passage running somewhat to this effect:—"Why did Wolff neglect to follow this course?" "Because Wolff was a fool." He was anything but a fool, this Rev. Dr. Wolff; but, the rather, a very learned, shrewd, and kindly man.

Touching Californian journalism, the following from the San Francisco News Letter, in an article deprecating the senseless and mischievous anti-Jewish crusade in Germany, may be considered as almost impayable in its delicious naïveté and candour. "We have in this country a large and wealthy Jewish population; but, notwithstanding our boasted 'smartness,' very few of us can do more than hold our own against them, although we are, beyond a question, fully as unscrupulous as they are!" In the way of wearing one's heart upon one's sleeve, this admission is worthy to rank with the title of the celebrated pamphlet on financial and commercial enterprise, "Honesty is the Best Policy: By One who has tried Both."

THE IRISH LAND LEAGUE TRIALS.

The trial of Mr. C. S. Parnell, M.P., and thirteen other leading members of the Irish Land League, before Mr. Justice Fitzgerald and Mr. Justice Barry, in the Irish Court of Queen's Bench at Dublin, has been going on since Tuesday, the 28th ult., almost every day, except Saturdays and Sundays. But Mr. Parnell and several others of the "traversers," or defendants, who are members of the House of Commons, have ceased to attend their trial, having come to London for the opening of Parliament. This seems to have deprived the proceedings in Court of all that popular interest which was excited by their appearance before the Judges and Jury in the first week of the trial. The evidence produced by the Counsel for the prosecution has also been of a dull and tedious kind for the listeners and spectators in Court. It has consisted, almost entirely, of extracts from the speeches of the Land League orators at various meetings throughout Ireland, proved by witnesses who were mostly Government reporters, or officers of the Royal Irish Constabulary who could write shorthand. The audience in Court has dwindled from day to day, and there has been scarcely any crowd in the precincts of the Court, or at the doors—less, indeed, than when ordinary cases are being tried. The witnesses have been called and examined by the Attorney-General, Solicitor-General, Mr. Serjeant Heron, and other counsel for the Crown; and they have been cross-examined by Mr. Macdonogh, Q.C., Mr. M'Loughlin, Q.C., and Mr. Walker, Q.C., as counsel for the defence. Portraits of these six learned gentlemen, in their most characteristic attitudes while engaged together, on the one side and on the other, in the present trial, were sketched a few days since by our Special Artist, Mr. Wallis Mackay, and are now presented on the front page of this Number of our Journal. The case for the Crown was closed on Tuesday last, by the examination of its last witness; and the Court then adjourned to Thursday morning, on account of the slight indisposition of Mr. Macdonogh, the leading counsel for the defence, who would then have to begin his speech.

MOVER AND SECONDER OF LORDS' ADDRESS.

The portraits of Lord Carrington, the mover, and the Earl of Yarborough, the seconder, of the Address of the House of Lords in reply to the Queen's Speech at the Opening of Parliament last week, are now engraved. Those of Mr. Stuart Rendel and Mr. John Slagg, mover and seconder of the Address in the House of Commons, appeared in our last.

The Right Hon. Charles Robert Carington, third Baron Carrington (this different spelling of the surname and title is found in Sir Bernard Burke's "Peerage"), of Upton, in the county of Nottingham, and of Bulcot Lodge, in Ireland, is a peer both of the United Kingdom and of the Irish peerage. The founder of this family was John Smith, of Cropwell-Boteler, Titheby, in Nottinghamshire, in the time of Charles I. They became London merchants and bankers; and there are several wealthy branches of the family, notably those represented by Mr. Abel Smith, M.P., of Woodhull Park, Herts; Mr. Dorrien Smith, of Ashlyns, Herts, and of Tresco Abbey, Scilly Isles, who succeeded the late Mr. Augustus Smith; and Sir H. Bromley, Bart., of East Stoke, Notts, whose grandfather, in 1778, changed the name of Smith for Bromley. Lord Carrington's ancestor, Robert Smith, was created a peer in 1796. It was not till 1839 that the late Lord Carrington, who had long sat in the House of Commons as Mr. R. J. Smith, took, by Royal license, the surname of Carington, which has quite recently, in August last year, been confirmed to the present Lord Carrington and his two brothers, Colonel the Hon. W. H. P. Carington, M.P. for High Wycombe, an officer of the Queen's household, and Colonel the Hon. Rupert Carington, M.P. for Bucks, now serving in South Africa. Lord Carrington, who was born in May, 1843, has been an officer of the Royal Horse Guards, and sat three years in the House of Commons. He shares the office of Hereditary Lord Chamberlain in right of his mother, who was sister and coheir of the late Lord Willoughby de Eresby. His Lordship married, in 1878, a daughter of Lord Suffield, and has one child. His chief seat is Wycombe Abbey, High Wycombe.

The Earl of Yarborough, Charles Alfred Worsley Anderson Pelham, Baron Yarborough, of Lincolnshire, and Baron Worsley, of Appuldurcombe, in the Isle of Wight, was born in June, 1859, and has, therefore, but just come of age. He succeeded his father as fourth Earl in 1875. The Pelham family, originally of Sussex, gained distinction in the reign of Elizabeth, when Sir William Pelham rendered important military and political services to the Crown in Scotland, France, and Ireland. The first peerage, a barony, was granted in 1794, and the earldom in 1837. The late Earl of Yarborough was well known as managing chairman of the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway, and promoter of the Great Grimsby Docks. The principal seat of his Lordship is Brocklesby Park, Ulceby, Lincolnshire.

The two portraits are from photographs, that of Lord Carrington by Messrs. W. and D. Downey, and that of the Earl of Yarborough by Messrs. Mayall.

Sir Hardinge Giffard, Q.C., M.P., has been elected Treasurer of the Hon. Society of the Inner Temple.

Sir Theodore Martin has postponed the delivery of his address as Lord Rector of the University of St. Andrew's till the beginning of next Session.

Mr. Evelyn Hay Murray has been appointed Secretary of Commissions, in the place of Mr. Carrington Francis, who has resigned.

At the annual meeting of the board of delegates connected with the Hospital Saturday Fund, held last Saturday evening, it was stated that the last annual collection realised £6604, of which £1398 was raised by street collections and £5206 by means of employés' sheets. The total was an increase of £452 upon the previous year.

A preliminary meeting of the committee of the Mechi Fund was held yesterday week at the offices of the Royal Agricultural Benevolent Institution. Among those present were the Marquis of Huntly (chairman and treasurer), Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., Mr. Thomas Duckham, M.P., Mr. R. K. Causton, M.P., Mr. James Caird, C.B., Mr. Edwin Chadwick, C.B., and Mr. Bousfield Shaw (the honorary secretary). Letters were read from Lord Spencer and others regretting their inability to attend. On the motion of the Marquis of Huntly, seconded by Mr. R. K. Causton, M.P., it was resolved that a national committee be appointed with the view of raising a fund to provide for the widow and family of the late Mr. J. J. Mechi, and a general committee, consisting of the gentlemen present, with power to add to their number, was appointed for the purpose of carrying out that object. Among the subscriptions promised were: The members of the Court of Aldermen, £500; the Duke of Bedford, £100; the Earl of Leicester, £100; Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., £100; Messrs. Garrett, Grimwood, and Whittaker, £105.

HER MAJESTY'S SHIP INFLEXIBLE.

This most powerful turret-ship of the Royal Navy, commenced building at Portsmouth on Feb. 24, 1874, and launched by Princess Louise on April 27, 1876, might well be supposed to be now almost ready for service at sea. It would be superfluous to inquire into the causes which have retarded her progress. At the time she was designed the Inflexible was a complete novelty in naval shipbuilding. At almost every stage of her construction she has been the source of much anxiety and controversy on the part of the Construction Department. Not only was she the largest turret-ship in the service, but she was protected by the thickest armour, armed with the heaviest guns, and was in other respects unique and unparalleled as an engine of war.

After her gunnery trials on the 16th and 17th ult., and the trial of her propelling machinery on the 18th, the Inflexible was taken back into the repairing basin at Portsmouth for the purpose of being completed for sea. But, notwithstanding the successful manner in which she passed the ordeal to which she was subjected, the simultaneous discharge of 1350 lb. of powder and 5100 lb. of metal from her three guns at fifteen and forty-five degrees abaft the starboard beam, failing to cause the least injury to the hull, the Inflexible is still doomed to further delay. Only three of the 80-ton guns had been placed on board, while the automatic sights of Sir William Armstrong and Co., the compound sights devised at Woolwich, the elevating arcs and gear, the dials for showing the training, the connections for turning the fore turret from within, and the various indicating apparatus, remain to be fitted. The roof of the after turret had, indeed, been temporarily secured, but for the other turret, which contained the solitary gun, no roof had been provided. And it is very unlikely that the ship will be commissioned with an imperfect armament; since this would require the fore turret to be roofed and have its interior fittings completed, with the prospect of the entire work having to be done over again after the fourth gun is received.

Seen from a distance, the Inflexible appears free from the strangeness and ungainliness which have come to be associated with turret-ships. This is in a great degree owing to the artistic manner in which paint has been applied. The hull, superstructures, and turrets being all blackened, causes the whole floating mass to resemble an ordinary broadside ship of high freeboard. If the reader imagine the letter H to be placed upon the hull of an ordinary man-of-war, he may form an idea of the profile presented by the Inflexible at the distance of a few miles. The letter, which is the more conspicuous from its being painted yellow, represents the two funnels and the flying deck which spans the intervening space. The distance between the funnels is 75 ft. 3 in.; and below the crossbar of the H are placed the turrets, which may be said to resemble colossal cheeses. Outside the uprights of the H, and at distances, respectively, of 17 ft. and 21 ft. 9 in., the masts are fixed, which, unlike those of an ordinary turret-ship, are fully equipped spars, and rise to a height in the case of the foremast to 109 ft. 9 in., and in that of the mainmast to 172 ft. 9 in. Though fitted with lower topsail, topgallant, and royal yards, and having a spread of upwards of 20,000 square yards of canvas, the masts are intended only for purposes of drill, but, nevertheless, serve to modify the appearance of the ship. With a near approach, its aspect is much changed. The fore and aft superstructures recede from the sides, and shrink into a narrow compass along the middle line, to allow of a sheer deck for the fire of the guns; the turrets become defined, the various trunks and cowls for relieving the under-decks of their imprisoned hot air become visible, and the whole ship assumes the sternness of a floating war-engine.

The guns themselves measure each 26 ft. 9 in. in length; their diameter at the largest part is 6 ft., the distance from end to end of the trunnions being 8 ft. 10 in. The bore is 24 ft. long, and its calibre is 16 in., except for the last 5 ft. in the chamber, which has a diameter of 18 in. The size of the projectile varies with the different character of the shell used. Common shell measures 3 ft. 11½ in. in length, Palliser 3 ft. 6½ in., while shrapnel and case are 3 ft. 9 in. long. The weight of each projectile is about 1700 lb. The powder charge, which is divided into three and four parts, consists of 425 lb. of pebble, or 450 lb. of prismatic powder. The bringing up of such ponderous projectiles and charges from the shell-rooms and magazines and their ready control require special appliances, and here again hydraulic power has been called into play. We cannot describe the extraordinary variety of the mechanical appliances. The flats at the fore and after ends below the armour-deck have been literally transformed into engine-rooms. Forward are placed the hydraulic engine and tank, the capstan engine, the engines for training the under-water tubes for discharging the Whitehead torpedoes, and which work one within the other by means of compressed air, the engines and reservoirs for charging the submerged and above-water torpedoes, the distilling condensers for supplying the crew with fresh water, the engines for distributing the water throughout the ship, and the engine for pumping overboard the water from the wash-places; while on the after-flat there are the second hydraulic engine and tank, the hydraulic hand-pump, a steam-steering engine, the coupling for working the tiller by hand, and the tiller itself and gearing, a Brush electric machine for lighting up the fighting parts of the ship, with a Brotherhood engine for driving it, and a D Gramme machine for use as a protection against torpedo attacks by night, with another Brotherhood engine for turning it; and when to all this machinery are added the main engines and the numerous hydraulic machines for working the guns, it may be safely asserted that the Inflexible rather resembles a floating factory than a ship.

We are indebted to a correspondent, an officer of the Royal Artillery, for the Sketches that show the appearance of H.M.S. Inflexible while undergoing her recent experimental trials at Portsmouth. She is represented off the Magnetic Station at Gilkicker Point during the well-known nautical manœuvre of revolving, as it were on a pivot, to test the correct performance of the ship's compasses, which is familiarly called "swinging her compass." In the second Illustration she appears as engaged in making trial of her guns. The third Sketch is that of painting the mast, 47 ft. 6 in. high, erected on the shore at Stokes Bay, to mark "the measured mile" by which the speed of all her Majesty's ships has to be tested.

Her Majesty has appointed Lieutenant-General Sir Donald Stewart, K.C., to be Commander-in-Chief in India, in succession to General Sir Frederick Paul Haines.

Sir Samuel Rowe, Governor of the West Africa Settlements, has been appointed Governor of the Gold Coast Colony; and Captain Havelock, late Chief Civil Commissioner of the Seychelles, Governor of the West Africa Settlements.

The Earl of Fife, Captain of the Gentlemen-at-Arms, has resigned his office. He will be succeeded as Parliamentary representative of the Home Office in the House of Lords by the Earl of Dalhousie, one of the Lords in Waiting. Lord Fife's resignation does not, the Daily News is informed, originate in any dissent on his part from the policy of the Government.

PARISIAN SAYINGS AND DOINGS.

Paris, Tuesday, Jan. 11.

The municipal elections, which took place on Sunday last, resulted in Paris in a notable defeat of the resuscitated Commune. For the sake of record, the following results are interesting. Forty-eight Republican members of the old Municipal Council were re-elected; four Reactionary members of the old Council were re-elected; four new Republican members were elected, and three new Reactionary members. There are twenty-one ballotages. The voting was very active. In 1878, 40 per cent of the electors inscribed abstained; last Sunday only 34 per cent abstained. The Collectivistes-révolutionnaires, the new name for the different Communist and Socialist groups, presented a list of fifty-seven candidates, not one of whom was elected. Trinquet alone, in whose case there is ballotage, has a chance of being finally elected. These fifty-seven candidates obtained altogether 14,174 votes out of a total of 259,943 votes recorded. Finally, nine ex-members of the Commune of 1871 were candidates. They obtained between them 6963 votes. The number of voters inscribed at Paris was 391,402. The number of abstentionists was, therefore, 131,459. Complete returns from the provinces have not yet come to hand, but there can be no doubt that the Republicans have gained ground.

As at present constituted, the reactionary party in the Paris Municipal Council gain two seats, which secures them a minority of seven in an assembly of 320 members. But, as I have said above, the chief interest of the elections consists in the check of the Communalist candidates even in the outlying and reputedly revolutionary quarters. Both the violent and moderate revolutionary candidates alike obtained but a paltry number of votes, and the working men electors of Paris seem to have clearly signified that they are opposed to all action tending to a reconstitution of the Commune, and to all policy affecting a revolutionary character.

Certainly, now that the Republic is fairly and apparently firmly established, the Communist and revolutionary agitators have no raison d'être. Rochefort, perhaps, may be admitted as an amusing and sometimes useful critic. But as for the organisation and banding together of the amnistiés as a party, that seems out of the question. The last batch of the amnistiés who came from New Caledonia on board the Navarin returned to Paris on Friday and Saturday, and amongst them Citizen Trinquet, whose illegal election as Municipal Councillor last spring hastened the passing of the amnesty bill. A number of radical notabilities, including M. Louis Blanc and M. Clémenceau, went to meet them at the station, where Louise Michel reproached M. Clémenceau with not having been present at Blanqui's funeral. The result of this conversation was that M. Clémenceau told Louise Michel that he did not share her views, and now he has been pronounced to be a renegade. The same evening, however, Louise Michel was hissed down for the first time at a public meeting. This is, perhaps, the beginning of the end.

The Senate and the Chamber meet to-day after the Christmas vacation, but merely pro formâ. Both houses determined unanimously to adjourn until Jan. 20.

To-night a long expected première, that of M. Alphonse Daudet's "Jack," will take place at the Odéon. The general dress rehearsal before the members of the press and a select public of friends took place last night. The audience was very brilliant, for M. Alphonse Daudet numbers amongst his friends all who are eminent in letters and art. The piece is taken from the novel "Jack," a masterpiece of irony, pity, and anger. The reproach that was made against the novel was that it was too cruel; in adapting the novel for the stage, M. Alphonse Daudet and his collaborator the actor Lafontaine, have softened the ferocity of the novel to a certain extent. Still, it remains terribly cruel. Last night there is little exaggeration in saying that there was not a dry eye in the house. But, above all, it is a bold piece. "Jack," as the reader may remember, is the history of the son of an adventuress, Ida de Barancy, a silly, chattering, empty-headed, vain, and pretty woman, who has become, in a sense, the slave of a pseudo poet, Amaury d'Argenton. Ida loves Jack, when she thinks of him; but d'Argenton has such power over her that he causes poor little Jack to be brought up as a blacksmith. Out of despair the poor fellow, hoping to be able to rescue his mother from her giddy and unworthy life, engages himself as a stoker on board a Transatlantic steamer, escapes miraculously from a watery grave, and comes home to die in the arms of strangers, while his mother lives happy and heedless, infatuated with her pseudo poet and the intellectual society of a swarm of Bohemians who sponge upon him. I have not space to give even an outline of the scenes in "Jack." Of plot there is very little, and love plays only a very secondary rôle in it. The main interest of the piece, as in Emile Augier's "Mariage d'Olympe" lies in the ruthless and ferocious exposure of the odious levity of Ida, Jack's mother. In two masterly scenes, the boldest and most poignant that have been seen on the modern stage, M. Alphonse Daudet has confronted the three elements that have each been used effectively by so many French dramatists, the mother, the son, and the lover. As in all M. Alphonse Daudet's work, there is infinite wit, infinite pathos, and a purity and charm of sentiment, a poetry, which puts him far above any French contemporary writer. That "Jack" will create a great sensation there can be no doubt. It is a work that bears the imprint of some of M. Daudet's most personal and most striking qualities.

I spoke in my last letter about the publication of George Sand's letters in the Revue des Deux Mondes, and about the correspondence between George Sand and Alfred de Musset. The affair between lui et elle is the grand love-story of this century, and people are naturally curious to know more about it than is given in George Sand's famous volume and Paul de Musset's reply. But now a controversy has sprung up as to whether the famous letters still exist. M. Jules Troubat, the literary executor of Paul de Musset, says that he has a letter in which George Sand declares that she burnt all Alfred de Musset's letters. However that may be, Paul de Musset and his sister, at the moment when George Sand asked for her letters to be returned, sat up all night and made a copy of them. The original letters were restored to George Sand, and may have been burnt, as the letter in M. Troubat's possession says they were. Paul de Musset's papers have, I hear, been sent to the Bibliothèque Nationale, sealed, and with directions that they are to be opened in 1910, thirty years hence! Meanwhile, it appears that M. Alfred Hedouin, brother of the painter, possesses some letters and verses of George Sand and Alfred de Musset, which were given to him by the actress Marie Dorval, who was a great friend of George Sand. This is all that I can find out about this incident for the moment.

Parisian life at the present moment is dull, owing to the reaction from the New-Year's fêtes. The return of the deputies will probably enliven things a little. On Thursday last heavy snow fell, and the past week has been very cold and frosty continuously. This afternoon snow is falling, though not heavily.

THE PLAYHOUSES.

An announcement, which may be held tantamount to a communiqué, has appeared in the daily papers stating that the architectural revival of the Temple of Artemis, in the second act of Mr. Tennyson's tragedy of "The Cup" at the Lyceum, was designed by Mr. James Knowles (the distinguished architect and Editor of the Nineteenth Century), and was executed under his direction by Messrs. Hawes Craven, Cuthbert, and Arnott. The design was in part suggested by the magnificent relics which remain to us of the Temple of Diana at Ephesus. This acknowledgment was certainly due to Mr. Knowles, who has long been known as an earnest and accomplished student of Greek art, and who has brought all his knowledge, experience, and taste to bear on the ordinance of a scene unparalleled, perhaps, in our time for its splendour, its completeness, and its weird impressiveness. In saying this, I am not by any means forgetting the famous "seashore and rolling billows" scene by Clarkson Stanfield in "Acis and Galatea," during the Macready management at Drury Lane; the many pictorial triumphs achieved at "The Lane," the Lyceum (in the Vestris and Charles Mathews and Planché burlesque days, and the Princess's, by Mr. William Beverley); nor the renowned "oblique sets" in "Sardanapalus;" and in Shakspearean revivals at the last-named house, under Charles Kean's sway. One of the chief attractions, however, in the Artemisian revival in "The Cup" is the originality of the construction of the temple itself. I do not know whether solidly modelled bas-reliefs and cornices, fluted shafts of columns and moulded capitals, have been used on the stage before as adjuncts to ordinary scene-painting on flat surfaces; but to me the effect at the Lyceum was as novel and as impressive as the famous permanent proscenium in low relief constructed by Palladio after the ancient Roman model in the Teatro Filarmonico at Vicenza.

Crowds continue to fill the Lyceum nightly, and will so continue to fill it, I have no doubt, for many more nights to come. Meanwhile, it is instructive to watch the conflict of critical opinions as to the merits of "The Cup" as a drama, and of Mr. Henry Irving and Miss Ellen Terry as the principal performers therein. The strongest objection which I have heard urged against Mr. Tennyson's drama is that its plot and characters are narrowed and contracted to dwarfish proportions. I take this objection to be a very weak one, if the play be looked upon, as it should be, as one built upon Greek lines. What can be narrower or more contracted than the plots of the "Agamemnon," of the "Orestes," of the "Eumenides" of the "Phædra," of "Les Horaces"? If an epopœa be thoroughly complete, it surely gains rather than loses by simplicity and directness of story; and "The Cup," amply sufficing as it is in its terrible simplicity, would most assuredly have been spoiled by a multiplicity of scenes and characters and an underplot which it would have been next to impossible to make anything more than an excrescence and an incumbrance to the drama. Touching the performance of Mr. Henry Irving as Synorix, very little diversity of opinion (save, of course, among the habitual and, seemingly, incurable anti-Irvingites) seems to prevail. It is agreed upon, with nearly complete unanimity, that Mr. Irving interprets most eloquently and most subtly the complex and consequently difficult character of the passionate libertine, who slays Sinnatus, and finds his death-doom in the Cup presented to him at the bridal altar by his victim's widow and his vainly fancied wife. The genius of the dramatist, as most superbly expounded by the tragedian, leads to this remarkable result, that although we shudder at the detestable criminality of Synorix, and admit the justice of his punishment, the man never appears in the light of such a despicable villain as a mere assassin and profligate coveter of le bien d'autrui should be. The wretched suitor of Camma comes before us as a man rent by a devouring and irresistible passion; and his crime and its expiation seem alike inscribed on the irrevocable rolls of Fate. He is foredoomed from the beginning to be the slayer and the slain. He may inspire terror; but we can scarcely hate him, and we gallantly does he bear himself that he certainly never awakens a feeling bordering on contempt. He is less a Crook Backed Richard or a fiendish Iago than a guilty yet still noble Claude Frollo. One of the neatest apologies for not loathing Synorix which I have heard was from the lips of a lady. "Perhaps," she remarked, "homicide was not thought so much of among the ancient Galatians." There it is. To approach "The Cup," therefore, in a proper spirit it would be as well, perhaps, to saturate oneself with such lore touching the ancient peoples of Greece and Asia as we find in the pages of Herodotus, of Plutarch, and of Gibbon. As a test, try, for example, to judge, from a modern standpoint, the characters in the story of Candaules, King of Lydia. The characters, with the exception of King Candaules, who is simply a fool, are "bad all round;" but viewed, not from a modern but from a Pagan standpoint, the story is pretty even to fascination.

Of the inestimable value to "The Cup" is the co-operation of Miss Ellen Terry as Camma. She has thoroughly grasped the scope and meaning of the part, and renders it with inimitable grace and feeling. I could fill this column with justly-due eulogies on Miss Terry's exquisitely pathetic, artistic, and all womanly impersonation; but this has been a busy week at the Play Houses; and I have several dramatic "acceptances" fully due, which must be at once "taken up."

I spoke just now of a set of characters who, with only one exception, were "bad all round." This is particularly and amusingly the case with a new play in two acts, called "The Money Spinner," by Mr. A. W. Pinero, which was produced on Saturday last at the St. James's. I was unable to witness the performance on the first night, having taken the liberty (I have not had a holiday since last April) to withdraw myself for a couple of days to Epsom, in Surrey, there to recruit myself by patiently trudging round the Derby course; but I made haste to see "The Money-Spinner" on Monday. The comedy-drama, or drama-comedy, may be further qualified as an "actors' play." It is not in any sense a literary production, although the dialogue is neat and sometimes polished, and the fun in the farcical portions occasionally approaches the confines of humour. But its author, Mr. Pinero, is an expert in ascertaining what situations will "tell" on the stage. His scenes are capitally constructed; his characters come and go precisely as they should; the climax is most artistically led up to; and the consequence is that the piece is brilliantly successful, and that the playwright succeeds in extorting from the audience not only genuine sympathy but enthusiastic admiration for a peculiarly disreputable set of people who, properly, should be extremely repulsive.

The plot is facile and crisply told. Harold Boycott (Mr. John Clayton) is the manager of a factory at Rouen. He has married Milicent (Mrs. Kendal), one of the daughters of one "Baron" Croodle, an ancient English sharper, who has kept a petty gaming-house in Paris. Harold Boycott, in order to relieve the necessities of a bankrupt father in England, has embezzled the funds intrusted to him by his employers at Rouen to the extent of 10,000f. His malfeasance seems to have been already suspected by the firm, who have "planted" upon him for purposes of espionage, and, under the disguise of a fellow-clerk, one Jules Faubert, a detective, admirably played by Mr. Macintosh. At this conjuncture, "Baron" Croodle (Mr. John Hare) and his daughter Dorinda (Miss Kate Phillips) appear on the scene, accompanied by a remarkably "verdant" young Scotch peer, Lord Kengussie (Mr. Kendal), who engaged to be married to Dorinda, and who in former days has wooed and been rejected by Millicent in favour of Harold. It naturally occurs to Mrs. Boycott to enlighten Lord Kengussie as to her domestic distress; but this her husband sternly refuses to allow her to do. So she recollects her old skill and luck at cards, which in the old Paris gaming-house days earned for her the sobriquet of "The Money-Spinner." She invites Lord Kengussie to a "small and early" party, and makes up her mind to try to win ten thousand francs at écarté from him. She does not win; on the contrary, she loses very heavily; and in her despair she resolves to turn swindler, and by the substitution of a card cheats the unsuspecting Scotch peer out of the money which she requires in order to save her husband from ruin. Her manœuvres have been watched by the detective, Faubert, who denounces her to Lord Kengussie. There is necessarily a very disagreeable éclaircissement; but after Millicent has made a most humiliating confession of her guilt, and thrown herself on the mercy of Lord Kengussie, that placable peer relents, pays off Harold's liabilities, and takes the entire Croodle-Boycott family under his protection; while the detective Faubert, having been bribed to silence touching that little affair at cards, is all but kicked down stairs. He has previously had his face slapped by Harold Boycott, who bears himself throughout in the stateliest of fashions, and looks far too dignified a personage to have ever condescended to "frisk the till." Thus we have in "The Money-Spinner" four rogues and one simpleton; and we unhesitatingly sympathise with the knaves and the dupe, while we hate and despise the unhappy police agent Faubert, who has simply done his duty, and who appears to me to be the only respectable individual among the dramatis personæ. About a third, perhaps, of the undoubted success of "The Money-Spinner" is due to the constructive ingenuity and keen dramatic perception of Mr. Pinero. The remaining two thirds must be ascribed to the wonderfully fine acting of Mrs. Kendal as Millicent, of Mr. John Clayton as Harold Boycott, of Mr. Kendal as the Scotch peer, of Mr. Macintosh as the ill-used Faubert, and of Mr. Hare as the "Baron" Croodle. Mr. Hare may, in some portions of his wonderfully comic impersonation, remind spectators with good memories equally of Captain Costigan, Mr. Eccles (in "Caste"), Mr. Micawber, and Jeremy Diddler; but the strongly marked individuality of Mr. Hare himself predominates over all these familiar types, and gives us a "Baron" Croodle who, take him for all in all, is decidedly as original as he is entertaining. Miss Kate Phillips as the vulgar but kind-hearted Dorinda, and Mrs. Gaston Murray as Margot, a mature but still coquettish French landlady, were also very good. I should say that "The Money-Spinner" will have a long and prosperous run; but, as a "stock piece," I do not feel inclined to augur a very long life for a drama embodying such very odd notions of right and wrong.

MUSIC.

The first of this year's Saturday afternoon performances associated with the Monday Popular Concerts took place last week, when the quartet party again consisted of Madame Norman-Néruda, Mr. L. Ries, Mr. Zerbini, and Signor Piatti—Mr. D'Albert having been the solo pianist and Madame Antoinette Sterling the vocalist. At the concert of Monday evening Mdlle. Marie Krebs reappeared, and played, with special success, Beethoven's great "Waldstein" sonata, for piano solo and (in answer to an encore) Mendelssohn's study in F major. In each piece the pianist's rare executive facility occasionally led her to exaggerate the speed of her performance. Mozart's string Quintet in G minor was finely played by Madame Norman-Néruda, Mr. L. Ries, Herr Straus, Mr. Zerbini, and Signor Piatti, the last-named artist and Herr Straus having been associated with the lady violinist in Beethoven's Serenade, op. 8. Miss Hope Glenn was the vocalist.

A concert was given by the London Welsh Choir at the Farringdon-street Memorial Hall on Wednesday evening, when Emlyn Evans' cantata "The Fairy Tribe" formed the first part of the programme.

On Saturday evening Berlioz's "Faust" music was repeated, under the direction of Mr. Charles Hallé, at St. James's Hall, as at the previous performances there during last year. The solo music belonging to the characters of Margaret, Faust, and Mephistopheles was again admirably rendered, respectively, by Miss M. Davies, Mr. E. Lloyd, and Mr. Santley. The last-named artist was encored in the serenade, "Dear Katharine," and he and the other artists just named were much applauded in several instances; the subordinate music for Brander having been, as before, sung by Mr. Pyatt. As usual, the characteristic Hungarian March and the charming Ballet of Sylphs were encored. The orchestra and the chorus were, as before, of high efficiency, and Mr. Hallé again conducted with masterly skill. The music is to be given again on Jan. 29. It is to be hoped that there may soon be a London performance of Berlioz's "L'Enfant du Christ," which has lately been produced with success by Mr. Hallé at Manchester.

The continuation of the fifteenth season of Mr. John Boosey's London Ballad Concerts, with an afternoon performance on New-Year's Day, has already been recorded. The evening concerts were resumed on Wednesday last, when the singers were Misses Davies and Thorndike, Mesdames Patey and Sterling, Mr. J. Maas, Mr. F. Boyle, Mr. Santley, and Mr. Maybrick; the part-singing of the South London Choral Association having again been a feature in the programme.

Next week's musical proceedings will include the fourth concert of the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society's tenth season (Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" and Rossini's "Stabat Mater" being announced), and Mr. Carrodus's concert of violin music at St. James's Hall, both on Thursday evening; and the Sacred Harmonic Society's third concert of the forty-ninth season on the following evening at St. James's Hall, the programme comprising Handel's Coronation Anthem "The King shall Rejoice," Cherubini's "Requiem," and Mendelssohn's music to "Athalie."

An important announcement has just been issued by Mr. Maurice Strakosch, to the effect that he has arranged with Herr Neumann (of the Leipzig Opera) to direct a series of German performances of Wagner's four "Nibelungen" opera-dramas—"Das Rheingold," "Die Walküre," "Siegfried," and "Götterdämmerung," in London during the ensuing summer season. The scheme is to be under the supervision of the composer.

Mr. Kuhe's Brighton Festival will open on Feb. 15, when Mr. Arthur Sullivan will conduct a performance of his sacred drama, "The Martyr of Antioch."

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The visit of their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales to Lord and Lady Aveland, at Normanton Park, Rutlandshire, during the past week, including a day's visit, on Wednesday, to Grimsthorpe Castle, Lincolnshire, the seat of Lord Aveland's mother, Lady Willoughby de Eresby, has been observed with some interest. We are indebted to a local correspondent, who is well known as "Cuthbert Bede" in the literary world, for Sketches of Normanton and Grimsthorpe, published in this Number of our Journal, and for the accompanying descriptive notices.

The Prince and Princess of Wales arrived at Normanton last Monday evening, travelling from London by a special saloon train on the Great Eastern Railway to Peterborough, and thence on the Midland Railway to Luffenham. They were accompanied by Miss Knollys, Lady in Waiting, and Colonel Teesdale, Equerry in Waiting. The Luffenham Station was reached at two minutes to five o'clock, exactly at the appointed time. The station was decorated with evergreens and flags, and the platform was covered with crimson cloth. Their Royal Highnesses were met by Lord Aveland. They were conducted to a carriage drawn by four dark bay horses, with postillions and outriders, and drove off amid the cheers of the large number of spectators. The villages were decorated with banners and pennons, hanging from arches, and with mottoes of welcome. Near the railway station was a triumphal arch, formed of evergreens; in front were illuminated Prince of Wales's feathers, and the words, "Welcome to the Prince and Princess." Their Royal Highnesses met with a hearty reception, and were cheered as they passed through the village on their way to Normanton Park. At several points on the route there were illuminations; and everything was done to testify to the loyalty of the inhabitants of the district. The church bells of Luffenham are rung early every morning and late every evening. A local tradition says that in the distant past a lady in the darkness of night lost her way. When all but exhausted the sound of the bells of Luffenham Church guided her to the village; and in gratitude she bequeathed a field, to be held by each successive parish clerk, which is known to-day as the "Bellringing Close." The Prince and Princess of Wales, as they drove along the winding road, open to the fields on each side, were reminded of this legend by the merry peals of Luffenham Church bells.

Among the company at Normanton were the Earl of Fife, Viscount and Viscountess Castlereagh, Sir George, Lady Julia, and Miss Wombwell, the Hon. Hugh and Lady Grace Lowther, Colonel and Mrs. Keith Fraser, Mr. C. Sykes, Lord and Lady Granville Gordon, Lord Douglas Gordon, Sir Archibald and the Hon. Lady Campbell, and Major Alan Gardner.

The Prince of Wales was with a shooting party in the South Park at Normanton on Tuesday morning, and took luncheon with the Princess and other ladies in a large marquee on the lawn. Their Royal Highnesses, with other guests of Lord Aveland, drove over to Grimsthorpe on Wednesday, and were received by Lady Willoughby de Eresby; the Prince also enjoyed some shooting there. On Thursday, the Prince and Princess were to visit Oakham Castle; Friday (yesterday) was to be devoted to fox-hunting; and to-day (Saturday) their Royal Highnesses would return to London. After receiving, on their way, an address from the Mayor and Corporation of Stamford, they would lunch at Burghley House, with the Marquis and Marchioness of Exeter.

THE COURT.

Her Majesty entertained Colonel Sir Evelyn Wood at dinner yesterday week; and last Saturday Mrs. Marcus Slade, after lunching at Osborne, was presented to the Queen by the Marchioness Dowager of Ely. Lord Ronald Gower joined the Royal circle at dinner.

On Sunday Divine service was performed at Osborne by the Rev. Teignmouth Shore, in the presence of her Majesty, Princess Louise of Lorne, Princess Beatrice, and Prince Leopold.

The Earl of Kenmare had an audience of her Majesty on Monday, and presented an Address from the House of Lords. The Queen drove in the afternoon to Osborne Cottage, and received the Empress Eugénie on her arrival.

Captain the Hon. Victor and Lady Agneta Montagu and Lieutenant the Hon. Charles Harbord, Scots Guards (lately aide-de-camp to the Governor-General of Canada), have dined with her Majesty.

Lady Southampton has succeeded the Dowager Marchioness of Ely as Lady in Waiting. The Hon. Evelyn Paget has left Osborne.

The Court, which went into mourning on the 7th inst. for the late Dowager Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, goes out of mourning to-morrow (Sunday).

Mr. J. W. Benson has submitted to the Queen the gold casket manufactured by him to contain the address voted to the King of Greece by the Corporation of the City of London.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince of Wales, after attending the opening of Parliament, returned to Sandringham last Saturday. His Royal Highness, with the Princess and Princesses Louise, Victoria, and Maud of Wales, attended Divine service on Sunday at St. Mary Magdalene's Church in the Park; the Rev. F. Hervey officiating. The Prince and Princess duly arrived at Normanton Park on Monday from Sandringham, in accordance with the arrangements announced in our last week's issue, they being met at Luffenham station by Lord Aveland, who accompanied them in a carriage-and-four to Normanton. The villages on the route were en fete. The programme of the entertainments, as set forth last week, has been adhered to.

The seventeenth anniversary of the birthday of Prince Albert Victor of Wales was observed with due honours last Saturday at Sandringham and at Windsor.

The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh have been entertaining the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, the Duke and Duchess of Teck, and a large party during the week at Eastwell Park. The Duke of Edinburgh has selected Captain Gordon Douglas, aide-de-camp to the Queen, for appointment as additional captain of his flag-ship, to assist him in his duties as Admiral Superintendent of the Royal Naval Reserves.

The visit of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught to Lord and Lady Alington was closed with a brilliant ball at Crichel yesterday week, at which nearly 500 guests assembled.

Prince Leopold arrived in town on Monday from Osborne.

The Empress Eugénie left Camden House, Chiselhurst, on Monday, for the Isle of Wight, travelling from London Bridge to Portsmouth, where she was met by Princess Beatrice, who accompanied her to East Cowes.

The marriage of Captain Robert Arthur Montgomery, Royal Artillery, second son of Mr. and Lady Charlotte Montgomery, of Grey Abbey, County Down, with Miss Maria Maud Gosling, second daughter of Mr. Richard Gosling, of Ecclesfield, Ashford, Middlesex, was celebrated at Ashford parish church on Tuesday.

THE EVE OF DEPARTURE.

THE REVOLT IN THE TRANSVAAL.

The Dutch population of the Transvaal, who have risen in arms to regain their political independence, demanding simply the Restoration of the Republican Government which was guaranteed by the Convention of 1852, have elected three of their leading citizens, Mr. S. J. Paul Krüger, Mr. M. W. Pretorius, and Mr. J. P. Joubert, to form the Provisional Government. All these persons held high office in the Transvaal Republic for years before its annexation to the British Empire in April, 1877; and all took a prominent part, as they have never ceased to do, in opposing that annexation. Mr. Joubert was Vice-President of the Republic, and Acting State President in 1875; while Messrs. Krüger and Pretorius were members of the Executive Council, and the latter, who is son of the well-known Andreas Pretorius, founder of the Republic, has held the office of President. Mr. Krüger was Vice-President in 1877. The newly-appointed Republican Executive Council at Heidelberg consists of Messrs. Joubert, Jorissen, and T. P. Maré. The second of these gentlemen, the Rev. Dr. E. T. P. Jorissen, is a Dutch Protestant clergyman, but is also a lawyer, and was Attorney-General of the Republic, with a salary of £600 a year, at the time of the Annexation. The late Republican Government, by the resolutions of its Executive Council at Pretoria, on April 11, 1877, accompanying the formal Protest of President T. F. Burgers against Sir T. Shepstone's act of annexation, ordered a deputation to go to England to remonstrate with her Majesty's Government. Mr. Krüger and Dr. Jorissen formed the first deputation, who came to London and had an interview with the Earl of Carnarvon, then Colonial Secretary, in August of that year. They were informed by Lord Carnarvon that the annexation could not be revoked. Memorials against it signed by very large numbers of the Dutch people, not only in the Transvaal, but in the Cape Colony, and addresses from the Orange River Free State, and from Amsterdam and other cities of Holland, were equally disregarded. Messrs. Krüger and Jorissen therefore returned to South Africa, but the agitation in the Transvaal grew to such a pitch of discontent that, in March, 1878, Sir T. Shepstone, then Administrator for the British Government, issued the severest menacing decrees for the suppression of Dutch popular agitation. Notwithstanding these measures, a fresh memorial protesting against the annexation was signed by 6591 men of the Dutch nation in the Transvaal, being nearly seven eighths of the adult male population. On the other hand, there were 587 signatures, mostly English or foreign, in favour of the annexation. Mr. M. W. Pretorius was chairman of a combined meeting of delegates in April, 1878, which appointed Messrs. Krüger and Joubert to proceed as a second deputation to England, to present the new memorial to the Queen's Government, with further documentary proofs, and to repeat the demand for the restoration of independence. In accordance with these instructions, Messrs. Krüger and Joubert did come to England, and on July 10, 1878, had an audience of Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, who had then succeeded Lord Carnarvon at the Colonial Office. His reply, dated Aug. 6, which will be found in the Parliamentary papers of that Session, confirmed the decision that had been pronounced the year before. From that time, so far as it appears, the Dutch party of independence in the Transvaal have merely awaited their opportunity to cast off the British authority, whenever it should appear feasible, and there has been a general obstinate refusal to pay taxes, or submit to the magistrates of British appointment. The proclamation issued by their new Provisional Government, in the name of the "South African Republic," which is the old style and title of the Transvaal, concludes in these terms:—

"All the inhabitants of this country who will keep themselves quiet and obedient to the laws shall stand under the protection of the laws. The people desire to be forgiving to all burghers of the South African Republic who, by circumstances, have been brought to desert for the time being the part of the people; but it cannot promise to extend this forgiveness to those burghers of the South African Republic who assume the position of open enemies to the people and continue to deceive the English Government by their untruthful representations. All officials who serve the Government now, and who are able and willing to serve under the altered circumstances of the country, shall have a claim to retain their places and such advantages as their position now affords to them. To the English Government the right is reserved to maintain in our country a Consul or Diplomatic Agent, to represent the interests of British subjects. . . . The differences about boundaries with natives shall be submitted to arbitration. For the native policy the Government is prepared to accept general principles to be decided upon after deliberation with the Colonies and States of South Africa. The Republic is preparing to confederate with the Colonies and States of South Africa. Finally, we declare and make known to all and everybody that from this day the country is declared to be in a state of siege and under the provisions of martial law."

The Provisional Government have sent letters to President Brand, the head of the Orange River Dutch Free State, to Mr. Gordon Sprigg, Prime Minister of the Cape Colony, and to Sir G. Pomeroy Colley, Lieutenant-Governor of Natal, claiming sympathy and intervention with the British Government. They appeal to Sir George Colley, and repeatedly speak of their respect for the Queen and the people of England. In their address to Mr. Sprigg they say:—

"We are fully aware that the political condition of the colony prevents any act which might be in opposition to its noble loyalty to her Majesty the Queen, but a moral assistance and, perhaps, intervention with the Home Government will go a long way to prevent a most wicked war between two nations, which will create an everlasting hatred between the two white populations. We trust that the proclamation will convince everybody of our earnest wish to co-operate with the states and colonies of South Africa for all purposes of general welfare."

Many people in England seem to feel surprised, as well as grieved, at the outbreak of this fierce conflict. South African political affairs are so complicated and so obscured by want of geographical and historical information, as well as by colonial misrepresentations, that it is always hard for us at home to explain the actual cause and true merits of any particular war in that region. But let us imagine a similar transaction in Central Asia. This would seem to be a parallel case. A small community of English settlers, but independent of Queen Victoria's allegiance, numbering 100,000, had been dwelling, for several generations past, on the banks of the Oxus.

Their remote situation, far in the interior of the solid Continent, shut in by mountain ranges and deserts, and surrounded by the dominions of foreign States, which laid enormous taxes on the transit of merchandise to or from this English colony, forbade all commerce with the outer world. They had consequently lost that practice of manufacturing and trading industry which had of yore distinguished their forefathers in merry England. But their pastoral wealth, used in a patriarchal fashion, with a primitive simplicity of household life, yielded them constant and abundant means of subsistence. Each substantial yeoman, owning several square miles of the open grassy plain, reared his thousands of sheep and oxen; and built for his sons and his sons-in-law houses close to his own abode, in the centre of a wide family estate. They had plenty of food supplied by the soil and cattle; and their women, spinning, weaving, and sewing, made every article of dress. Mr. Brown, Jones, or Robinson, as the farmer might be named, had small need of buying and selling, when he had once purchased a plough, a rifle, and some useful cutlery, and laid in a stock of ammunition, either for hunting or for his defence against the predatory Turcoman tribes. It was a rude and simple way of living, but it was not entirely savage. These English colonist of the Asiatic steppe retained their Protestant Christianity; and the old Bible, the Prayer-book, and the Hymn-book, which their Puritan ancestors brought from England long before, were cherished by the churches of Transoxiana, with as much faith and zeal as here in the mother-country.

Let this be the social and moral condition of Transoxiana; a commonwealth devoid of luxury, but exempt from penury and artificial depravity, in its primitive English simplicity, only four years ago. Its most powerful neighbour was the mighty Russian Empire, then advancing in the path of conquest from Khiva, Samarcand, and Bokhara, towards the Hindoo Khoosh. But the small English Republic of Central Asia felt its liberties secured by virtue of a solemn Treaty, which the Imperial Government of the Czar had voluntarily negotiated and formally ratified, shortly before the Crimean War. That formal Treaty was settled by a Russian High Commissioner meeting the English Delegates on the banks of the Oxus, and was afterwards countersigned, at St. Petersburg, by Prince Gortschakoff or some other Chancellor of the Russian Empire. It recognised and established, for all time to come, the sovereignty and complete political independence of the Republic of Transoxiana, with the amplest and freest exercise of its nationality by a government of its own choice. There was an express stipulation, moreover, by which the Russian Imperial Government of its own accord bound itself never to interfere or meddle with any disputes between the Republic and the other Asiatic States, nations, or tribes, the Tartars and Turcomans, the Persians and Afghans, or any of its other Mahommedan or heathen neighbours. A more distinct and explicit international agreement was never written, signed, or sealed. It is no wonder, therefore, if the simple English farmers and graziers of Transoxiana believed that their freedom was safe. They relied upon the plighted word of honour of the Great White Czar. The revenue of their own Government was small; they paid few taxes, and kept no standing army. Their dues to the State were cheerfully and punctually discharged by personal service, whether in roadmaking, building, cultivating public land, or carrying the mails. The State in this way jogged on well enough, at a good easy pace; and if it had to fight the Turcomans, the Afghans, or any other national enemies, there was a prompt muster of four or five thousand sturdy Englishmen, every man riding a good horse of his own, and carrying a rifle with which he made capital shots; and their farm-waggons, drawn by teams of farm-oxen, served both for moving tents and for the carrying of warlike stores.

Now, let us suppose that there was a small party of foreign colonial adventurers, land-jobbers, projectors of mines, miscellaneous traders, and general speculators, who had thrust themselves into a vacant corner of Transoxiana. These persons, some of them Russians, others Poles, Jews, Greeks, and nondescripts, numbering about five hundred in all, when they found themselves disappointed in the "exploitation" of the new territory, conceived the idea of upsetting its English Government. If they could effect this revolution, and hand it over to the Russian Empire, they calculated there would be a chance of their getting some lucrative contracts or local appointments, or doing some other kind of profitable business, with the goodwill of a Russian Governor. So they set to work, having nothing better to do, and began to invent all manner of false statements and calumnious libels against the English Republican citizens, the President, the Legislative Council, the House of Representatives, and magistrates of Transoxiana. Among other accusations was that of slave-holding, which had been discontinued above forty years, and no Englishman now owned a single slave. Many of these slanders were written and printed at a local press, in the Russian language, which not a single Englishman could read. They were regularly sent to the Russian Governor General's head-quarters, and were by him forwarded to the Imperial Chancery at St. Petersburg. The Englishmen, for their part, knew little or nothing of all that was said against them, for they never troubled themselves with the opinions of the foreign world. Mr. J. P. Wilkins, then President of Transoxiana, was a man of literary education, a religious preacher, who had turned barrister, and had even visited Europe. His gift of speech-making, without a grain of statesman-like prudence, had, unfortunately, persuaded his simple countrymen to elect him their temporary chief. He flattered the national vanity with schemes of imposing grandeur; a railway over the Hindoo Khoosh to British India, and military conquests towards the shores of the Caspian, were glibly promised within his term of official power.

Now it happened that, in an out-of-the-way district of mountain and forest, two hundred miles distant from the more settled and inhabited lands of Transoxiana, there was a certain wild heathen tribe, the Barra-Biggies, under their chieftain Sicklesnip. The existence of this tribe was a matter of tolerable insignificance to nine tenths of the English farmers, whose dwellings and possessions lay far and wide apart in the open plains by the river. But a few of them had once attempted to take up fresh pastures adjacent to the Barra-Biggie location. These had been relinquished, not for fear of Sicklesnip, but from a want of experience of the pestilential climate there, which was deadly alike to the horses and the horned cattle, and very unwholesome for man. Sicklesnip had thereupon descended upon the vacant fields and deserted homesteads, which the Englishmen thought might some day be reclaimed, or at least sold by them to adventurous new-comers. Those who were interested in the matter prevailed on the Government of their Republic to send a military expedition against Sicklesnip. The English yeomanry force assembled for this purpose, and President Wilkins, having an unbounded conceit of his own abilities, took the command. He led them up into the Booloo mountains to attack one of the most tremendously difficult natural strongholds that ever existed. The attack failed entirely from his ignorant blundering, and he instantly took fright and ran away from his army. The Englishmen who had followed this vain and silly leader were not at all frightened; but they were extremely disgusted, and thought it best to march home and attend to their private affairs. There was not the slightest fear that Sicklesnip would ever come down from his rocky fastness to pursue them. In fact, within a very few months, the Republic had blockaded all the passes to that chieftain's mountain home, and compelled him to sue for peace, which was granted, in February, 1877, on his promising to pay a large fine of cattle.

But the military failure had occasioned much scandal; and one of the agents of the Russian Government, choosing to fancy or to feign that the English Republic was on its last legs, allying himself with the local clique of intriguing foreigners, set to work in secret to prepare its annexation to the Czar's Empire. He repaired to St. Petersburg, talked over one of the Imperial Ministers of State, and procured a conditional ukase, by which he was to go and visit Transoxiana as Special Commissioner, ostensibly to propose a sort of league or confederation of the several States of Central Asia. But he was further secretly empowered, in case the English population should wish to become Russian subjects, then and then only to proclaim annexation. He went to Cromwelltown, the Republican capital, and had much private negotiation with President Wilkins and the Executive Council; but they all resolutely declined to give up their national independence. They never asked for Russian protection or assistance in any shape. It is suspected, however, that Mr. Wilkins was secretly bought over, as he afterwards got a Russian pension. The mysterious diplomatic intrigue went on several weeks, till one fine day (it was April 12, 1877) the Russian Special Commissioner suddenly informed the whole English community that they were henceforth to be liege subjects of the Czar, who had decreed this change of their political condition, and would enforce it by his vast military power, as the Paramount Disposer of Central Asia. It was further intimated, that if they did not submit, the Turcoman hordes should be let loose against their country. It was in vain to protest, to plead the Treaty of 1852, and the long undisputed exercise of Republican independence. Deputations to St. Petersburg went again and again, but returned without hope of redress. After three or four years, there was an English insurrection.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR SKETCHES.

Our South African War Sketches for this week include, first, the Views of Pretoria and Heidelberg, in the Transvaal, where the Dutch Republicans have risen in arms against the British Government recently imposed upon them; and two Illustrations, also, of the hostilities still carried on by the Cape Colonial Government for the subjugation of Basutoland. The latter military enterprise, for which the Queen's Government at home disclaims all direct responsibility, does not seem just now to be making progress towards a successful accomplishment of its design. Colonel Carrington, who commands the force posted at Mafeteng, on the frontier, has during the last week or two had some local skirmishes with parties of the Basutos, and has repulsed them without difficulty. He has formed a camp beyond Tsita, the village destroyed last month. But he appears to be kept waiting for the result of General Clarke's operations against the Tembus and the Pondos, who have invaded East Griqualand, before he can advance into the hostile country. It is even thought questionable whether the Colonial forces, consisting of Cape Mounted Rifles, Burgher Militia, and Volunteers, are equal to the task of dealing with such a multitude of diverse foes, over all the extensive territories beyond the Kei and the Orange Rivers. Our Illustrations of the Basuto war represent the scene in the Camp at Mafeteng when the alarm was sounded, the pickets having been driven in by a night attack; and a detachment of native troops on the march, halting for their morning meal. These sketches were taken by Bugler Long, of the Capetown (Duke of Edinburgh's Own) Volunteers.

The other Illustrations, as noticed above, refer to the alarming insurrection in the Transvaal, which has already been attended with deplorable loss of life; and the manner in which a detachment of the 94th Regiment was destroyed, at the outset of this unhappy conflict, has excited the deepest sorrow. A more particular account of the Transvaal affair is given in a separate article. Our View of the town of Pretoria, and that of Heidelberg, which is situated on the road to Pretoria from the Natal frontier, are from Sketches by Captain W. J. Fowler, R.A. The encampment in front of Pretoria, at the time when the sketch was taken in 1879, was that formed by Sir Garnet Wolseley, with three infantry regiments, one of cavalry, and a battery of artillery. At Heidelberg, also, there were then a squadron of cavalry and a company of infantry, with two guns, and a redoubt was also built at this place.

Pretoria, which was named by the Dutch after their famous emigrant leader, Andreas Pretorius, the founder both of the Orange River Free State and of the Transvaal Republic is the political capital; but the most important commercial town is Potchefstroom, situated much farther westward. Pretoria is distant 400 miles from Pietermaritzburg, the capital of Natal, and 450 from the seacoast. The site is pleasant and healthy, in a fertile valley between two ranges of rocky hills in the midst of a vast upland plain; and the town is surrounded with trees, hedges, and shrubs, rich in foliage and flowers. It consists of a square, with the principal Dutch Church in it, and four streets meeting in the centre. It appears that there were in Pretoria, at the time when the garrison had to retire to the "Fort," Colonel (now Sir William Owen Lanyon (the Administrator), his staff, and members of the Government; Colonel Gildea, commanding 21st Royal Scots Fusiliers, numbering about 250 men; Mrs Gildea, and all the women and children of the regiment; detachment of the 58th Regiment and two guns, the other two having been sent to Potchefstroom. There would also be the wounded of the 94th Regiment, and the British residents and shopkeepers, of whom nearly all are English. The "Fort" is a brick building, with a ditch round it, situated in an open plain on the verge of the racecourse, about a mile outside the town. It is somewhat commanded by a range of hills, but, as the Dutch have no cannon, this fact is not of much consequence. The fort was built when the Dutch were "troublesome," at the time of Sir Bartle Frere's visit, and consists of some barrack-like buildings and a large walled inclosure. The walls, though thin, are quite impervious to rifle-bullets; and if there be adequate supplies of provisions and ammunition, as well as water, the place may hold out for a long time against any force the Dutch people of the Transvaal can bring against it, or any efforts they can make to carry it by assault. In all probability the Dutch will try to starve out the garrison, and perhaps they can interfere with the supply of water, though part of the Aapjies streamlet flows through the plain close at hand.

There is news from Potchefstroom to the 1st inst. Major Clarke and Commandant Raaf are the close prisoners in the hands of the Dutch, but the fort, with the few British soldiers and residents, still holds out, and was provisioned for a month. Among its inmates are Colonel Winslow, Major Thornhill, Commissioner Dunn, Dr. Wallis, Lieutenants Hay and Liddell, and Messrs. Palmer, Sketchley, and Watt. The survivors of the 94th Regiment have reached Natal in safety.

The despatch of troops from Portsmouth and Woolwich to South Africa has been continued with great activity: three transports left the Thames on Tuesday. We give an Illustration of the scene at the mess-table of a Highland regiment, "on the Eve of Departure."

The late Mr. Edward B. Lyer, of Brixton, has bequeathed to Mr. W. Birch's Cornbrook Orphan Houses £500.

THE SILENT MEMBER.

LORDS.

The ceremony of opening Parliament by Royal Commission, on Thursday, the 6th inst., was as tame as ever. To lend a little courtly ornateness to the formality of reading the Queen's Speech, five Ministerial peers—Lord Selborne, Earl Spencer, Earl Sydney, the Earl of Cork, and Lord Monson—sacrificed themselves on the shrine of duty, so far as to assume the portentous hats and brilliant robes which their Lordships are doomed to wear on State occasions, and to sit in a row in front of the Throne, for the delectation of ordinary mortals in the guise of fair strangers in the galleries and members of the Lower House at the Bar, headed by their bland and urbane Speaker. Such, in a few words, was the scene in the Upper House when the Lord Chancellor, with a fluency of speech acquired by a lifetime of advocacy, read her Majesty's Address, which suggested to Parliament that Ireland would this Session yield the hardest nut to crack—by which phrase no Donnybrook flourishing of the shillelagh is alluded to, be it understood.

The gracious performance by the Earl of Beaconsfield of a graceful duty—the introduction of the late Viceroy of India as Earl Lytton—gave an interest to the evening gathering. Earl Granville took up his habitual, easy position in the centre of the Ministerial bench face to face with the Leader of the Opposition. The Earl of Derby seemed quite at home in his seat below the gangway on the Ministerial side. Behind Ministers the mover and seconder of the Address, Lord Carrington and the Earl of Yarborough, bore themselves bravely in their scarlet and blue uniforms, respectively. Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Edinburgh, and the Duke of Cambridge occupied their accustomed seats on the cross bench; whilst Princess Mary, the Duke of Teck, Prince Christian, and a number of peeresses looked down upon the distinguished assemblage from the balconies to the right and left of the Throne. The sweet face of the Princess of Wales was missing. Conspicuous also by his absence was the Marquis of Salisbury, albeit Lord Beaconsfield was strongly supported by Earl Cairns, Lord Cranbrook, the Duke of Richmond, and other ex-Ministers.

The speeches made were worthy the audience. Lord Carrington (who had distinguished himself during a previous Session by his frank and unprejudiced remarks in favour of Earl Cairns's land bills) comported himself with soldierly directness, and touched with firmness and fairness the various topics in the Queen's Speech. Lord Carrington will make his mark in politics. The thoughtful Address of the Earl of Yarborough was also marked by high promise.

Lord Beaconsfield delivered his pungent and lively criticism of the Ministerial policy in an oracular style, reminding one of the gloomy visions Mr. Benjamin Disraeli used to conjure up for Lord Palmerston to demolish in a few bantering sentences. The noble Earl's attack was, nevertheless, most artistically conceived. He adroitly sought to convey the general notion that, whereas the late Ministry had brought "peace with honour" to Europe, had covered the Indian Army with glory in Afghanistan, and had held Irish agitators in check, the present Government had made war imminent in Europe, were scuttling in an undignified manner from Candahar, and by supineness had allowed the Land League to rule in lieu of the Administration in Ireland. The peroration was a resonant appeal to the Government, enforced with emphatic action, to re-establish "the sovereignty of the Queen" in Ireland—a declaration which elicited from the Conservative benches a round of cheering, that was, comparatively speaking, hearty.

Earl Granville caught a spark of his skilful antagonist's fire and energy. The Foreign Secretary was actually audible in his very first sentences, which plainly cost him an effort. To the charge that the Ministry had broken the continuity of action which Lord Beaconsfield implied ought to be continued from one Government to another, Earl Granville aptly retorted that Ministers could hardly be expected to follow servilely in the steps of an Administration which had been "entirely discredited and defeated at the polls." The Foreign Secretary went on to show, in his amiably argumentative way, that, so far from seeking to reverse the Berlin Treaty, the Government were endeavouring to give practical effect to that instrument. Mildly insinuating that the country had been not a little disatisfied with "the blundering and impotency" of the late Ministry in Afghanistan, the noble Earl left foreign politics for "Disturbed Ireland." On this vexed ground, he argued that the Peace Preservation Act was not effective in the hands of the late Government as a measure to suppress outrage and seditious agitation; complained that the sudden Dissolution of Parliament would not have given the present Ministry time to re-enact it before it lapsed, if it had been desirable to do so; and justified the employment of the ordinary powers of enforcing the law until Parliament met to sanction the use of more stringent measures, and the introduction of "measures that will lead to the improvement of the relations between landlord and tenant, and the better economical position of the tenantry of Ireland." The Duke of Marlborough, as predecessor to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, added the weight of his personal experience to the mountain of blame piled up against the Government for not intervening more actively to maintain order in Ireland. Earl Cairns rose to point out that Sir Michael Hicks-Beach was not, as Earl Granville claimed, in favour of the attitude adopted by the Government towards Ireland. But Earl Spencer defended the Ministerial policy in a thoughtful speech. The Duke of Abercorn, as another ex-Lord Lieutenant, deprecated the attempt to treat Ireland with rod in one hand and sugar in the other. His Grace's exemplary brevity was neither imitated by Lord Donoughmore nor by the Earl of Dunraven, who in an able speech assumed the congenial rôle of a candid friend to the Ministry. Lord Kimberley closed the debate with a business-like explanation that it was the intention of the Government "to pass a measure for the protection of life and property, and until that is done we shall not be in a position to bring before Parliament remedial measures." The Address was then tacitly agreed to. It was duly presented to her Majesty, who on Tuesday returned, by the Earl of Kenmare, the following gracious reply:—

> My Lords,—I thank you sincerely for your loyal and dutiful Address. I rely with confidence on your cordial co-operation in all my efforts to improve and strengthen the laws and institutions of the country and to promote the welfare and happiness of all classes of my people.

Few of their Lordships came down to the House on the Friday. The sitting was only of a few minutes' duration, the Lord Chancellor having merely to introduce a couple of bills to amend the Judicature and Burials Acts.

Earl Lytton had his opportunity on Monday. The late Viceroy of India made the most of it. Prince Leopold was among the illustrious audience the noble Earl had. The gist of his ample and elaborate defence of the war entered into by the late Ministry against Afghanistan, and of the occupation of certain parts of Afghan territory by British troops, was that we thereby destroyed Russian ascendancy at Cabul. He deplored the idea of giving up Candahar, fearing the retirement of our troops would only be followed by the extension of Russian influence to that fortified city and to Cabul. Lord Lytton was complimented by the Duke of Argyll on "the ability, eloquence, and skill" with which he had addressed the House. But his Grace, with characteristic vigour, lost no time in maintaining his old argument that the Afghan war was a mistake from the beginning; and ridiculed the notion that the presence of the Russians, who had recently been defeated again by the Tekké Turcomans, need be feared in Afganistan. Lord Cranbrook energetically rebutted the noble Duke's charges, and gave reasons for the late Government's determination to retain possession of Southern Afghanistan. To which Lord Northbrook replied with equal confidence on the part of the Ministry, whose action was also concisely defended by Lord Enfield, the latter insisting that it was never the intention of the late Government to retain Candahar.

Mr. Forster is probably one of the last members who would seriously think of retiring to the seclusion of the Upper Chamber as an oasis where Mr. Parnell would cease from troubling, and he would be at rest. But the perturbed Secretary for Ireland was on Tuesday seen to enter the House, and converse earnestly with the Lord Chancellor on the woolsack. There was little business to do. Earl Spencer gave a gentle check to a prevailing habit for moving for inordinate and costly returns by declining to promise Lord Dunsany all the statistics he asked for. Lord Brabourne relieved his mind of an opinion adverse to the Transvaal Boers; but Lord Kimberley declined to be drawn into a premature discussion of the war, either by the speech of his former colleague or by the query of Lord Bury regarding the attack on Captain Elliott.

COMMONS.

The sixth of January saw a large assemblage of members shortly after noon, early in the New Year though it was to call Parliament together. Without comment may the rush of the Speaker and his dutiful flock to the Lords be dismissed, save to say that Mr. Goschen, apparently not knowing where to sit after a lively confabulation with Sir Charles Dilke at the table, tarried behind among the goodly number of members who were, in a manner of speaking, unconsciously or consciously "Boycotting" the Royal Commissioners, to use the inevitable phrase of the hour.

The House bore a familiar appearance when the hour for business arrived. The extreme Home Rulers—including a few Land League traversers, not in manacles—gathered strongly on the benches they have occupied for several Sessions—i.e., on the second and third below the gangway on the Opposition side. They gave a ringing cheer when Mr. Parnell, his beard shaven off, walked, with his head bent, up the floor to his seat. The effect of the reception was rather destroyed by the burst of laughter that came from the English members. Loud and general was the cheering, however, that greeted Mr. Gladstone, when he quietly slipped in from behind the Speaker's chair. Mr. Forster, too, met with a sympathetic reception a few minutes earlier; but the chorus of "Hear! hear! hear!" did not remove the gravity that had settled upon the anxious face of the Secretary for Ireland.

The Ministry propose; but the Home Rulers dispose! That has been the keynote of the Irish Session hitherto. On the opening day, Mr. Forster promptly gave notice for the morrow of bills "for the better protection of persons and property in Ireland," and "to amend the law relating to the carrying and possession of arms, and for the preservation of the public peace in Ireland." But the Friday passed without the introduction of these measures, which Mr. Gladstone intimated should have precedence over all orders and notices. That the Government honestly intended to bring about the desired result was manifest from the opening given on the very first night to the Irish members to ventilate their grievances. Thus after Mr. Rendel, in a plaintive speech, and Mr. Slagg, in a Manchester deliverance, had moved the Address in conventional fashion; and after Sir Stafford Northcote's highly-pitched paraphrase of Lord Beaconsfield's slashing assault had been dextrously answered by Mr. Gladstone very much as Earl Granville replied to the Leader of the Opposition in the House of Lords, the debate was left in the hands of the members from the Emerald Isle. "Say what's right, O'Connor!" Encouraged by this exclamation from a stranger, who was forthwith expelled from the gallery, Mr. T. P. O'Connor gave the reins to his eloquence with a vengeance, and made one of the most effective, if too loud, speeches of the night. The rich flow of brogue was interrupted for a time by the flank attacks of Sir Wilfrid Lawson and Mr. Labouchere on the Government, apropos of the Boer rising in the Transvaal—which brought up Alderman Fowler with an emphatic condemnation of the pro-slavery customs of the Boers. But twenty hours or so later (after Mr. O'Kelly had wasted much valuable time in protesting against the suppression of a meeting) Mr. Parnell took up the running, and in one of his quiet addresses, incisively delivered at white heat, as it were, moved this amendment:—

> But we humbly beg to assure her Majesty that we are convinced that the peace and tranquility of Ireland cannot be promoted by suspending any of the constitutional rights of the Irish people.

Mr. Arthur Arnold and Mr. O'Connor Power were equally strong against "coercion," which Mr. Forster justified in a statesman-like speech, to which Mr. Gibson replied with habitual clearness from the front Opposition bench. Monday came, but brought with it neither of the Ministerial measures. The discussion dragged its slow length along through the medium of Mr. Shaw, Lord Randolph Churchill, Mr. C. Russell (whose able speech was loudly cheered), The O'Donoghue, Mr. Bradlaugh, and, lastly, Mr. Plunket, whose vivacious endeavour to cast ridicule upon the Land Leaguers was keenly relished. On Tuesday, Mr. Biggar sought to raise a debate by a side issue—by a reference in very bad taste to the trial in Dublin—but was groaned down by the House, which is clearly not in a mood to endure much longer the unbearable hindrance of an organised system of Obstruction. This indefensible method of Parliamentary warfare came in for a good sound punishment at the hands of Mr. Mitchell-Henry, whose condemnation of the Land League was equally strong. The Solicitor-General for Ireland, Mr. Johnson, successfully proved, as a Home Ruler suggested, that he was as fully qualified to prosecute the Land Leaguers as the Attorney-General was. But the address of the night was delivered by the Marquis of Hartington, who replied to Mr. Chaplin, and most vigorously condemned the "miscreants" who had sowed disorder in Ireland, but at the same time trenchantly defended the Government policy of preferring remedial measures by increasing the strength of the executive power in Ireland, and by granting the means of effectually putting down disorder. The earnest and powerful speech of the noble Marquis was warmly cheered—but still the torrent of Home-Rule declamation was not stopped. It expended itself in the earlier part of Wednesday afternoon by dashing itself against the Treasury bench, in the vain effort to dissuade the Government from resuming the debate that day. Mr. Blennerhassett eventually took up the theme of the Address in the reasonable tone of an Irish gentleman, who wished to see a sound and adequate measure of land reform introduced, but had no sympathy whatever with the Land League malcontents. Mr. Shaw-Lefevre's wide knowledge and grasp of the subject made his remarks acceptable. But yet the inexhaustible bottle of Irish loquacity was not empty.

Ireland on the brain! Sufferers from this malady may find some relief in the few bills the Government have contrived to smuggle in, although one of them drastically treats of the bribery evil. Sir Henry James, yesterday week, secured the first reading of the Corrupt Practices Bill, which proposes to render a man guilty of bribery at elections liable to imprisonment with hard labour, and will disqualify a candidate proved to have bribed from representing the same constituency for the rest of his life. The Public Prosecutor is to have the responsibility of prosecuting offenders thrown upon him. In every respect, the bill is most stringent. The Ballot Act Continuance Bill was also read the first time the same night; and on Monday Mr. Trevelyan introduced the Ministerial measure for the abolition of flogging in the Navy.

HOME NEWS.

The writ for the election of a member for Wigan was received on Tuesday. The Mayor has fixed Saturday (to-day) for the nomination, and next Tuesday for the polling.

Her Majesty's Office of Works has intrusted Mr. Waterer with the providing and planting of a large number of rhododendrons and azaleas in Hyde Park.

On Wednesday the Christian Workers' Mission gave a good meal to about 1300 persons at the Hall, George-street, Camberwell. There were also gifts to the aged and infirm.

Earl Sydney was, at a special court of the Tin-plate Workers' Company, held at the Mansion House on Tuesday afternoon, presented with the freedom of that Guild.

Mr. A. A. Bourne, senior mathematical master at Rossall, has been elected head master of the Oxford Military College, vice the Rev. J. White, appointed head master of the Royal Naval School, New-cross.

A public meeting was held on Monday evening in connection with the opening of a new Board school which has been erected in the Thornhill-road, Islington. Sir Charles Reed, M.P., chairman of the Board, presided.

Earl Stanhope has forwarded, as chairman of the British National Rifle Association, an invitation to the National Rifle Association of America to compete at Wimbledon in a long-range match next July. But it has been declined.

The magistrates of Cornwall have sanctioned the expenditure of £20,000 for the enlargement of the County Lunatic Asylum, so as to provide accommodation for 150 additional pauper lunatics.

The death of two eminent Scotch ministers was announced on Monday. The Rev. James Aitken, of the High Church, Kilmarnock, died on Sunday, aged seventy-eight. The Rev. Dr. M'Taggart, of St. James's Church, Glasgow, died on Saturday evening, aged seventy-five.

The new University boat-house at Oxford was totally destroyed by fire at an early hour on Sunday morning. The building had been just completed, and cost over £2000. Upwards of forty valuable eight-oar racing boats, the property of college clubs, were also destroyed.

Mr. Ellison, at the Lambeth Police Court on Saturday last, sentenced Jacob Golstein to one month's imprisonment, with hard labour. The accused sought to stimulate the charity of the public by simulating a fit, and causing froth to issue from his mouth by means of soap which he sucked.

There was a large increase in the arrivals of both live stock and fresh meat landed at Liverpool last week from the United States and Canada; making a total of 2008 cattle, 122 sheep, 378 pigs, 11,767 quarters of beef, 1448 carcases of mutton, and 1125 carcases of pigs.

At the annual meeting of the governors and subscribers of the Deaf and Dumb Asylum held on Monday at the Cannon-street Hotel, it was stated that they had decided to give a specific trial to the pure oral system for educating the deaf and dumb, as resolved upon at the recent Congress at Milan.

By returns showing the number of emigrants who left the port of Liverpool during the past year we learn that the number was 183,502, against 117,914 in 1879, an increase of 65,588. Of the total number of emigrants for the year 74,969 were English, 1811 Scotch, 27,986 Irish, and 74,115 were foreigners.

The Baxter Physical Science Scholarship of £116, conferred by the University of Edinburgh on the most eminent B.Sc. who has taken his degree during the present or the preceding year, has been awarded to Mr. D. Orme Masson, lecturer on chemistry at University College, Bristol, who is prevented from accepting it in consequence of holding his present appointment.

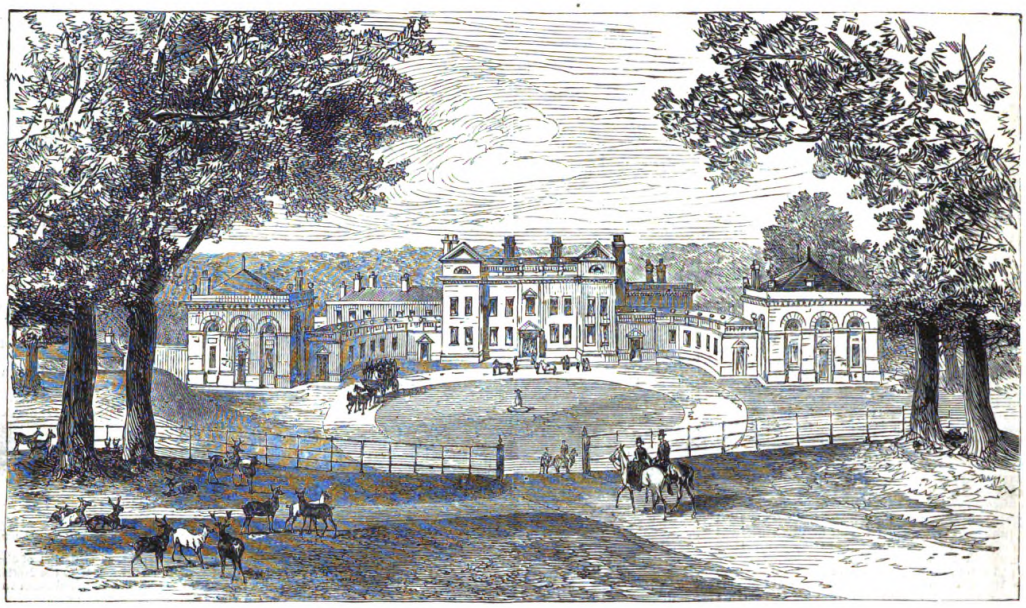
The Grocers' Company yesterday week presented General Sir Frederick Roberts with the freedom of their ancient guild; and in the evening entertained him at a banquet at the hall in Princes-street, the guests at which included the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor. General Roberts will be presented with the freedom of the Corporation of London on Feb. 14. The Lord Mayor will entertain the gallant officer in the evening at the Mansion House.

At a court of the Armourers and Braziers' Company recently held grants were made to various hospitals and charitable institutions, amounting in the whole to £315; the Tallow Chandlers' Company, at a court held last week, made grants to charitable institutions to the total amount of £141 15s.; and the Company of Clothworkers have contributed £50 to the Ragged School Union, and twenty guineas to the Army Coffee Taverns Company.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers on the last day of the first week in January was 92,755 of whom 51,818 were in workhouses and 40,937 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding week in 1879, these figures show a decrease of 2307; but as compared with 1878 and 1877 they show an increase of 8611 and 10,248 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 912, of whom 700 were men, 171 women, and 37 children under sixteen.

The Canterbury having passed into new hands, several fresh items of interest have been added to the programme. "Snow Flakes," one of the prettiest ballets ever seen—supported by Mdlles. Powell and Brunetti and Messrs. Bertram and Ash—has been revived. Some very graceful roller-skating is introduced. In "Une Batterie de Cuisine," the Goodrich Troupe perform selections from popular operas upon plates, dishes, stew-pans, dish-covers, frying-pans, and other articles which have not hitherto been regarded as instruments for the production of sweet sounds. The musical tastes of our young friends home for the holidays will now soar far beyond a ten-tray solo. The pseudo-American Midgets—clever little acrobats, by-the-way—are large enough to swallow Mr. Frank Uffner's veritable mites.

VISIT OF THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES TO NORMANTON PARK, RUTLANDSHIRE.



VIEW FROM THE SOUTH-EAST.

Normanton Park, Lord Aveland's principal seat in Rutland, where, during the past week, he has entertained the Prince and Princess of Wales and a distinguished circle of guests, is situated between Oakham and Stamford, six miles and a half from the latter place, and five and half from the small county town of Rutland. It is very pleasantly and picturesquely placed on the slope of a richly-timbered park, five hundred acres in extent, and well stocked with deer. It is a fine mansion of the Ionic order, rebuilt on the site of the earlier house at the close of the past century, and consists of a central elevation of three storeys, with two wings of the same height, and a semicircular sweep of one-storeyed rooms on either side, with ornamental blocks of building for stables and other purposes. The large dining-room, built at a later period, is attached to the north-east wing of the mansion, and is a room of magnificent proportions and height. It contains, among other family portraits, that of Lady Sophia Heathcote as Hebe, by Hoppner. This is a full-length portrait, and well known by the engravings. This room—the exterior of which is shown in our view of the house taken from the lawn—was the scene of the grand ball given last (Friday) evening in honour of the Royal guests. The whole of the exterior of the mansion is remarkable for the beauty of the stonework and carving, and important additions and improvements have been made by the present noble owner. On the first floor, communicating with the spacious hall by a fine double stone staircase, are the suite of three handsome drawing-rooms and other rooms, from which beautiful views are obtained of the park and surrounding country. These rooms, as well as the library and dining-rooms on the ground floor, were originally decorated by Adams. Within the last few years the interior has been entirely redecorated, keeping to the same style, and is furnished with great taste, and with a due regard to domestic comfort.

At the foot of the hill, on the slope of which the mansion is built, the road is carried by a bridge over a stream, which has been artificially widened into a small lake, with an island in the midst for the water-fowl. The stream is a tributary of Rutland's river, the Gwash, or Wash, of which Drayton, in his "Polyolbion," said,

What river ever rose from bank or swelling hill,
Than Rutland's wandering Wash, a delicater rill!

On the further side of this lake, the park is extended to the wooded heights towards Whitwell and Exton—as shown in one of our sketches; and the views from the mansion in that direction, and towards Burley-on-the-Hill, are rich in picturesque combinations of truly rural scenery. Below the mansion, and on the slope of the hill, is the ancient Church of St. Matthew, consisting of a nave and chancel, with a modern portico, tower, and small spire, of the Ionic order, with richly carved Corinthian columns, erected, at a great expense, in the year 1826, when the older part of the church was renovated; further improvements being carried out in 1874. The Rector is the Rev. T. Bentley Brown, Domestic Chaplain to Lord Aveland.

The gardens and grounds are tastefully laid out, from designs by Repton; and, on the lawn near to the Hall-Room, shown in our sketch, is an ancient cedar of Lebanon, of huge size and in full vigour. On the opposite side of the lawn still grows an old mulberry-tree, the fallen limbs of which are carefully attended to. Various statues adorn this lawn, and a fernery is also an attractive addition. The well-walled kitchen-gardens adjoin this lawn. In the park are some noble avenues of oaks, and other hard wood trees, many of which are of great dimensions; and, on the outskirts of the park, in addition to newly-erected cottages for labourers, are extensive workshops, with wood-working machinery, driven by steam-power. These have been erected by Lord Aveland for the execution of the various building operations on his estates in Rutland and Lincolnshire; and upwards of a hundred skilled workmen are here employed, under the direction of Mr. Newman, clerk of the works.

Although not mentioned in Domesday, Normanton evidently took its name from the Normanvilles, who came here, from Kent, soon after the Conquest. Their heiress, about the time of Edward II., carried it to William de Basings, who resided here, and whose town house gave the name to the modern Basinghall-street. From the Basings, it passed to the Mackworths; and, in 1729, it was purchased by Gilbert Heathcote, who was created a Baronet in 1733. He was a very noteworthy man, having been one of the founders of the Bank of England, M.P. for London, Alderman, and Lord Mayor; and he was the last Lord Mayor who rode on horseback in the procession on Lord Mayor's day. There are also literary associations in connection with his name; for he was the Sir Andrew Freeport of the Spectator: he is mentioned by Pope (in his "Imitations of Horace")—

Heathcote himself, and such large-acred men;

he appears in Bramble's "Letters," and also in Dyer's "Fleece," where "beauteous Normanton" is spoken of as

Health's cheerful haunt, and the selected walk
Of Heathcote's leisure.

Sir Gilbert Heathcote's lineal descendant is the present Gilbert Henry Heathcote-Drummond-Willoughby, Lord Aveland, who was born in 1830. He was M.P. for Boston from 1852 to 1856, and for Rutland from 1856 to 1867, in which year he succeeded his father, who had been created the first Lord Aveland in 1856. In 1871 he was appointed to exercise the office of Lord Great Chamberlain of England, as deputy for his mother, the Baroness Willoughby de Eresby, who, in 1872, having succeeded her brother, the twentieth Baron, assumed for herself and children, by Royal license, the additional surnames of Willoughby and Drummond. Lord Aveland was married, in 1863, to the Lady Evelyn Elizabeth Gordon, second daughter of the tenth Marquis of Huntly, and has a numerous family.

Our three Illustrations of Normanton Park will convey an idea of its position and the general beauty of its situation. In the view showing the approach to the house, the road to the left is that by which the Royal guests approached from Luffenham on Monday last. The road to the right, leading towards Stamford, is that by which they will take their departure. On leaving the lodges at this side of the park the coach-road passes through a long avenue of beech and sycamores. Glimpses are obtained of the fine church and picturesque village of Empingham, a portion of Lord Aveland's property. Most tasteful decorations have been put up here during the week, in welcome of the Royal visitors. Far different was the scene at this spot four centuries ago, when, on March 12, 1470, Edward IV., at the head of his army, crossed the ancient bridge, still standing, over the Gwash, at the entrance to the village, having marched from Stamford at the head of the Yorkists, and was engaged all day in a fierce fight with the Lancastrians, under Sir Robert Welles and Sir Thomas Launde, who were defeated with great loss. The battle extended from Empingham, more than two miles north-east, to Horne Field, and to that portion of the Great North-road, which, in memory of the fight, is still called "The Bloody Oaks." It is said that ten thousand men fell in this battle, which is also known by the name of "Losecoat Field," from those who fled from the fight throwing off their coats to gain speed.

Our Illustrations are from sketches taken for this Journal by Cuthbert Bede, to whom we are also indebted for this account of Normanton Park.

GRIMSTHORPE, LINCOLNSHIRE.

Grimsthorpe Castle, Lincolnshire, which was visited this week by the Prince of Wales during his sojourn at Normanton Park, is the residence of Lord Aveland's mother, the Baroness Willoughby de Eresby. She is the widow of the first Lord Aveland, and succeeded her brother, the twentieth Baron Willoughby de Eresby, in 1870, assuming, by Royal license, the principal and additional surname and arms of Drummond, and, in 1872, the surname of Willoughby, in addition to and after those of Heathcote-Drummond. She is Joint Hereditary Great Chamberlain of England, her son, Lord Aveland, acting as her Deputy.

Grimsthorpe Castle is a large, massive, and stately pile, quadrangular in form, and is built on the summit of a considerable hill, from which there are extensive views on all sides. In fact, if it were possible to see so far over the fens and the sea, the next rising ground would be in the direction of Denmark. From its position, the Castle must, in olden time, have been an important military stronghold. It was, originally, an irregular structure, dating from the early part of the thirteenth century, and described by Leland as "fair and strong," with the walls embattled and surrounded by a moat. King John's tower, at the south-east corner of the castle, still remains in excellent preservation, with walls of great thickness. In order that he might suitably entertain King Henry VIII., Charles Brandon, Duke of Suffolk, partially rebuilt and greatly embellished the castle. He had married the beautiful widow of the aged King of France, under whose direction had been made a suite of Gobelins tapestry, which the widow brought to her new husband. In 1810 the state dining-room was constructed for its reception, and there the tapestry still hangs, in as perfect preservation as though it had only recently left the loom. The piece that occupies the whole of the eastern wall of this room is believed to be the largest piece of tapestry in Europe. Tapestry of the same date also hangs in one of the bed-rooms, and costly lace, of the same period, forms the hangings and covering to the bed.

Early in the last century, the north front of the castle was erected, after the designs of Sir John Vanbrugh, who was also employed to decorate other portions of the castle, both outside and in. The north front, with its lofty wings, enriched pinnacles, bold columns, double rows of windows, and classical groups of statuary, is a very fine specimen of the imposing solidity of Vanbrugh's style, and rivals the same architect's work at Blenheim, where the arrangement of the chapel is similar. It occupies the western wing at Grimsthorpe, the state dining-room occupying the corresponding position in the eastern wing. Between them is a vast hall—the largest entrance-hall in England—rising to the full height of the roof, and having, at each end, double flights of stone staircases behind ranges of pillars and arches. In front of this entrance is a spacious courtyard, walled on either side, and having an ornamental iron railing across the front, which opens directly upon the great avenue.

Beyond the state dining-room, on the first floor of the eastern front, is the suite of state drawing-rooms, three in number, lighted by fine oriel windows. In these rooms are a large number of the family portraits, and also of the portraits of the Kings and Queens of England from an early period, that were presented by the reigning Sovereigns to the Lords Great Chamberlains. The original thickly-padded dress, in which King James I. is depicted, is still preserved at Grimsthorpe, with many other equally interesting curiosities. The largest and one of the best of these Royal pictures is Vandyck's Charles I., with his Queen and children. The very large number of these historical portraits, painted by the most celebrated artists, and lining the walls of the spacious corridors, and the numerous reception and bed rooms, are not the least among the many attractions of Grimsthorpe. Two of these portraits represent "the brave Lord Willoughby" of the famous ballad, who so distinguished himself in Flanders, fighting against the Spaniards, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. He was the Peregrine Bertie who was born at Wesel, on the Rhine, under very romantic circumstances, and, eventually inheriting his mother's estates, was summoned to Parliament by the title of Lord Willoughby de Eresby. Portraits of his parents are also at Grimsthorpe. The castle contains a large number of other fine paintings, both ancient and modern, together with miniatures, statuary, rare marbles, Sèvres china, several Coronation chairs and Royal canopies, and gold plate of great value and historical interest, that had belonged to Kings and Queens of England and Scotland through several centuries, and became the perquisites of the various Lords Great Chamberlains of England.

On the western side are the Chinese drawing-room (with the bow window), the German dining-room, Lady Willoughby's room, and other rooms. The views from this western front—where there is a long and wide terrace—are exceedingly fine, looking down the hill, across the large lake, to the richly-wooded opposite hills. The various undulations of the ground, and the alternations between hill and dale, with the profusion of fine timber, make this landscape exceedingly picturesque. The Park, in this direction, extends from the Castle to the lodge at Little Bytham—the route taken by the Royal visitors arriving—for a distance of four miles. It has an area of 1992 acres, of which 1190 acres constitute the deer park. Here are not only—in addition to Highland cattle—many hundreds of the ordinary deer, but also a large number of fine red deer of the original race that has been preserved in Grimsthorpe Park for many centuries. The carriage-drive from Bytham passes through some fine avenues of oaks and a chestnut avenue which rivals that at Hampton Court. In the western portion of the Park are numerous hawthorns, of great age, the remnant of the ancient forest, and great bearers of mistletoe. A few remains of Vaudray Abbey are still to be seen in the Park, not far from the lake.

The flower-gardens are on the south and east fronts, and, with shrubberies and yew-walks, are continued to the very extensive walled kitchen-gardens, which are on the slope of the hill towards Edenham, in which parish Grimsthorpe is situated. Edenham church is an ancient and remarkably fine building, in an excellent state of preservation, and contains many stately monumental memorials to members of the Willoughby de Eresby family. Its Vicar, the Rev. G. Prior Sharp, is Domestic Chaplain to the Baroness.

Several fine views of the Castle are obtained from different points. We have selected for our chief Illustration the north-west view of the Castle, as seen over the lake from the chief riding in the Bishop Hall Wood, where the Prince of Wales shot with Lord Aveland and his party. Another view shows the east front, with the suite of state rooms. These views are from sketches by Cuthbert Bede, who has also furnished us with the above notes concerning Grimsthorpe Castle.

FUNERAL OF A COMRADE OF SIR JOHN FRANKLIN.

We have given some account of the recent discovery, by Lieutenant Schwatka's American expedition, of some additional traces and relics of the fate of Sir John Franklin's companions, the officers and crew of the Erebus and Terror, who perished between 1847 and 1848, some time after leaving their ships, lost in the attempt to find the North-West Passage of the Arctic Regions. Among the sketches by Mr. H. W. Klutschak, one of the American expedition party, which appeared in our publication of the 1st inst., was that of their finding, near Victory Point, King William's Land, the grave of Lieutenant John Irving, R.N., an officer of H.M.S. Terror; and it was stated in our last that the remains of his body had been brought to this country, and were to be buried at Edinburgh. This remarkable funeral ceremony took place on Friday last week, in the Dean Cemetery, at the west end of that city, and is the subject of one of our present Illustrations. The procession, which started from No. 55, Great King-street, was witnessed by a large number of spectators. A firing party of eighty-six Marines from H.M.S. Lord Warden led the way with arms reversed, followed by the band of the 71st Highlanders, who played the "Maltese Funeral March," Beethoven's "Funeral March," and the "Dead March" in Saul: and the pipers of the 71st Regiment, who played "The Flowers of the Forest." Then came a gun-carriage from Leith Fort, drawn by six horses, on which was placed the coffin, covered by the Union Jack. Behind the coffin walked the mourners, sixty seamen from her Majesty's ship Lord Warden, detachments of twenty men each from the Royal Artillery, the 21st Hussars, and the 71st Regiment, the staff and regimental officers, and the Lord Provost in his carriage. On arrival at the cemetery the coffin was taken off the gun-carriage and carried shoulder high to the grave by six seamen. After prayer by the Rev. P. Beaton, Chaplain to the Forces, three volleys were fired over the grave. The remains were inclosed in an oak coffin, and the inscription on the plate was as follows:—"John Irving, Lieutenant R.N. Born 1815; died 18th—1849." The chief mourners were Captain Lindsay, R.N., of the Lord Warden, and Major-General Irving, R.A., C.B., brother of the deceased; the pall-bearers were Lieutenants Johnson, Field, Monteith, Reid, and Ede, of the Lord Warden. Among others present were Major-General Hope, Commanding the Forces in Scotland, Admiral Dunlop, Admiral Fellowes, and Colonel Preston. Lieutenant Irving was a son of the late Mr. John Irving, Writer to the Signet, Edinburgh, and a nephew of the late Mr. Alexander Irving (Lord Newton), a Scotch Judge.

Last Sunday was the day appointed for the simultaneous collection in the various places of worship in Liverpool and the neighbourhood on behalf of the local medical charities. The Bishop (Dr. Ryle) preached at the cathedral church of St. Peter in the morning and at Christ Church, Waterloo, in the evening. So far as reported, the collections realised £2871, against £2819 from the same churches and chapels last year. These collections form but a small part of the total amount raised. The largest individual collection reported was at the Unitarian Church, Renshaw-street where £549 was contributed.

WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER
THE ADMIRATION OF THE WORLD. Mrs. S. A. Allen's World's Hair Restorer is perfection for its wonderful life-giving properties to faded or falling hair, and quickly changing grey or white hair to its natural youthful colour and beauty. It is not a dye. It requires only a few applications to restore gray hair to its youthful colour and lustrous beauty, and induce luxuriant growth, and its occasional use is all that is needed to preserve it in its highest perfection and beauty. Dandruff is quickly and permanently removed. Sold by all Chemists and Perfumers.

FLORILINE. For the Teeth and Breath. Is the best Liquid Dentifrice in the world; it thoroughly cleanses partially-decayed teeth from all parasites or living "animalculæ," leaving them pearly white, imparting a delightful fragrance to the breath. "The Fragrant Florilline removes tartarous adhesions and colours arising from a foul stomach or tobacco smoke, being partly composed of honey, soda, and extracts of sweet herbs and plants. It is perfectly harmless, and delicious as sherry." Sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, at 2s. 6d. per Bottle.

VALUABLE DISCOVERY for the HAIR. If your hair is turning grey, or white, or falling off, use "The Mexican Hair Renewer," for it will positively restore in every case grey or White Hair to its original colour, without leaving the disagreeable smell of most "Restorers." It makes the hair luxuriantly beautiful, as well as promoting the growth of the hair on bald spots where the glands are not decayed. "The Mexican Hair Renewer" is sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, at 3s. 6d. per Bottle.

PETER ROBINSON,

103 to 108, OXFORD-STREET.

"THE LADIES' GAZETTE OF FASHION" for October, 1880, says:—

in Paris—that City of the fashionable—is enough to assure it a measure of success, even on its own intrinsic merits of colour, fineness, lightness, and excellent wearing qualities to

"LOUIS." manufacturers can attempt to stamp it with their own name on every yard, for, having once made a trial of it, we shall not desire to become the purchasers of any other, and there are so many new kinds in the market that there is plenty of competition. Many ladies have adopted the

in place of real velvet, for evening wear, and the list of colours in which it is manufactured is so long that every purchaser can suit her own complexion.

"LOUIS." Ladies are respectfully informed that on and after this date all Louis Velveteen, both Black and the New Autumn and Winter Colours, have stamped on the back plain instructions for removing all creases, folding-marks, &c., made in conveyance by rail, post, or other causes.

WHOLESALE AGENTS,

"LOUIS." J. H. FULLER, 32, Watling-street, London, E.C.

LIGHT-BROWN
COD-LIVER OIL.
THE PUREST. THE MOST EFFICACIOUS.
THE MOST PALATABLE. THE MOST DIGESTIBLE.
Proved by thirty years' medical experience to be
THE ONLY COD-LIVER OIL
which produces the full curative effects in
CONSUMPTION AND DISEASES OF THE CHEST, THROAT AFFECTIONS, GENERAL DEBILITY, AND WASTING DISEASES OF CHILDREN.

SELECT MEDICAL OPINIONS.
SIR G. DUNCAN GIBB, Bart., M.D.,
Physician to the Westminster Hospital.
"The value of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL as a therapeutic agent in a number of diseases, chiefly of an exhaustive character, has been admitted by the world of medicine; but, in addition, I have found it a remedy of great power in the treatment of many Affections of the Throat and Larynx, especially in Consumption of the latter, where it will sustain life when everything else fails."

DR. SINCLAIR COGHILL,
Physician Royal National Hospital for Consumption, Ventnor.
"I have convinced myself that in Tubercular and the various forms of Strumous Disease, Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL possesses greater therapeutic efficacy than any other Cod-Liver Oil with which I am acquainted. It was especially noted, in a large number of cases in which the patients protected they had never been able to retain or digest other Cod-Liver Oil, that Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL was not only tolerated, but taken readily, and with marked benefit."

DR. HUNTER SEMPLE,
Physician Hospital for Diseases of the Throat and Chest.
"I have long been aware of the great reputation enjoyed by the LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL introduced into medical practice by Dr. DE JONGH, and have recommended it with the utmost confidence. I have no hesitation in stating my opinion, that it possesses all the qualities of a good and efficient medicine. Its taste is by no means disagreeable, and might even be called pleasant. I have found Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL very useful in cases of Chronic Cough, and especially in Laryngeal Disease complicated with Consumption."

JOSEPH J. POPE, Esq., M.R.C.S.,
Late Staff Surg., Army, Prof. of Hygiene, Birkbeck Institution.
"I found during my Indian experience that the worth and character of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL remained unchanged by tropical heat or foreign climate, and it was, from its uniformity of character, particularly adapted for long-continued administration. The value of 'hydro-carbons' in all debilitated states of the system is now becoming thoroughly recognised; and it is, without doubt, from the animal oils and fats, rather than from their vegetable substitutes, that we may hope to derive the surest benefit. The Oil of Dr. DE JONGH places in everyone's reach a reliable and valuable remedy, one that cannot be too widely recognised."

DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL is sold ONLY in capsuled IMPERIAL Half-Pints, 2s. 6d.; Pints, 4s. 9d.; Quarts, 9s.; by all respectable Chemists and Druggists throughout the World.

CHLORODYNE.
DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
COUGHS, ASTHMA,
COLDS, BRONCHITIS, &c.
CHLORODYNE.
This wonderful remedy was discovered by Dr. J. Collis Browne, and the word Chlorodyne coined by him expressly to designate it. There never has been a remedy so vastly beneficial to suffering humanity, and it is a subject of deep concern to the public that they should not be imposed upon by having imitations pressed upon them on account of cheapness and as being the same thing. Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne is a totally distinct thing from the spurious compounds called Chlorodyne, the use of which only ends in disappointment and failure.
DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. Page Wood stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. Collis Browne was undoubtedly the inventor of Chlorodyne; that the whole story of the defendant was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See "Times," July 13, 1864.
DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages pain of every kind, affords a calm and refreshing sleep without headache, and invigorates the nervous system when exhausted.
DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE is the GREAT SPECIFIC for CHOLERA,
DYSENTERY, DIARRHŒA.
Earl Russell communicated to the College of Physicians that he had received a despatch from her Majesty's Consul at Manilla to the effect that cholera had been raging fearfully, and that the only remedy of any service was Chlorodyne.—See "Lancet," Dec. 31, 1864.
The General Board of Health, London, reports that it acts as a charm. One dose generally sufficient.
Dr. Gibbon, Army Medical Staff Calcutta, states:—"Two doses completely cured me of diarrhœa."
DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE
rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC,
PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.
DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE
is the true palliative in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER,
TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.
From Dr. R. J. Boulton and Co., Hornsea.
"We have made pretty extensive use of Chlorodyne in our practice lately, and look upon it as an excellent direct sedative and anti-spasmodic. It seems to allay pain and irritation in whatever organ, and from whatever cause. It induces a feeling of comfort and quietude not obtainable by any other remedy, and it seems to possess this great advantage over all other sedatives, that it leaves no unpleasant after effects."
IMPORTANT CAUTION.
The immense sale of this remedy has given rise to many unscrupulous imitations.

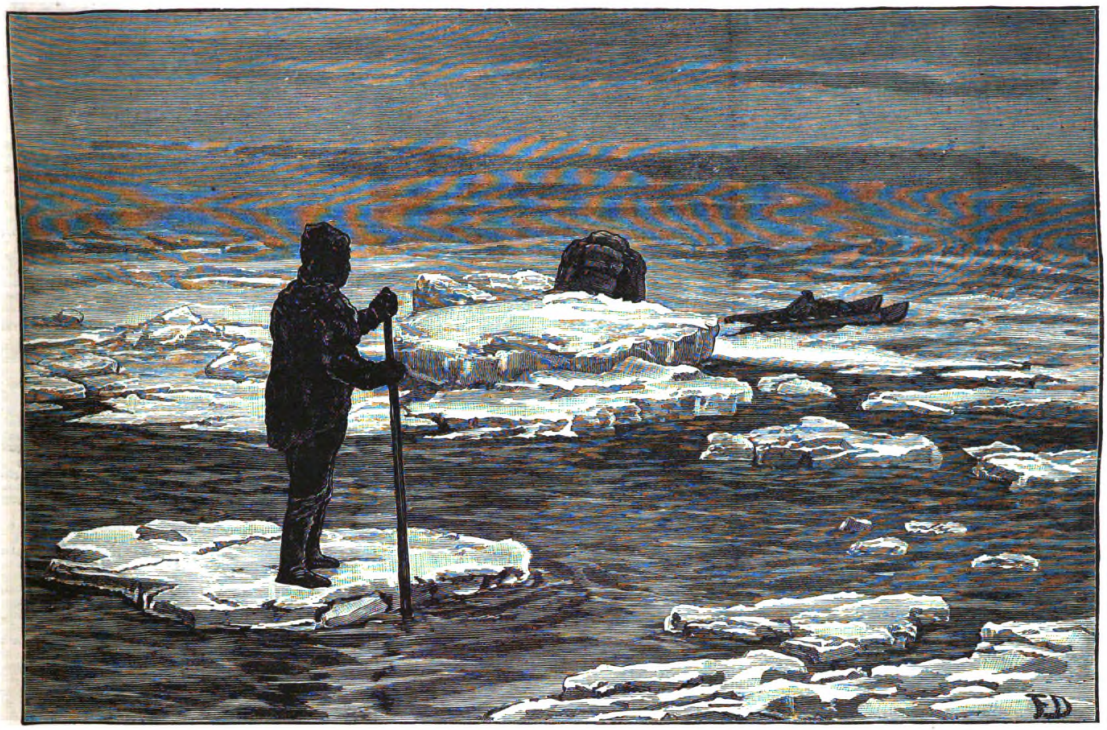
THE AMERICAN FRANKLIN SEARCH EXPEDITION.

FROM SKETCHES BY MR. H. W. KLUTSCHAK.



ICE BREAKING UP, JULY 24, 1879.

DOWN HILL, APRIL 15, 1879.

THE AMERICAN FRANKLIN SEARCH EXPEDITION.

Some additional Illustrations of this arduous journey and sojourn of an exploring party in the Arctic Regions, from the Sketches of Mr. H. W. Klutschak, of Prague, who was one of the party, are engraved for the present Number of our Journal. The expedition, fitted out by the New York Geographical Society, left that place in the summer of 1878, and returned home at the end of last summer. Its overland sledge travelling, from the northern shore of Hudson's Bay to Simpson's Strait, and across that strait to King William's Land, with the long sojourn in that desolate country, occupied eleven months, including the return journey to Hudson's Bay. The party consisted of Lieutenant Frederick Schwatka, an officer of the United States army, who was in command; Mr. Gilder, correspondent of the New York Herald; Mr. Klutschak, an artist; Mr. Frank Melms, of Wisconsin; and Joe Ebierling, an experienced Arctic traveller, assisted by the Netchillik and other tribes of Esquimaux.

We have already narrated the course and the principal events of this remarkable expedition; and we have published, in two preceding weeks' papers, some of the Illustrations with which Mr. Klutschak has furnished us, and which were further explained by the aid of his journal, together with that of Mr. Gilder. The subject of our two-page Engraving in this week's supplement is the scene at midnight on June 1, 1879, at the huts of the Netchillik tribe, on the shore of Simpson's Strait, in latitude 68 deg. 7 min. N., and longitude 96 deg. W., near one of the points at which, according to Esquimaux report, some of Sir John Franklin's companions perished of hunger in 1848. The evidence of several men and women of the Netchilliks, being carefully taken down through the interpreter, Mr. Frank Melms, has recently been published in the New York and London daily papers; it is also preserved in Mr. Klutschak's private journal. The phenomenon of "the Midnight Sun," which is shown in this Sketch of June 1, 1879, has often been observed and described in the north parts of Europe and of America. Two summer views in the Arctic Region, one taken on Aug. 29, 1878, at North Cairn, near the head-quarters of this expedition, and the other in King William's Land during the summer of the next year, are presented by us in this week's publication.

An incident of sledge-travelling, on April 15, 1879, when descending the hill ranges that intervene on the route from Hudson's Bay across the dreary desert to the more northerly Arctic Archipelago, furnishes the subject of another characteristic sketch by Mr. Klutschak. One of the laden sledges had already reached the bottom of the steep and snow-covered incline, though not without some danger of running over and killing the team of Esquimaux dogs. These poor animals, completely exhausted, immediately threw themselves down and enjoyed their brief repose, while the men in charge waited for the other two sledges to follow them. But, as the second one got about halfway, the terrified dogs broke their traces and got loose, in doing which they nearly overturned the sledge at the top of an irresistible slide; and so it rushed down the slope by its own momentum, with two men clinging to it, and trying to save it from utter wreck. But a few hours' labour sufficed to put all to rights for continuing the day's journey. The breaking up of the ice so late in the season as July 24 of that year, near Erebus and Terror Bay, on the west coast of King William's Land, where Lieutenant Schwatka's party built a hut and established a temporary dépôt, is shown in another Illustration. We also give a view of the scene at the removal of their camp from Sharp's River, Big Bend, in the Hayes River territory, on May 20 of the same year, this place being considerably south of Simpson's Strait, and on the mainland of North America, in the peninsula separating Hudson's Bay from the inner waters of the Arctic Region.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

DIFFUSION OF GASES—CHEMICAL DECOMPOSITION—ELECTROLYSIS.

Professor Dewar, M.A., F.R.S., in his fifth lecture on Atoms, given on the 6th inst., resumed his illustrations of the liquefaction of gases. Some carbonic acid gas pressed into the form of ice did not by evaporation freeze the water into which it was put, the evolved gas preventing mutual contact; but a mass of mercury was frozen by the ice, and shown to possess the ordinary metallic properties, when contact was effected by means of ether, which absorbed the gas. Some liquefied nitrous oxide gas was exhibited, and its boiling point stated to be 150 degrees below zero. The incessant internal motions of the atoms of gases resemble bombardment; and the hypothetical balls, varying in size and velocity, were illustrated by an ingenious model constructed by Mr. Cottrell. To these movements were attributed the diffusion of gases, not only through ordinary porous bodies, but even through those possessing great density. The passage of hydrogen gas through white-hot platinum was demonstrated; and this, the lightest and most energetic of all gases, was shown to descend through a membrane and combine with the heavier air beneath it, contrary to the law of gravitation. The action of heat in effecting chemical decomposition was next exhibited. The oxides of iodine were by heat separated into crystalline iodine and oxygen gas; and magnesia and oxygen gas were produced by the brilliant combustion of the metal magnesium. The absorption of gases by metals was illustrated, and intensely hot melted silver was shown to absorb oxygen, and to expel it from beautiful little craters when the temperature was reduced. The production of the electric current was next explained; and its chemical action, termed electrolysis, strikingly exhibited. By a double continuous operation, water was decomposed into its elements, oxygen and hydrogen gases, and recomposed from them simultaneously. By the same electric agency, the singular metal potassium and oxygen were simultaneously obtained from intensely heated potash. The occlusion of hydrogen by heated palladium, thus forming a species of amalgam, was also noticed, and it was stated that chemists now generally consider hydrogen to be the vapour of a hypothetical metal termed hydrogenium.

ALLOTROPISM—SPECTRUM ANALYSIS—VORTEX RINGS.

Professor Dewar, in his sixth and concluding lecture, given on Saturday last, resumed his illustrations of the results of the molecular movements of gases by showing that the temperature of charcoal may be raised or lowered by the absorption of different gases; and also, that the volume of mercury is much enlarged, and the metal made plastic like butter, by the absorption of hydrogen. After stating that the varied phenomena of sound, heat, and light are attributable to the varied degrees of mobility of the atoms of bodies, he exhibited the effects of the enormous heat attainable by means of the carbon crucibles placed in the glowing arc of the Voltaic battery, whereby not only most refractory bodies are fused and very remarkable decompositions of complex bodies effected, but also very great changes are produced in the condition of elementary bodies. By this agency the Professor transformed a piece of charcoal into graphite (plumbago or black lead), and also exhibited the successive transformations of sulphur first into a yellow and next into a gorgeous crimson liquid, which at a very high temperature boiled, producing a transparent vapour,—the singular change is termed "allotropism." Detailed explanations were then given of the method of ascertaining the chemical constituents of a compound body by means of its spectrum—the rainbow-like arrangement of colours obtained by projecting the light of its flame through prisms upon a screen. Every element has its own peculiar spectrum, with red, blue, or green characteristic bands; and so delicate is this method of analysis, that by its means the presence of less than the ten-thousandth of a grain of gold, silver, or iron in a compound may be readily demonstrated; and by its agency the constituents of the sun and other heavenly bodies have been conclusively demonstrated. Among the marvellous changes effected by heat, the formation of glass, really a salt of silicon, was specially noticed. After various illustrations, the Professor said that his chief object had been to lead the minds of his auditors by his experiments to imagine the existence of the enormous amount of invisible machinery perpetually in action, and possessing "the stability of motion;" and, finally, by way of giving a hypothetical representation of this atomic motion, he exhibited the movements of the beautiful vortex rings—produced, first, in water in a tube into which he dropped a little coloured water, and then by projecting rings of smoke into the air. These rings were described as possessing three kinds of motion—direct, rotatory, and vibratory.

On Friday next, Jan. 21, Warren De La Rue, Esq., D.C.L., F.R.S., Sec. R.I., will give a discourse on the Phenomena of the Electric Discharge with 14,400 Chloride of Silver Cells.

In consequence of the lecture theatre being exclusively occupied with the preparations for Mr. De La Rue's discourse, the morning lectures are postponed for a week.

Professor Schafer's course of eleven lectures on the Blood will begin on the 25th inst. instead of the 18th; Mr. Francis Hueffer's course of four lectures on the Troubadours will begin on the 27th inst. instead of the 20th; and Professor Sidney Colvin's course of four lectures on the Amazons will begin on the 29th inst. instead of the 22nd.

FINE ARTS.

OLD MASTERS AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

Whatever may be thought of the manner in which the Royal Academicians appropriate the walls of Burlington House during the months of early summer—whether primarily and unduly in their own interest or not—there can be no question that the way in which they perform the arduous task they have undertaken of presenting in the winter months representative collections of works by Old Masters and deceased British Artists is most praiseworthy, and an invaluable boon to the public. The committee for the present year has been exceptionally fortunate. We have seen, perhaps, choicer works by the early schools of Italy and the North, in Gallery IV. (customarily appropriated to those early schools), but we do not remember so splendid an array of masterpieces in the remaining rooms. This result is mainly due to the generous loan of a large proportion of the famous collections of Lord Cowper, from Panshanger, and Mr. Henry Hope, from Deepdene. The Cowper collection owes its origin to the taste of the ancestor of the present Earl while Ambassador at Florence, towards the close of the eighteenth century, and from this happy circumstance its character is more elevated, and it contains a larger number of Italian masterpieces than any other formed at the same period. To the Hope collection attaches the almost unique interest that the greater part of the Dutch cabinet works, of which it mainly consists, were painted for the Hope family when resident in Amsterdam, or were purchased by them about the same time. The loans from the galleries of Lords Carnarvon, Carysfort, and Strafford will also be regarded with special interest as they are little known, and inedited by Waagen or others. The liberal contributions of Sir William N. Addy and Mr. Charles Butler, and the gleanings from many other collections likewise, frequently comprise very fine or instructive examples.

Gallery I., as usual, is chiefly occupied by pictures of our own deceased painters. The Hope collection (with the exception of one work) has been judiciously grouped together in Gallery II., and the consummate finish and technical mastery of these comparatively miniature gems will suffice to exhaust the visitor's capacity of sight and admiration in at least one long visit. After the strain upon attention these compel, it is with a sense of relief that one passes into the Great Room, or Gallery III., where are appropriately ranged the great works, decorative, religious, historical, or masterpieces of portraiture of the Italians, and of that Flemish Italian, Vandyke. Art is here liberated to its widest amplitude, and here takes its highest flight; nor can it be without a glow of national pride that we find how well our own Reynolds, and Gainsborough, and Romney, ay, and even Turner and Wilkie, hold their own in this princely company. The query may, however, obtrude as to how it is that the elevated dignity and sense of beauty, the liberal richness, and large mastery here displayed, seems to belong to some extinct race; how it is that they so rarely appear in our contemporary exhibitions. The contents of Gallery IV. we have already indicated; and, besides all this, there is, in Gallery V., an almost exhaustive gathering of drawings, from the London University and private owners, of that most classical, poetical, and fertile of designers, the great sculptor, John Flaxman.

As the study of this priceless aggregation of art-treasures, and even the mere cursory examination to which our limits restrict us, can, for obvious reasons, be pursued most profitably by adopting an approximate chronological sequence, we commence our survey with Gallery IV. Here, then, besides early work of that Sienese school to which the Florentine, Vasari, did but scant justice, we find Art emerging at a bound from Byzantine stiffness and tradition in a group of three holy women and St. John the Baptist (223), and Herodias receiving the head of the same saint (226), by Giotto, both from the collection formed by Roscoe, the historian (much in advance of the taste of his day), and which he gave to the Liverpool Royal Institution. These pieces of a fresco were taken from the Carmine, the year before the fire that spared only the memorable paintings of the Brancacci chapel; yet even in these discoloured fragments we see Giotto's earnestness and truth of expression, which, with his inventive originality, explain the sympathy and eulogia of his friend Dante, and, more than the relatively great advance the painter made in the rendering of nature, commend him to our respect. The beautiful and celebrated panel by his follower Simone Memmi, from the same institution, representing the Virgin and St. Joseph remonstrating with their youthful son on his return from the Temple (225), was praised by the painter's contemporary, Petrarch, and later by Vasari.

There is a curious Pietà (188) by Andrea Mantegna (signed), showing the dead body of Christ placed on a ruined marble throne with Isaiah and St. Jerome on either side, ruins and a hilly landscape in the background. This picture affords an index to the character of the early Lombard school, for it must be a very youthful production of Mantegna, seeing that the influence of the newly discovered antique remains, or the Renaissance (which so much elevated the master's later style), is little, if at all, apparent. In common with other early efforts of the Northern Italians, its painfully elaborate attempt to copy nature, the meagreness of the forms, and the absence of all feeling for beauty, seem to establish an affinity to the works of the Transalpine painters of the same epoch—the result, partly perhaps, of intercommunication between them. This may be verified by reference to the large, well-known Lucas Van Leyden, "The Adoration of the Magi" (196), from Buckingham Palace; or, better still, the two very intricate and laboriously wrought-out compositions, "Pilate Washing his Hands" (228), and "The Deposition" (231), typical examples of that rare master Michael Wolgemuth, also from the Liverpool Institution. Placed between these, thus enabling us to see at a glance how mistaken is the ascription, is another "Deposition," attributed to Albert Dürer, the illustrious pupil of Wolgemuth. Although a miracle of minute toil—see the drops of blood and the tears on Christ's cheek—the figures are even uglier than those of Wolgemuth, and it is otherwise inferior to his work; much less that of his pupil: it belongs probably to the Cologne school.

The approximation between the schools of North Italy and Switzerland, Germany and the Netherlands, to which we have alluded, renders it difficult to determine the authorship of works all equally marked by that desire to realise nature in details which actuated all the painters of the period; it is particularly difficult in the case of portraits, and especially if they are under lifesize. Three such portraits, more or less noteworthy, are here. Two of them are attributed to Francesco Francia—why, we cannot say—and one (192) is described as a portrait of the painter himself—perhaps for no other reason than that the person represented holds a ring, Francia having been, like several of his contemporaries, a goldsmith! The other, and vastly superior portrait (200), certainly cannot be by one and the same painter; it approaches in colour (though a little drier) and strength of characterisation to Bellini. The third of these portraits, an exquisite oil miniature, is attributed to Holbein; but the cold tone of the carnations (resembling Clouet in this though hardly in other respects) forbids the ascription. We have, however (sent by Mrs. Henry Huth), a very genuine, though retouched, and remarkable Holbein, in his fullest, deepest tones of colouring, and distinguished by his intense truth of character and expression, in the bust lifesize, or nearly so, of Holbein's unfortunate patron, Sir Thomas More (194) in his black cap, fur-trimmed coat and collar of SS, as Speaker, which is very likely the first portrait painted by Holbein in England.

Returning to the North Italian schools—Mr. Richmond, R.A., sends a "Virgin and Child and Four Saints" (222) of the Muriano school, which, showing, as it does, the early love of the Venetian school for rich sumptuous colouring, affords as instructive an indication of the rise of that school as the Mantegna before mentioned does of that of Lombardy. There is a very interesting picture (206), which we regret our space will not permit us more fully to describe, representing the infamous Malatesta di Rimini and his mistress seated in a landscape, receiving the Pope's Legate, which is ascribed to Giorgione; and the colouring in parts, the figure of the Legate, the romantic sentiment and landscape, might almost permit us to admit the possibility, this being a careful early work of the great Venetian; there, however, appears to be some difficulty as to the probable date of the incident.

So far as we have proceeded, we have seen the painters engaged in one long struggle to learn how to render the facts of nature with minute veracity. And, despite partial failure, their honesty is so palpable, their motives so sincere, and sentiment so pure that we often feel the result to be more sympathetic than many too self-conscious displays of ripe mastery. Our modern mediævalists, however, it we may use a Hibernicism, imagine that in reproducing the imperfections, they are also working in the spirit of those early devotees, forgetting that the same honest, earnest effort to excel would, could those pioneers of art change places with their imitators, impel them not backwards, but forwards, in order to outdo the too easy triumphs of contemporaries and rivals.

Resuming our survey, we go back a little to see the artists of central Italy taking a new initiative. Assured of the means of expression, they begin to select the beautiful and the generic in nature; deeper religious fervour finds a freer expression; and they give rein to their imagination. The immediate precursors and the associates of Raphael, the "Divine" master himself, with Leonardo da Vinci and Michael Angelo, mark the course and culmination of Art to its very zenith. The great name of Masaccio suggests itself as one of the prime movers to this consummation; for did not Raphael form his style on and borrow one of his noblest figures from the frescoes in the Brancacci chapel? We have here, however, only one small head questionably attributed to Masaccio, and still more questionably described as a portrait of himself (186); it does not resemble the portrait of the painter by himself in the National Gallery, a portrait authenticated, if we remember rightly, by one of the master's own frescoes. Nor have we any work of Raphael's master, Perugino; and there is little specially characteristic to identify the portrait numbered 197 as of the "school of Perugino." But there is a small "Virgin and Child" (184), an ornamental composition by Pinturicchio, whom Raphael assisted at Siena, and from whom, we think (though this has hardly been recognised), he derived some of his taste in ornamentation. And there is a beautiful and pathetic "Holy Family" (207), by Fra Bartolommeo, the grace of lines in which, Dr. Waagen thinks, indicate friendly association with Raphael, while the sfumato of the modelling may be traced to Leonardo.

Thus we reach Lord Cowper's two celebrated, though small, Raphaels, both representing the "Virgin and Child:" one (148) an early Florentine work, still strongly marked with the Peruginesque characteristics; the other (152) still retaining much convention in type, but marked by little of the austere feeling that characterised his Florentine manner—it is dated 1508, at the end of which year Raphael commenced his great works at Rome. Some disappointment may possibly be felt at one if not both pictures; but if we fully realise exactly what had been done in art hitherto, it will appear that they clearly indicate the advent of a new and greater master. In the first we have the serene holiness which seems to have pervaded that simple family life in Umbria, and no less, it would seem, his master's studio (profligate though he was said to be), combined with the sweetest naturalness. How lovingly the child throws both arms round the mother's neck; how ineffably tender is the smile on her lips! The painting is so thin that it does not conceal the outlines, which are departed from in several places; and this transparency is supposed to be due to the new friendship Raphael had formed with the good frate Bartolommeo. The other picture is more masterly technically, the limbs are better rounded, the painting is more solid, the style is larger, more fitted for the great frescoes he is about to undertake. But the conception is decidedly less reverential; the child's smile approaches a laugh, he clutches not too tenderly his mother's robe, the Virgin herself is more of the earth; the master is already thinking more consciously ofi his craft, and less of his plous duty.

The Council of the Institute of Art have decided to open their Exhibition to the public free of charge during the remainder of this month.

Mr. Comyns Carr presided at the presentation of prizes on Wednesday evening to the students of the West London School of Art, Great Titchfield-street.

Mr. George G. Adams, F.S.A., has been commissioned to design the medal to be struck commemorative of the King of the Hellenes' recent visit to the City of London. Several artists, English, French, and Belgian, competed.

In answer to inquiry the director of the German Archæological Institute in Athens has telegraphed that the statue recently discovered of Athena, supposed to be a masterpiece of Phidias, is in fact a Roman copy of the Parthenon figure, about a twelfth of the size of the original.

At University College yesterday week Mr. C. T. Newton, C.B., Professor of Archæology, gave the opening lecture of the second term. This portion of his course on Greek Art embraces five lectures upon the age of Pericles. In this lecture Mr. Newton discussed the style and works of three celebrated sculptors, Pythagoras, Myron, and Polykleitos.

South London has now a permanent free library and art-gallery, the rooms of the Working Men's College being open free every day, including Sunday. The library is well supplied with newspapers, reviews, magazines, &c., and the books can be borrowed for home use. The art-gallery contains 150 works lent by the owners, and the council will be glad to receive other works on loan. There are free lectures every Tuesday evening at 8.30. The institution is dependent on voluntary subscriptions, and has been for thirteen years mainly supported by the council.

The fourth and concluding part of the "Grammar of Japanese Ornament and Design," by Mr. T. W. Cutler, architect, has been issued to subscribers by the publisher, Mr. B. T. Batsford, of High Holborn. The entire work consists of sixty-five plates, representing a much larger number of decorative designs and devices, copied from Japanese paintings, engravings, china, pottery, embroidery, bronzes, and lacquer. The subjects of some of these designs are of conventional ornament, but others represent natural objects, birds, fishes, insects, plants, and flowers, of great variety and beauty. A few of the plates are printed in colours or tints, or in gilding, to resemble the original brush-work; others are in black and white. This work, accompanied by an instructive essay, is calculated to be very useful to those employed in decorative art. A handsome ornamental binding, of appropriate design, is made to contain the four parts.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

ITALY.

King Humbert and Queen Margherita went yesterday week to Monreale, where their Majesties received a most enthusiastic welcome. On Monday the King and Queen paid a visit to Palermo, paying particular attention to its educational and other institutions, and in the evening there was a torchlight procession, followed by a ball on a grand scale.

A mission from the Bey of Tunis was on Monday received by the King, the deputation desiring to present the respects of the Bey to his Majesty on the occasion of his visit to a part of his dominions which was so near to Tunis.

Sunday being the anniversary of the death of King Victor Emmanuel, numerous deputations representing public bodies and societies of various kinds went in procession to the Pantheon to present garlands of immortelles in token of respect for the memory of the late King. The day was also observed in several provincial towns, and notably in Palermo.

The death of Senator Arrivabene is announced.

PORTUGAL.

The King has signed decrees creating fifteen new peers.

The Brazilian Deputy, Senhor Joaquin Nabuco, who is the leader of the slavery abolition party in Brazil, visited the Chamber of Deputies on Sunday. Several of the members, observing that he was present, took occasion to speak in flattering terms of the Empire of Brazil and of Senhor Nabuco himself. The latter was then invited by acclamation to take his seat on the floor of the house.

GERMANY.

The marriage of Prince William of Prussia is to take place on the 26th of next month. The wedding festivities at Court are to close on March 1, Shrove Tuesday, when a quadrille of fifty couples, in the costume of Frederick William I., is to be danced, the gentlemen representing the stalwart Grenadiers of the soldier King, and being chosen for their great stature.

Prince Bismarck arrived at Berlin last Saturday afternoon from Friedrichsruhe, and was received by the Emperor on Monday.

The Prussian Parliament resumed their sittings on Saturday, after the recess.

Herr Strassmann, a Jew, has been re-elected President of the Berlin Municipal Council by 97 votes out of a total of 120. Professor Virchow was chosen Vice-President, 73 votes being recorded in his favour.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

It is officially announced that, in conformity with the wish of the King and Queen of the Belgians, the marriage of the Austrian Crown Prince to the Princess Stéphanie, originally fixed for Feb. 9, has been postponed to a later date. The reason assigned for the delay is that the excessively cold weather usual in Vienna in the middle of February is likely to affect very injuriously the health of the Queen of the Belgians and the Princess.

The Government have informed the Austro-Hungarian Consul-General in Egypt that the Crown Prince Rudolph will leave Vienna early next month on a visit to Egypt.

TURKEY AND GREECE

Ghazi Osman Pasha has been appointed Minister of War; replacing Hussein Husni Pasha; and Hobart Pasha has been raised to the rank of Marshal.

M. de Moüy, the French Minister at Athens, had an interview with the Premier on Monday, and again urged on him the desire of France that Greece should accept the arbitration proposal. M. Coumoundouros replied that it was impossible to comply with M. de Moüy's representations before being made acquainted with the basis of the proposals to be submitted to the Court of Arbitration and with the guarantees to be given for the execution of the ultimate award. A Royal decree relating to the composition of the active army has been signed and communicated to the Greek Chamber. In accordance with the law of organisation, the strength of the army will be increased by eleven battalions, and the regiment of artillery will be dividedinto five battalions.

AMERICA.

Congress was re-convened on the 5th inst. The House resumed the Supply Bills, the Funding Bill being temporarily postponed, because of the illness of Mr. Fernando Wood, the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. The House passed the Army Appropriation Bill. In the Senate, Mr Kernan introduced a bill directing Mr. Sherman, the Secretary of the Treasury, to restrict the coinage of silver dollars to the extent of the demand, and repealing the statutory obligation upon the Treasury to purchase silver bullion. On the 7th inst. a warm debate took place in the Assembly on a resolution calling Mr. Evart's attention to the alleged fictitious Canadian fishery statistics, and grave charges were brought against the agents of the British Government, who were declared to have designedly brought before the Halifax Commission both fraudulent testimony and altered documents. A bill has been introduced in the Senate placing General Grant on the retired list of the Army with the full rank and pay of General. On Tuesday the House of Representatives passed the Indian Appropriation Bill.

Mr. Evarts, Secretary of State, on the 5th inst. opened the International Sanitary Conference. After electing Mr. Hay, Assistant-Secretary of State, as president, the Conference adjourned for a week.

Mr. Nathan Goff, jun., of West Virginia, has been nominated Secretary to the Navy.

The Governor of North Carolina, in his message to the State Legislature, eulogises the blacks, and declares it to be the duty of the whites to treat them with justice.

Inwood Hall has been finally adopted by the Commission of the World's Fair at New York as the site of the Exhibition building.

CANADA.

The total revenue on account of the Consolidated Fund of the Dominion for the year 1879-80 amounted to 23,307,406 dols. and the expenditure to 24,850,634 dols. The total debt up to the end of last June was 199,125,323 dols., against 183,974,753 dols. in 1879.

The Toronto Globe publishes intelligence from Ottawa stating that a syndicate of well-known capitalists and others has been formed for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, on terms eminently more favourable to the Dominion than those now awaiting ratification by the Canadian Parliament.

Mr. Edward Blake, the leader of the Opposition in the Dominion House of Commons, on 6th inst. addressed a crowded meeting at Montreal, and spoke for four hours against the contract entered into by the Government for the construction of the Pacific Railway. The meeting adopted a resolution declaring that the people should pass judgment on the scheme before Parliament ratified the bargain.

INDIA.

The Viceroy of India arrived at Calcutta on Tuesday, and proceeded to Government House. No ceremony was observed on his arrival, the arrangements being of a private character. His Excellency is very weak, but he has not suffered any relapse through the length of the journey.

Sir James Ferguson, the Governor of Bombay, is at present visiting the Bolan Pass.

AUSTRALIA.

The Revenue of New South Wales for the past year is returned at £4,912,000, showing an increase of £430,250 as compared with 1879; for the quarter ending Dec. 31 last, the revenue of Victoria amounted to £1,252,000, being an increase of £193,000; and the revenue returns of Queensland for the half year ending Dec. 31, 1880, show that the total receipts during that period amounted to £803,000, or an increase of £9000, compared with the last six months of 1879.

The Session of the Jersey States was opened on Monday. The first subject brought before the House was the Burials Act, which had been sent by the Government for registration. After some discussion, in which it was shown that no inconvenience would arise from its adoption, the House agreed to order registration, and thus give the Act the force of law in Jersey.

LIFE-BOAT SERVICES.

At a meeting of the Royal National Life-Boat Institution held on the 6th inst. rewards amounting to £223 were granted to the crews of different life-boats for services rendered during the gales of the past month, and £3320 was paid in respect of different life-boat establishments. Legacies to the amount of £900 were reported. The gold medal of the institution was presented to Lieutenant J. A. Torrens, Royal Scots Greys; the silver medal to Bombardier Smith, R.A.; Private Reilly, A.S.C.; Private Howard, 57th Regiment; and Dr. H. L. Cox, of the Army Medical Department; and the thanks of the Institution to Mr. B. Jackson, chief engineer of the War Department steamer Stanley. The silver medal of the institution was voted to Mr. Henry Smith, a Gloucester pilot, and £1 to his assistant for saving the owner of the yacht Foam, his son, and a boatman, when she was in a dangerous position near Cardiff, during a gale of wind and tremendous sea, on Aug. 7. Other rewards were granted to the crews of shore-boats for saving life from wrecks on our coast. New life-boats have been forwarded to Hastings and Kimeridge (Isle of Purbeck).

The Indian Chief, on her way from Middlesborough to Japan, struck upon the Long Sands, near the entrance to the Thames, one night last week, and became a total wreck. During the night the master, the second mate, and sixteen of the crew were washed off and drowned. The Ramsgate life-boat succeeded in saving eleven of the crew as soon as daylight enabled the rescuers to discover the whereabouts of the wreck.

The annual meeting of the Committee of the Civil Service Life-Boat Fund was held on Monday. The fund was reported to be in an unprecedentedly prosperous state, the number of subscribers having increased from 3842 to 4979. The committee appeal to the service for further help, to enable them to endow a second life-boat during the year. The boats of the fund have, up to the present time, saved 128 lives and three vessels.

On Christmas Day the chancel of the parish church of St. Mary's, Maiden Newton, Dorset, was reopened, after restoration.

Lord Overstone has forwarded £100 to the National Society for promoting the education of the poor in the principles of the Established Church.

The heavy debt (about £2000) on the Church of All Saints', South Lambeth, was considerably reduced last week by the munificent gift of £100 from Mr. Foster, of Willey, who has before contributed largely to the erection of this church.

About £250 has been subscribed for the memorial stained-glass window proposed to be placed in the Church of St. Margaret, Westminster, in commemoration of William Caxton.

A new infant school connected with St. Mary's, the old parish church of Lambeth, was opened on Monday by the Archbishop of Canterbury. The schools, with schoolhouse attached, have cost about £2550.

Handsome new Church of England schools to accommodate 800 childrem which have been erected at a cost of £3000, defrayed by Miss Sidebottom, of Harewood Lodge, were opened near Glossop last Saturday by Bishop Kelly, coadjutor to the Bishop of Chester.

Lord Penzance on Saturday last made the order of deprivation in the case of the Rev. John B. De la Bere, upon whom sentence was recently passed. His Lordship also gave judgment in the case of the Rev. Richard Askew, suspending him for one year for drunkenness, and condemning him in costs.

The Bishop of Lichfield has issued a request that in future, when it is in contemplation to build new churches, or to provide new burial-grounds, the plans may be submitted to him before the work is begun, in order to obviate the possibility of difficulties as to consecration.

The Bishop Suffragan of Nottingham has bought from the Ecclesiastical Commissioners the house and grounds within the minster precinct at Southwell, formerly the palace of the Archbishops of York, with a view of presenting the property as an additional endowment for the new see of Southwell.

Ham church, next Sandwich, situate about one mile and a half from Betteshanger (to which parish it is united), was recently reopened, after a thorough restoration, from the designs of Mr. Joseph Clarke, the architect for the diocese. With the exception of two grants of £25 from the Incorporated and Diocesan Church Building Societies, the whole expense has been borne by Sir Walter James, the patron of the living, for the nave, and by the Rector, the Rev. J. Worthington Bliss, for the chancel. Four candelabra of beaten iron for the lighting of the church have been promised by Lady James; and a latten alms-dish of repousse work has been given by Mr. Walter James, M.P.

The tenantry on the Duke of Westminster's Eaton estates have received a circular to the effect that, although the Ground Game Act will not legally take effect until 1882, he is willing to consider it as being in operation from Feb. 2 next.

OBITUARY.

SIR W. C. SETON, BART.

Sir William Coote Seton, seventh Baronet, of Pitmedden, in the county of Aberdeen, J.P. and D.L., died on the 30th ult. at Portobello, near Edinburgh. He was born Dec. 19, 1808, the only son of Major James Seton (killed in the Peninsular War), by Frances, his wife, daughter of Captain George Coote, nephew of Sir Eyre Coote, and he succeeded to the baronetcy (conferred in 1683 on Sir Alexander Seton, a Lord of Justiciary) at the decease of his grandfather, Sir William Seton, in 1819. He was educated at the University of Edinburgh, and was admitted an advocate at the Scottish Bar in 1830. He married, Nov. 26, 1834, Eliza Henrietta, second daughter of Mr. Henry Lumsden, of Cushney, a director H.E.I.C., and widow of Captain John Wilson, H.E.I.C.S., and by her (who died April 24, 1873) leaves issue, of which the eldest son, now Sir James Lumsden Seton, eighth Baronet, of Pitmedden, late Captain 102nd Foot, was born in 1835. The Setons, a very ancient and historic family in Scotland, represented in the male line by Sir Bruce Maxwell Seton, eighth Baronet, of Abercorn, gave rise, in a junior branch, to the noble house of Gordon, the surname of which was in former times Seton. The Setons of Pitmedden are cadets of Seton of Meldrum. The heroic Colonel Alexander Seton, who perished so nobly in the wreck of the Birkenhead Feb. 26, 1852, was descended from George Seton, second son of the first Baronet of Pitmedden.

The deaths are also announced of—

Major-General Edward Tuite Dalton, C.S.I., a distinguished Indian officer, in his sixty-fifth year.

Charles Whyte, Inspector-General Army Hospitals, at Clifton, Bristol, on the 2nd inst., aged eighty-five.

Frederick George Norman Pochin, J.P., of Lysonby House, Melton Mowbray, only son of the late Mr. John Matthew Pochin (second son of Mr. George Pochin, of Barkby), by Elizabeth Constance, his wife, daughter of Alexander Adderley, R.N., on the 27th ult.

Major John Colpoys Bloomfield, of Redwood, in the county of Tipperary (High Sheriff of the county of Fermanagh in 1825), in his ninety-third year. He married Frances Arabella, daughter and coheir of Sir John Caldwell, Bart., of Castle Caldwell, in the county of Fermanagh.

Lieutenant-Colonel William Charles Drummond, formerly 10th (Prince of Wales's Own Royal) Hussars, on the 4th inst., at Portswood, Southampton, in his eighty-fifth year. He was second son of Mr. Andrew Berkeley Drummond, of Cadlands, by Lady Mary, his wife, daughter of John, second Earl of Egmont.

Emily Harriot, Dowager Lady Suffield, widow of Edward, third Lord Suffield, and youngest daughter of Evelyn Shirley, Esq., of Ettington Park, Warwickshire, and Lough Fea, in the county of Monaghan, on the 3rd inst., aged eighty-one, at Weymouth. She was the third Lord Suffield's second wife, and had six sons and one daughter, the eldest son being the present Lord Suffield.

The Rev. Charles Robert King Dallas, for twenty-one years Rector of Farncombe, Surrey, at St. Mary's Rectory, near Godalming, on the 1st inst., in his eighty-seventh year. Before entering the Church he was a military officer, served in the 32nd Regiment, and was wounded at Quatre Bras. He descended, through the Jamaica branch, from the family of Dallas, of St. Martin's, in the county of Ross.

Lady Charles Thynne, wife of Lord Charles Thynne, seventh son of the second Marquis of Bath, K.G., on the 5th inst., at 40, Redcliffe-gardens, in her sixty-fifth year. Her Ladyship was eldest daughter of the late Hon. and Right Rev. Richard Bagot, D.D., Bishop of Bath and Wells, by Lady Harriet, daughter of the fourth Earl of Jersey. Her marriage was on July 18, 1837, and its issue consists of two sons and one daughter, the present Countess of Kenmare.

Colonel Octavius Edward Rothney, C.B., C.S.I., of the Bengal Staff Corps, lately acting in command of the Lahore Division, on the 1st inst., at Tunbridge Wells, aged fifty-six. He entered the Army in 1841, and attained the rank of Brevet-Colonel in 1869. His services in India were several times mentioned in despatches. He was in the Sutlej campaign of 1845-6; took an active part in suppressing the Mutiny, and commanded the 4th Sikh Infantry at the siege of Delhi.

The Hon. Francis Stonor, suddenly, on the 10th inst., at 78, South Audley-street. Mr. Stonor was the second and eldest surviving son (his elder brother having died without issue in 1865) of Lord Camoys, by Frances, daughter of Mr. Peregrine Edward Towneley, and had just completed his fifty-second year. He was senior Clerk in the House of Lords, and married, on Sept. 25, 1855, Eliza (Bedchamber Woman to the Princess of Wales), youngest daughter of the late Sir Robert Peel, by whom he leaves, among other issue, Francis Robert, born Dec. 9, 1856, who now becomes immediate heir to the barony.

Mr. Osman Ricardo, of Bromesberrow Place, county Worcester, J.P. and D.L., formerly M.P. for Worcester, died on the 2nd inst. at his seat near Ledbury. He was born May 25, 1795, the eldest son of David Ricardo, M.P., the celebrated Writer on Political Economy; and received his education at the Charter House, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1816. He entered the House of Commons, in the Liberal interest, in 1847, and retired in 1865. He married, May 22, 1817, Harriett, youngest daughter of Mr. Robert Harvey Mallory, of Woodcote, Warwickshire.

Mr. I'Anson, the well-known Northern trainer, on the 10th inst., at Malton. Mr. I'Anson, who was in his seventy-first year, was brought up by the once well-known trainer James Croft, of Middleham. At eighteen years of age he was engaged by Lord Glasgow (then Lord Kilburne) to travel with Actæon and Purity to Scotland for the Caledonian Hunt Meeting. In 1829 he entered the establishment of Ramsay, of Burnton, remaining there for five years, and training a large number of good horses meanwhile. In 1844 Mr. I'Anson went to Mr. Merry, at Gullane, there training some well-known horses; and in 1849 he moved to Spring Cottage, Norton, and set up as a public trainer. Then commenced the remarkable series of successes which made his name famous throughout the sporting world. In the year 1865 he gave up training and bought the Highfield estate, not far from Spring Cottage, and here he set up as a breeder only. His success as a breeder were no less remarkable than as a trainer.

[By an accidental misplacement of type in last week's Obituary some particulars referring to Colonel Vaughan, of Courtfield, were erroneously added to the memoir of the Rev. W. Atkinson Clark.]

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

All communications relating to this department of the Paper should be addressed to the Editor, and have the word "Chess" written on the envelope.

S W E (Beccles).—The games are all very acceptable, and they shall all appear.

EAST MARDEN.—You cannot have set up the position correctly. The only amendment required is to remove the Black Bishop from Q square to K square.

C B (Isleworth).—The problem is pointless, and if it was not so there is no mate in three moves by the way you propose. After 1. B to K 6th, B to B 3rd; 2. B takes R, Black can play 2. Kt to K R 4th (ch), &c.

F O N H (Liverpool).—Both seem good, and they shall be carefully examined.

S G C (Hamberton).—The original position is not at hand to refer to, but we believe you have overlooked that, in reply to 10. P to Q R 4th (ch), Black can play 10. Kt takes P. In the game the Knight is "pinned" by the White Queen at K R 5th.

W P (Cape Town).—We are well pleased to learn that there is so much interest taken in the game in your locality. The solution of No. 1917 is correct.

VA. (U.S.).—Your solutions of Nos. 1919 and 1920 are correct. In No. 1918 you appear to have overlooked Black's defence to 1. Q to R 6th, 1. K to R 7th, after which there is no mate on the second move.

E H M (Grosmount).—You are right. P J (Broadmoor).—Solution of Mr. Taylor's problem arrived too late.

| WHITE. | BLACK. |
|---|---|
| 1. P to Q 3rd | P takes P* |
| 2. P to K 4th | B takes P |
| 3. R to Kt 6th | K takes P (dis. ch) |
| 4. Kt to Q 5th, double check and mate. | |

*If Black play 1. B to K 3rd, then follows 2. Kt to Q 5th. B takes Kt; 3. R to Kt 6th (ch). B interposes; 4. R takes B, mate. If 1. K takes P, then 2. Kt to Q 5th (ch), and mate next move. In the leading variation, if, instead of 2. B takes P, Black play 2. K takes P, White continues with 2. K takes Kt and 4. P to Q 5th, mate; and if 2 B to K 3rd, then 3. P to Q 5th (ch), and 4. P takes B, mate. The variations arising on Black's third move should present no difficulty to the student. The foregoing is the author's solution; but several correspondents point out that 1. K takes Kt and 1. K to R 7th are, either of them, equally effective.

The following Skirmish was crowded out of our Christmas-Day selection of brief and brilliant games; but, we venture to think, it is worthy of reproduction at any time of the year. It was played at Rome between Signor Tonetti and Signor Cassio, the former giving the odds of the Queen's Rook, and was first published in Nuova Rivista degli Scacchi of Leghorn some years ago. Like the games of Christmas week, this one calls for neither analysis nor note, except, perhaps, as regards White's sixteenth move, a remarkably fine coup, without which the sacrifice that follows would have been unsound.

The Chessplayers' Chronicle (W. Morgan, 23, Great Queen-street) appeared in its new form of a weekly journal of "indoor and outdoor amusements" on the 4th inst., and is, apparently, to be run on the same lines as its "monthly" predecessor. The games and problems are numbered progressively from December, and the most enthusiastic stickler for exclusive devotion to chess can hardly complain because something less than one page out of twelve is given up to cricket and pedestrianism. The games and problems are of the usual high character, and the notes to the former are evidently by a practised hand. We note one improvement in the new departure—the literary and analytical contributors are anonymous.

The British Chess Magazine is the title of a new monthly springing from the late Huddersfield College Magazine. It is edited in chief by Mr. Watkinson, with the co-operation of the late staff of the late Chessplayers' Chronicle. In saying that it differs in a very slight degree, if at all, from that journal, we intend to accord it high praise.

Both magazines have our cordial wishes for their success.

Mr. F. C. Collins, whose problems are well known to our readers, is about to publish a selection of one hundred of his compositions. We are asked to state that intending subscribers should address the author, at 81, Great Queen-street, London, W.C.

A match was played between the Greenwich and Railway Clearing-House Chess Clubs on Monday last, the former winning four games, drawing three, and losing none.

Mr. A. Staveley Hill, M.P., who was appointed arbitrator in the appeal of Messrs. Bass and Co. against the increased assessment of their breweries from £18,717 to £30,861, has decided upon a rateable value of £28,309.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated Nov. 6, 1880) of Joaquin Procopio Genaro de la Trinidad Beistegui y Garcia, formerly of Mexico, but late of No. 12, Rue de Tilsitt, Paris, who died on Nov. 12 last, was proved in London on the 28th ult. by Madame Concepcion Benites Beistegui, the sister-in-law of the deceased, the sole executrix, the personal estate in England being sworn under £400,000. The testator declares his two sons, Jean Antoine and Charles, to be his heirs, and he appoints as their guardian their maternal grandmother, Madame Concepcion Ruiz Benites.

The Scotch Confirmation, under seal of the Commissariot of Perthshire (dated Dec. 17, 1880), of the will of Mr. John Middleton, formerly merchant in Glasgow, but late of Kinfauns Castle, in the county of Perth, who died on Oct. 12 last, granted to Mrs. Eliza Ann Piercy Henderson or Middleton, the widow, Colin Campbell, and William Frederick Middleton, the surviving executors nominate, was sealed in London on the 23rd ult., the personal estate in England and Scotland amounting to upwards of £292,000.

The will (dated Dec. 6, 1878) with a codicil (dated Oct. 27, 1879) of Mr. Charles Sackville Bale, late of No. 71, Cambridge-terrace, Hyde Park, who died on Nov. 28 last, was proved on the 15th ult. by Multon Lambarde and Edwin Newman, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £160,000. The testator bequeaths to his executor Mr. Newman, 200 guineas; to his executor Mr. Lambarde, 100 guineas; to the wife of Mr. James Traill, 100 guineas; to the Paddington Hospital, 200 guineas; to his servant Selina Seymour, £500 and 100 guineas; to his servant Elizabeth Broughton, £200 and 50 guineas; to the brothers and sisters of the said Multon Lambarde, £500 each; and to the children of Charles Otway Mayne, £300 each. The residue of his real and personal estate is to be held upon trust for the said Multon Lambarde for life, and then for his first son who shall survive testator and attain twenty-one.

The will (dated Sept. 2, 1880) of Mr. John Bigham, late of Liverpool, who died on Oct. 5 last, was proved on the 17th ult. by John Charles Bigham, the son, and Arthur Ashton, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £140,000. The testator gives to his wife, Mrs. Helen Bigham, £500, and his furniture, effects, horses and carriages, and she is to have the use of his plate, pictures, statuary, and books for life or widowhood—at her death or second marriage these are to go to his said son; upon trust for the widow and children of his deceased son Henry, £1000; to his said son John Charles, £55,000; to his daughter Agnes Maria, £20,000; and some other legacies. The residue of his property, real and personal, he leaves upon trust for his wife for life, and then for his said son and daughter as she shall appoint; if the widow marries again she is to receive instead of such life interest an annuity of £500, and, subject thereto, his said son and daughter are to share the residue in equal moieties.

The will (dated June 4, 1878) with codicils (dated July 6, 1878, and May 5, 1880) of the Rev. John Fountain Woodycare Woodycare, late of Crookhill, Yorkshire, who died July 25 last, has been proved by Archdeacon Frederick Watkins and the Rev. Frederick S. Tireman, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £80,000. The testator bequeaths to his wife £3000, and carriages, horses, and chief contents of his mansion; to his five sisters-in-law, his brother-in-law, D'Arcy Spence Preston, his sister, Frances Anne Mainwaring, N. L. Lumley Hodgson, and the Rev. George Richardson, each £500; for communion plate for Conisbrough church, £100; to Lady Lydia Gundred Besant, £100; to Miss Constance Sabine, £100; to each of his trustees, £100; and to numerous godchildren, £100 or £50 each; all legacies free of duty. He devises his real estate and the residue of his personal estate in trust to the said executors, for the benefit of his wife for her life, and, on failure of issue of his wife, for Lawrence Woodycare Blomefield and his heirs male; whom failing, to the issue of Arthur John Preston; whom failing, to Malcolm and Arthur Blomefield, sons of the Rev. Sir T. E. W. Blomefield, Bart., in succession, and their heirs male; and on failure of all such issue, finally to testator's heir-at-law. His trustees are to invest his personalty and all accumulations during minorities in landed estates, at their discretion.

The will (dated Aug. 11, 1873) of Mrs. Mary Grant, late of Wormley Bury, Hertford, who died on Oct. 27 last, was proved on the 7th ult. by Henry Jeffreys Bushby, the sole executor, the personal estate being sworn under £35,000. The testatrix bequeaths to her niece, Dame Isabella Smith Neill, £1000, and upon trust for her and her children £8000; numerous legacies to relatives, friends, and servants; and the residue of her property to her executor, Mr. Bushby.

The will (dated Oct. 22, 1863) with two codicils (both dated Oct. 6, 1869) of the Rev. Thomas Best, late of Redrice, near Andover, Southampton, who died on Nov. 18 last, was proved on the 11th ult. by Charles John Dimond, Henry Rogers, and Thomas Best, the son, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £30,000. The testator bequeaths to his wife, Mrs. Sophia Best, £1000, and his furniture, pictures, plate, effects, horses and carriages; to his sister, Miss Jane Best, an annuity of £300; to James John Hooper, £100; and the residue of the personalty upon trust for his wife for life, and then for his only child, the said Thomas Best. He devises all his freehold estates to the use of his wife for life, with remainder to the use of his said son for life, with remainder to his eldest grandson, Thomas George Best.

The will (dated Jan. 1, 1880) of Mr. John Henry David Siltzer, late of No. 39, Queen's Gate-gardens, South Kensington, who died on Nov. 6 last, was proved on the 6th ult. by Salis Arthur Schwabe, William Sleman Browne Browne, and Mrs. Rosalie Siltzer, the mother, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £25,000. The testator bequeaths to Ada Harley, £100 and an annuity of £400 for life; to Mary Morrish, an old servant in the family, an annuity of £50; and legacies to his executors and others. The residue of his property he leaves to his mother.

The will (dated Aug. 15, 1874) of Miss Harriett Heming, late of Hillingdon, Middlesex, who died on Sept. 22 last, was proved on the 7th ult. by John Garratt and John Arthur Thomas Garratt, the nephew, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £25,000. The testatrix bequeaths £100 to each of her executors, one fourth of the residue of her property to her said nephew; and the other three fourths upon trust for her unmarried sisters, and on the death of the survivor of them for her said nephew.

The Sunday Lecture Society has been instituted to provide for the delivery on Sundays in the metropolis, and to encourage the delivery elsewhere, of lectures on science—physical, intellectual, and moral—history, literature, and art, especially on their bearing upon the improvement and social well-being of mankind. Lectures are given by the society on Sunday afternoons, at St. George's Hall; and to-morrow, the 16th inst., Dr. Charles Mackay will discourse on "Druidism, the oldest religion in the world: the purpose and uses of Stonehenge and other Druidical temples."

SOUND INVESTMENTS.

GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY OF CANADA.—The rapid and uninterrupted development of this Railway has been one of the most remarkable features of the Stock and Share Markets in recent times, and the greatly enhanced values of the various securities at once testify to the wonderfully improved position of the line and the favour with which they are regarded by investors. Its history, under the present enlightened management, literally comprehends one long series of successes, and in taking a retrospective survey of what has been accomplished within the past eighteen months, the Proprietors must see that not only have they abundant reasons for rejoicings on the position already attained, but they have ample justification for looking forward with hope and confidence to the future.

The changes already carried out have been manifold and various, and it may safely be affirmed that in every instance the Company has largely benefited. The best evidence of this is afforded by the fact that it has gained an accession of financial strength which has enabled it to attract and lease tributary lines on very advantageous terms, to redeem prior charges of 6 and 7 per cent Bonds by the issue of 4 per cent Debentures at a premium, and, further, to take up for the first time its proper position in Canada as a powerful Corporation, backed by a large and wealthy body of shareholders.

All these facts, however, though highly interesting in themselves, are forgotten in the one more prominent feature which is constantly being brought to the notice of investors—viz., the astounding growth of the traffic receipts. Week by week, without intermission, the current has been upwards. Thus, for the twenty-six weeks of the past half year just closed the gross increase has reached the immense total of £163,873, or an average of £6300 per week. There can be no doubt that the net surplus will enable the Directors to pay the full interest on the 1st and 2nd Preferences for the whole year and a satisfactory dividend on the 3rd Preference.

While this progress has been going on the position and prospects of the Railway have been assailed in many directions by speculators and others, and warning notes have been uttered of impending disappointments, if not disasters. No other Railway, indeed, has been subjected to such a fusillade of attack, and the very fact of its securities withstanding these influences affords strong evidence of their inherent soundness. For a long time past a steady process of absorption of the various stocks has been going on, and the merits of the property are becoming so manifest (except to captious critics) that totally new and highly influential classes are attracted to them. The area of the proprietary is thus an ever-widening one, and this fact, with the concurrent progression of the Railway in prosperity, must ere inevitably result in all the securities attaining a solid and very high position.

It may fairly be argued that if such advances have been made during so comparatively dull a period as the past eighteen months, there is practically no limit to further improvement, now that the whole continent of America is suffused with the light of returning commercial activity. Canada must surely participate in the prosperity which is now dawning, and as a necessary consequence her principal railway—the Grand Trunk—would be enormously benefited, especially when its strong financial position and reserved resources are duly considered. The accompanying Map will show the important position which this Railway occupies. The outlook is, in my opinion, so favourable that I fully anticipate a further steady advance in value of all the Preference issues as well as in the Ordinary stock.

PHILADELPHIA AND READING RAILROAD.—Following quickly upon the recent triumphant meeting of the Bond and Share holders, and, notwithstanding the frantic efforts of Mr. Gowen's enemies to defeat his plans for the settlement of the floating debt, the issue of the Deferred Stock, in accordance with his proposals, has been made, and is now an assured success, as it already commands a premium of nearly 2 per cent. This new stock, at the issue price of 15 dols. per 50 dols. share (or £3 for £10), must be an exceptionally cheap investment for the future, and all the other securities are well worth buying. The net earnings have recently shown enormous increases, which are likely to continue, and when the President's further scheme for paying off weightier prior charges, by the issue of 5 per cent Debenture Stock (as in the case of the Grand Trunk), is effected, there will, doubtless, be a sufficient revenue to pay 7 per cent on both the Ordinary and Deferred Capital.

But there is yet another great reversion which no other Railway possesses, and that is the vast coal property. The least sanguine report estimates the minimum quantity of available marketable coal to be over 1,200,000,000 tons and the royalty as worth 30 cents per ton, apart from miners' or railway carriers' profits. Thus, the coal property alone would be worth 360,000,000 dols., while the whole capital of the Company, bonds and shares, will only amount, with the new issue, to 200,000,000 dols. The gross earnings of the two Companies in 1880, after deducting the carriage charged by the Railway against the Coal Company, amounted to 25,000,000 dols., and in 1881 they will probably reach 30,000,000 dols. The Map which I publish herewith shows what the connections of the Reading Company will shortly be. A grand future must inevitably open out for this undertaking.

Buyers of the shares should insist upon prompt delivery at the coming settlement on the 14th inst., so that they may be in a position to claim their proportion of Deferred Stock.

ATLANTIC, MISSISSIPPI, AND OHIO RAILROAD.—The improvement in value of these Bonds has made further progress during the past month, and the rapidity of the rise was such that in order to answer the numerous inquiries which were addressed to me in consequence of my frequent recommendations of the security, I issued a special Circular on Dec. 17 explaining the position of affairs.

Upon the basis of my estimate of the value of the Stocks to be given in exchange for the existing Bondholders' Certificates, a present purchaser of one of these certificates of 1000 dols. or £200 (which is the smallest amount obtainable) at the current quotation of 135, and which would cost £270, would receive after next month new securities which would be worth £321. The price now ruling also includes the cash payment of 2 per cent due on the 11th inst. The earnings of the Railway continue to increase every month, and the now approaching close of the Receivership will place the securities in the front rank of American investments.

NEW YORK, PENNSYLVANIA and OHIO RAILROAD (late ATLANTIC and GREAT WESTERN).—Within the past few weeks there has been increased animation in the bonds and shares of this Railway. The attention of the public has been directed to the lowness of present quotations by the fact of the resumption of interest payments on the First Mortgage Bonds, one half the amount due on the 1st inst. being paid in cash and the balance in scrip.

An important element of strength is the introduction of the securities of the company on the New York Stock Exchange, where the demand for them is daily increasing. The upward movement in prices has been even more marked in America than here, and a rush has been made to buy up low-priced securities. Atlantic and Great Western bonds and shares remain about the lowest priced railway stocks in either London or New York, and as such are in especial favour in the latter city. The past misfortunes of the Company have been due to various causes, one being the exceptional position of the property in being owned altogether in this country, leaving it without the salutary influence of supervision on the spot. Now that the American shareholders themselves are interested the management will, for the first time, be carefully watched and sharply criticised. Strange as it may appear, the revenues, both gross and net, are now less than they were four or even fifteen years ago, while all neighbouring and connecting systems have doubled or trebled their receipts during the same period. This has been wholly due to the exceptional gauge of the line, rendering it entirely dependent on the Erie Company for access to the seaboard. The change of gauge to the standard width, and the opening of new connections indicated on the Map which accompanies this Circular, have now, however, entirely altered the position of affairs. By the Rochester and State Line route access to the great system of the New York Central with its lines to New York and New England is secured, while a still more direct connection with the coast will soon be opened to the Philadelphia and Reading by means of the extension already commenced by an independent Company. At Buffalo access is gained to the Grand Trunk system, which will provide a market for the coal raised in the districts served by the Atlantic and Great Western. To the westward, connection with all the leading points is given by the Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati, and Indianapolis Railroad, an alliance hitherto not utilised.

Holding a central position with all these valuable allies, the revenues of the line must continue to improve at a greater rate than in the past twelve months. Full interest should be earned during the current year on the First Mortgages, which would warrant a much higher price for those Bonds. As to the lower securities, the demand from America will certainly cause a rapid advance. The inquiry for the ordinary stock is largely due to the fact that it carries the control of the company. American operators are well aware that whatever arrangements may be made for "voting Trustees" or "beneficiary interests," the legal right of the shareholders to the control of a company cannot be set aside, and efforts, I believe, are at the present moment being made to purchase a sufficient interest in these shares to direct the future policy of a line which promises so much improvement in the future. English owners who wish to realise will get better prices for their holdings if they are content to wait the result of the development now in progress.

NEW YORK, LAKE ERIE, AND WESTERN SIX PER CENT SECOND MORTGAGE BONDS.—By comparison with the 6 per cent Bonds of other American Railways, which are quoted from 115 to 120, these appear to be cheap (being very long dated) at the present price of 106, at which they return nearly 5½ per cent to an investor. They are now amply protected, the net earnings for the year ending Sept. 30 last showing a surplus of £300,000 after paying all Bonded charges.

MEXICAN RAILWAY.—Shareholders in this progressive Railway must now be thoroughly convinced that the improved position rests on a solid foundation. This was made manifest at the recent meeting of Shareholders when it was explained that the new Railways, about to be constructed under American auspices, will greatly tend to the advancement of this particular property.

LONDON, CHATHAM, AND DOVER RAILWAY.—The comparatively high level to which these securities have now attained must be very gratifying to those shareholders who have held on during the many adverse criticisms with which this Railway has been so frequently assailed. It is evident that this is a sound and steadily progressive property. Although the mileage is less than half that of the South Eastern, the increase in the traffic receipts during the past half-year amounted to £2,370 or only £3 00 less than the South Eastern. The relative progression of the two Railways has thus proved exactly the reverse of that predicted by the advocates of the "fusion."

ISLE OF MAN RAILWAY.—As these shares include the half-year's dividend to Dec. 31, which will probably be at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, they are decidedly cheap at £5 10s. The traffics for 1880 were £22,574, against £18,351 in 1879, an increase of nearly 22 per cent.

ANGLO-AMERICAN TELEGRAPH.—In view of the facts enumerated in my Circular last month, and that the £7,000,000 of nominal capital is selling at a little over £4,000,000, Shareholders need not, in my opinion, be alarmed by the rumours in circulation as to a new American competition by Mr. Jay Gould. That enterprising gentleman is the largest stockholder in the American Union Telegraph Company, which has already made an agreement with the new French Cable Company, so that any new cables could not receive traffic from either the Western Union or the American Union, who are respectively bound by agreement to the Anglo-American and the new French Company.

TRAMWAYS.—The traffic receipts of all Tramways have exhibited great vitality for several months past, and the forthcoming reports and dividends are likely to be more favourable, and in marked contrast to those of the previous half-year. Current prices include six months' dividend.

RHYMNEY IRON COMPANY.—The 7 per cent Debentures of this Company are well worth buying. I hope to issue a special Circular referring fully to this property at an early date.

CANADIAN COPPER AND SULPHUR COMPANY.—The remarkable discoveries of gold and silver, coincident with the vigorous development of the Company's ordinary resources, must entitle the £1 shares at the present price of about £2 5s. to be regarded as an attractive investment.

INDIAN GOLD-MINES.—It is only a year since I introduced the first of these Companies, and when the whole project of gold-mining in India was regarded as a "wild speculation." Subsequent events, however, have proved that the enterprise is rapidly developing into a great reality; and there are many indications at the present time that the various mining properties will prove to be great prizes. The cheapest shares in the market just now are the South Indian, Gennock, and Phœnix, and I look for an early and considerable advance in value of all three. The latest reports are simply brilliant.

KEATING'S COUGH LOZENGES
CURE COUGHS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.
Medical testimony states that no other medicine is so effectual in the cure of these dangerous maladies. One lozenge alone gives ease. They contain no opium nor any violent drug. Sold by all Chemists, in Tins, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d.

THROAT AFFECTIONS and HOARSENESS.—All suffering from Irritation of the Throat and Hoarseness will be agreeably surprised at the almost immediate relief afforded by the use of BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES. These famous "lozenges" are now sold by most respectable Druggists throughout the country, at 1s. 1½d. per Box. Persons troubled with a "hacking cough," "a slight cold," or bronchial affections cannot try them too soon, as their use checks any tendency to progress, result in serious Pulmonary and Asthmatic affections. See that the "Bronchial Troches" are on the Government stamp around each box.—Prepared by JOHN I. BROWN and SONS, Boston, U.S. European Depôt, 33, Farringdon-road, London.

IN ASTHMA, Consumption, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds, Shortness of Breath, Phlegm, Rheumatism, DR. LOCOCK'S PULMONIC WAFERS give instant relief, a rapid cure, and taste pleasantly.

"FOR THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE."

CLARKE'S WORLD-FAMED BLOOD MIXTURE is warranted to cleanse the Blood from all Impurities, from whatever cause arising. For Scrofula, Scurvy, Skin and Blood Diseases, its effects are marvellous. In Bottles, 2s. 9d. each, and in cases, containing six times the quantity, 11s. each, of all Chemists. Sent to any address for 30 or 132 stamps, of the Proprietor, F. J. CLARKE, Chemist, Lincoln.

BLAIR'S GOUT PILLS,
THE GREAT REMEDY FOR GOUT AND RHEUMATISM.
Sold by all Chemists, at 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. per Box.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS and OINTMENT.
The Pills purify the blood, correct all disorders of the liver, stomach, kidneys and bowels. The Ointment is unrivalled in the cure of bad legs, old wounds, gout, and rheumatism.

SULPHOLINE LOTION.—An external remedy for curing Skin Diseases. There is scarcely any eruption but will yield to SULPHOLINE in a few days, and commence to fade away. Ordinary pimples, redness, blotches, scurf, roughness, tan, sunburn, &c., as well as more severe skin disorders, that have plagued the sufferers for years, however deeply rooted, Sulpholine will successfully attack, and it destroys the animalcule which causes these unsightly, irritable affections, and always produces a clear, healthy skin. Sulpholine Lotion is sold by most Chemists. Bottles, 2s. 9d.

THE SKIN.—The glory of woman, the pride of man. It contains the principles and elements of beauty and constitutes all that we term "loveliness." All how many thousands have their skins blotched by the use of the irritant soaps. Curtail the Coal Tar, Glycerine, and the coarse coloured soaps, caustic with alkali and made of putrid fats. The more delicate the skin the quicker its ruin. The ALBION MILK AND SULPHUR SOAP is the purest, the whitest, and most purifying of all Soaps, by its purifying action taking away and preventing all pimples, blotches, and roughness. It is recommended by the entire Medical Profession as the most elegant preparation for the skin that is known. By all Chemists, in Tablets, 6d. and 1s. THE ALBION SANATORY SOAP COMPANY, 532, Oxford-street, London.

THE RISING IN THE TRANSVAAL.
TO
NON-COMMISSIONED and OTHERS,
VISITING OR RESIDING IN HOT CLIMATES.

From the "European Mail" of Nov. 5, 1880.

"Of all the trials that man almost recklessly places upon his constitution, none perhaps is so severe and pregnant with danger as that which accompanies a sudden and extreme change from a hot to a mild and cool climate, or in the reverse direction. At such times it is of the most vital importance that the body should be kept cool, and free from the most minute germs of disease. To effect this object, the judicious use of a saline is unquestionably the best safeguard that can be called into requisition, and of such preparations ENO'S FRUIT SALT may be said to be one of the best-conceived compounds. To residents in tropical climates the use of a medicinal comfort of this kind is indispensable, while its value in preventing prickly heat, boils, and whitlows is simply incalculable.

"Whatever may be the climatic conditions, the human body stands at all times, and under all circumstances, in need of some agent that will as thoroughly disinfect all its pores and arteries against the liability to epidemic diseases as the disinfectants of sanitation purge the sewers of a populous town. At the same time, such are the special therapeutical properties of the FRUIT SALT that a tone is given to the system, the strength is fortified, and the spirits exhilarated.

"With the temperature upwards of 100 deg. in the shade, and the system consequently unstrung through fatiguing occupation, exercise, or study, a saline of the character like that prepared by Mr. Eno is a boon the value of which is scarcely to be estimated by those who have never lived under similar climatic conditions. In cases where the liability to attack from jungle, marsh, and yellow fever exists to an alarming degree, the daily use of the FRUIT SALT will be found a thoroughly effective preventive.

"Speaking more generally, it may be said that the use of the preparation has a marked effect in improving the general health of persons of scorbutic habit, as well as of those who are liable to epileptic affections. In the latter case attacks may be warded off by the patient taking a full dose of the saline in a tumbler of cold water immediately upon feeling unwell, while persons suffering from nervous and dyspeptic headaches should take a spoonful in about half the quantity of water. Mention has been made of the mode of applying the remedy prepared by Mr. Eno for use in regard to these two classes of disorders with the view of showing the extreme simplicity of the mode of action, no less than that of the agent employed.

"In cases of irritability of the stomach, nausea, vomiting, sea-sickness, rheumatism, gout, an I many other of the ills which human flesh is heir to, ENO'S FRUIT SALT not only claims, but has been proved again and again to possess remedial properties of a marvellously high order, and no household that wisely counts the comfort and safety of its members—whether located under the sun of England or India, or Southern Africa, the West Indies, or Australasia—will neglect to provide itself with a safeguard to health at once so pure, simple, and effective as the preparation which has caused the patentee's name to be a household word from one end of the earth to the other."

SUCCESS IN LIFE.

"A new invention is brought before the public and commands success. A score of abominable imitations are immediately introduced by the unscrupulous, who, in copying the original closely enough to deceive the public, and yet not so exactly as to infringe upon legal rights, exercise an ingenuity that, employed in an original channel, could not fail to secure reputation and profit."—Adams.

FLORIMEL OF PALM.

A white and delicate hand is the first attribute of beauty and civilisation. "The hand," says Sir Charles Bell in the "Bridgewater Treatise," "distinguishes man from the brute; be careful of it, for in polite society it is an index not only of the body but of the mind."

The Florimel of Palm being rubbed over the skin is to be removed with a little water, then dried with a soft towel. Once using will convince the most sceptical that, if daily applied, how much cannot be said in favour of Florimel of Palm for rendering the skin or hands white, delicate, soft, and fair.

Sold in Jars, 3s. 6d. each.
PIESSE and LUBIN, 2, New Bond-street, London.
May be obtained of any Chemist or Perfumer in the world.

TURKISH PASTILS.

"Through all my travels few things astonished me more than seeing the beauties of the harem smoking Narghilies at Stamboul. After smoking a sweet aromatic lozenge or pastil is used by them, which is said to impart an odour of flowers to the breath. I have never seen these breath lozenges but once in Europe, and that was at PIESSE and LUBIN'S shop in Bond-street."—Lady W., Montreal.

In Boxes, 2s.; by post, 2s. 2d.

SWEET SACHETS.

PIESSE and LUBIN compose every variety of Sachet Powder the same odours as their many perfumes for the handkerchief. Placed in a drawer, etui, or travelling-bag, they impart a grateful and pleasing perfume without being too pungent. Piesse and Lubin also have them on demand, Dried Odours, Flowers, Spices, and Odoriferous Gums. Per ounce, 1s. 6d.; per lb., 12s.
2, NEW BOND-STREET, LONDON.

ROWLANDS' ODONTO is the purest and most fragrant dentifrice ever made. All dentists will allow that neither washes nor pastes can possibly be a efficacious for purifying the teeth and clearing the mouth and will be as pure and more effective than any tooth powder; such Rowlands Odonto has always proved itself to be.

ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL has been known for the last eighty years as the best and safest preserver and beautifier of the hair. It contains no lead or mineral ingredients, and is especially adapted for the hair of children. Sold in usual four sizes. Ask any Chemist, Perfumer, or Hairdresser for Rowlands' Articles.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The best remedy for Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache, Gout, and Indigestion, and safest aperient for delicate constitutions. Lords and children, of all Chemists.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT.

Purely vegetable, perfectly harmless; will reduce from two to five pounds per week; acts on the food in the stomach preventing its conversion into fat. Sold by Chemists. Send stamp for pamphlet.—BOTANIC MEDICINE COMPANY, 493, Oxford-street, London, W.C.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, JANUARY 22, 1881.

Some time about the beginning of the Crimean War, the late Prince Consort, in a public speech, made an observation to the effect that Parliamentary Institutions were on their trial. Such a remark is far more applicable to the present time. Representative Government is being put to a strain which, but for the strong traditional attachment to it of the British people, might, in the end, involve its destruction. The immediate effect of this is sufficiently irritating. Measures of vast importance to the tranquillity of the realm are waiting to be submitted to the deliberative consideration of Parliament, and, even before their introduction to the House of Commons, there are plain and unmistakable indications that they are destined to encounter every form of obstruction. The question no longer is whether the train shall proceed more or less slowly towards its appointed terminus, but how it shall proceed at all, seeing that a block lies right across it. All legislation by Constitutional Assemblies, it is obvious, presupposes the disposition of their members to the conclusion of practical business. Where there exists, on the part of but few, a resolute and persistent will that no business shall be done, it is—we will not say easy—but possible at least, to set a preponderant majority at defiance, and to render deliberative discussion quite impracticable. Such seems to be the purpose of a section of the Home Rulers. Will they succeed? In causing needless delay in spite of the urgency of affairs at the present moment, they will; in ultimately preventing the passing of the Bills initiated by the present Government, we think, they will not. But this latter opinion involves the adoption of some plan of procedure in the House of Commons to which the majority will be reluctantly driven.

The question which now lies within the purview of the House is simply one of form and, therefore, one which it is competent to determine by its sole responsibility. But, in this instance, what is merely formal in itself has been forced into close contiguity with what is essential. "Freedom of debate" and "the rights of minorities" cannot be obliterated without utterly neutralising the moral effect of Parliamentary legislation. But both freedom of debate and the rights of minorities may be imperilled as fully by the unreasonable course taken by a score of members as by the decision of any majority of political representatives. There are other rights to be considered besides those of minorities. Majorities also, especially when their relative proportion is very large, may properly claim something as due to them. The country whose legislative business they are elected to transact has, in this matter, as well as in others, a supreme right; and if the nation cannot allow its political affairs to be dealt with so as to prevent the healthy action of every kind of business, its representatives have surely within their discretion a power so to modify their modes of conducting their discussions as to raise them above the reach of wilful and persistent obstruction.

Several suggestions have been made with a view to readjusting the relative rights of majorities and minorities, so far at least as to prevent any wanton or factious waste of the public time. There can be no doubt that two or three centuries ago our ancestors, in their contentions with the Crown, had recourse to very summary rules for silencing offending members. In these days, and after lengthened experience, it has been found sufficient, until quite lately, to leave to every individual member's sense of propriety to draw the distinction between the simple possession of his right and the use or abuse of it in any given case. There have been, it is true, occasional scenes of excitement, almost rising to tumult, in the House of Commons which have reflected discredit upon its character as a Legislative Body. But they have been very rare and exceptional; while the immense volume and variety of work calmly transacted show that, in general, the House depends more upon its own spirit of self-restraint than upon written rules for the maintenance of order. What is done, therefore, in this direction to obviate pre-organised waste of time, must be done with a delicate and even tender regard to genuine freedom of discussion. It will hardly do for the House to search for wisdom in the past, seeing that the circumstances of the past differ so entirely from those of the present.

What is really required is for the House of Commons to assume to itself, under proper safeguards, the power of closing debates whenever it shall appear to a large proportionate majority that further discussion can only be resorted to for the purpose of waste of time. To place this power in the hands of the Speaker would put him into so invidious a position as almost to preclude the proper exercise of it. The power ought to reside in a majority; but in so large a majority as fairly to represent the judgment of the House, and it should be called into action, not by this or that individual member on the spur of the moment, and, perhaps, in the heat of passion, but by a given number of members concurring in a written request that the debate might cease, which, having been presented from the Chair, should be submitted to a vote without debate. Even some such regulation as this, it may be, might fail of the entire effect expected from it, and would certainly not be placed among the "standing orders" of the House of Commons until after prolonged and serious discussion. Certainly, no conduct could more facilitate the prompt adoption of such a rule than the tactics now being pursued by a certain section of the Irish Members. They appear to be pursuing their ends by means best calculated to defeat them. They are rousing a temper ill fitted to brook irrelevant speech and action. They are shaking the pillars upon which Constitutional liberty rests. It is, perhaps, hopeless now to try and win them to a less desperate but a much surer means of elevating their country. But of this we are convinced, as we have been from the first, that the obstructive method of political warfare is practically untenable, and that the Commons of the United Kingdom will triumphantly vindicate their right and duty to give effect to the political determination of the people whom they represent.

In consequence of the storms, communication with the Continent has been interrupted, and the letter from our Paris Correspondent, with other foreign correspondence, delayed.

Lord Lyttelton has been appointed one of the Commissioners under the Inclosure Acts.

Lord Beaconsfield's Hughenden tenantry have been informed that his Lordship will remit 20 per cent on the Michaelmas rents at the audit at the end of this month.

Sir Alexander Galt, High Commissioner for Canada, will read, at a meeting of the Royal Colonial Institute, to be held next Tuesday evening at the Grosvenor Gallery Library, a paper on the Future of Canada. Lord Bury will preside.

General Sir Frederick Roberts met with a cordial reception at Bournemouth yesterday week on the occasion of a distribution of volunteer prizes. After distributing the prizes General Roberts briefly addressed the volunteers, complimenting them on their smartness and efficiency.

The Lord Mayor presided on Monday night at the annual meeting of the Working Lads' Institute, which carries on its operations in Whitechapel. His Lordship referred to the important work accomplished by the promoters of this undertaking; and a like tribute was paid by Bishop Claughton, Sir E. H. Currie, and other speakers.

Lady Burdett-Coutts presided on Tuesday evening at the New-Year's Festival of the Columbia Costermongers' Club, held at Brown's House-lane, Spitalfields. The establishment is the centre of several charities associated with the name of Lady Burdett-Coutts. In addition to the aged or infirm females who are enabled to earn a living in the so-called sewing-school, there are twenty boys belonging to a shoeblack brigade, and all those belonging to these institutions and some others were entertained at the beef and plum-pudding banquet of the Costermonger's Club the same evening.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

"A Jewish wedding at the present day," I read in the learned and exhaustive Mr. James Picciotto's "Sketches of Anglo-Jewish History," "is an event which, however interesting to the parties immediately concerned, is not likely to draw the attention of the British public. Such was not the case in the year 1810, when Jewish ceremonies were an object of especial curiosity. Indeed, one of the magazines of the period thought it worth its while to favour its readers with a circumstantial account of the nuptials of Mr. Jonas Lazarus with the beautiful and accomplished Miss Rosceia Nathan, daughter of Mr. M.I. Nathan, of Godmanchester. The details of the happy event are fully narrated; and we learn, among other things, that the ceremony was performed under a canopy in the garden of the residence of the bride's father; that the bridegroom was preceded to the presence of the bride by a band of music playing a grand martial air; and that four green tapers were kept burning during the celebration." Elsewhere Mr. Picciotto mentions "a Mekadish," or irregular Jewish marriage: citing the famous case of Mr. Mendes Belisario, who, in the year 1793, being enamoured of the beautiful Miss Esther Lindo, a minor, met the young lady by appointment at the house of his brother, and, in the presence of two credible Jewish witnesses, asked Miss Lindo if she understood the purport of the proceedings, and, on receiving an affirmative reply, placed on her finger a ring, repeating at the same time, in Hebrew, the formula used in the celebration of Jewish marriages. But there was no "Ketuba," or contract; nor "Khupa," or canopy (compare "cupola"); and no seven nuptial blessings. So it was "Mekadish," or irregular. On reference to the Portuguese Peth-Din, the ceremony was pronounced only a doubtful betrothal. The beautiful Miss Lindo was made a ward in Chancery; the stern Lord Loughborough would not allow Mr. Mendes Belisario to see his bride; and ultimately the irregular marriage was altogether invalidated in the Arches Court by Lord Stowell.

But I would pray the learned Mr. James Picciotto (he is alive, I trust, and valid) to perpend. His instructive volume was published in 1875. Had he written it in 1881 he would have greatly modified it in respect to the degree of attention which in modern times is paid to a Jewish wedding. Why, Mr. P., for the last month all the great world of London, and all the booths in Vanity Fair have been agog with small talk concerning the grand Mosaic Marriage fixed for Wednesday, the nineteenth of this instant January, at the Synagogue, Great Portland-street. Now, were this only the wedding by the priest all shaven and shorn of the maiden all forlorn to the man all tattered and torn, I should say never a word about the "Sposalizio" or the "Nozze" in question; but the festivals of the nineteenth are to be as splendid as the "Noces de Gamache" in "Don Quixote;" the "funcion" is to be a public one, for the word "Press" is written in red ink in the left-hand top corner on a superbly glazed card, which now lies before me, printed in silver, and containing an invite to witness the celebration of the marriage of Mr. Lepold de Rothschild to Mademoiselle Maria Perugia.

You will observe that I have spoken of this "grandissime" Portland-street Synagogue wedding in the future tense. The fact is that, in view of possible accidents, I am writing these "Echoes" on Tuesday. Shall I be able to go to the wedding to-morrow? I am sure that I do not know. I am told that the invited guests will arrive in five hundred carriages; and that a force of one hundred and fifty additional police have been told off to preserve order among the populace assembled outside the Synagogue. Five hundred carriages mean, say, seven hundred and fifty horses, and the same number of coachmen and footmen. Will they, and the hundred and fifty additional police, be able to endure the inclemency of the weather, if to-morrow in any way approach the arctic malignity of the actual and awful to-day? I went to a funeral yesterday at Hendon, and felt wretchedly cold. I went to the play last night, and felt colder—as cold, internally, as though I had swallowed a bushel of uncooked frogs; and I came home through the glassy streets at midnight in a "cap full of wind." But, to-day, it has been blowing a gale since morning. The garden railing of the Foundling Hospital is nearly concealed under a mound of driven snow; there is not a cab to be obtained; my next door neighbour writes to me to say that he is suffering from the "rigors," and that he feels a hundred years old. The several printers' devils who have visited this establishment in the course of the afternoon and evening have borne, respectively, the aspect of juvenile Polar bears and Erl Kings. The "Frozen out Gardeners" and "Poor Men from the Docks who have Got no Work to Do" have made themselves lamentably audible; the boy who brought the Pall Mall and the St. James's at six p.m. had been by a careful mother so tightly swathed in a woollen shawl that he could neither ring nor knock, and was fain to kick at the door, where he appeared with his bundle of papers not under his arm but beneath his chin; and the postman:—but I will not harrow your feelings with a description of the postman's appearance. I wonder whether I shall be able to go to the wedding to-morrow, or whether we shall be all snowed up till our provisions are exhausted, and, after having fried the gold-fish, roasted the canaries, barbecued the white Pomeranian, and snared and eaten my neighbour's cat "Ashbetot," we devour one another. The waterpipes have not burst yet; but the gas is exhibiting signs of "giving out," and, altogether, things look threatening. All honour to that brave bookbinder to whom I owed some money, and who came through the darksome night, and through the frost and snow, to claim his due!

Meanwhile, I have half made up my mind to abandon, once for all, the consumption of butter. Why? It is precisely in very cold weather that you should eat the largest quantity of fat in order to keep up the heat of the system; and it was maintained by the illustrious Liebig that were we exposed to the same degree of cold as the Samoyedes are, we should be able to consume every day ten pounds of fat meat besides a dozen candles.

Still, the most resolute of butter-eaters may pause—ay, and turn pale—when, in a recently published Parliamentary Paper full of information concerning the manufacture of oleomargarine in the United States, his eye lights on an appalling paragraph, "Butter on a Soapstone Basis." Extracts from a periodical called The American Dairyman are given to show that soapstone, dried and ground to a powder as fine as that of wheat flour, is largely used by unscrupulous manufacturers in the States in the adulteration of oleomargarine; while of that last-named "substitute for butter" not less than fifteen millions of pounds weight are annually shipped to Europe from the port of New York alone. The bulk of this oleomargarine goes to Holland; and the Dutch supply prodigious quantities of "dairy" produce to foreigners.

As for oleomargarine, it seems, if not sophisticated, to be wholesome enough. It is only the oil, clarified and condensed, which is squeezed by strong mechanical pressure from finely chopped and melted beef suet. The residuum of stearine left after the expression of the oil is used for candle-making. But if the oleomargarine is to be manufactured into "butterine," ten per cent of milk is first churned, and the oil is then added and churned with it. It is then coloured with annatto, a little salt is added, and the stuff is then ready for home use or for exportation. But butter with a Soapstone basis! Heretofore, I thought that the only use made of that greasy magnesian mineral was to cut models of Hindu temples out of it. But the Parliamentary Paper is precise: "A good deal of Western butter is also found to be adulterated with a substance called soapstone."

Mem.: A few years since there was a terrible scare in London caused by a published statement that butter was adulterated with the mud of the river Thames. I have often thought that this fantastic story arose either through a barge full of casks of oil having been scuttled in some muddy creek of the river, or through some reckless fabricator of "bosh" butter having utilised the scrapings of disused oil and tallow casks picked up about the wharves.

Grand doings and rare times will they be having in the township of Acton, in the hundred of Nantwich, county palatine of Chester. Up and doing will be the good folks of Aston, juxta Mondrum, Austerson, Baddington, Brindley, Burland, Cholmondeley, Cool-Pilate (a curious name), Eddleston, Faddiley, Hellull, Hurlston, Newhall, Poole, Stoke, and Worleston; for has not Her Imperial, Royal, and Apostolic Majesty Elizabeth Amalie Eugénie, Empress of Austria and Queen of Hungary, taken Combermere Abbey for two months at a rental so moderate as almost deserving to be called a peppercorn one; Viscount Combermere, that stanch disciple of Nimrod, being anxious that the country-side should benefit to the fullest by the presence of such a mighty huntress as the Kaiserinn.

The Empress, I learn on unimpeachable authority, has been preceded by twenty grooms and a stud of as many horses; and now she will be attended by forty attendants of all ranks, from chamberlain and masters of the horse to cooks and scullions. Her Majesty, who seems to have a great aversion to noise (except, of course, such sounds as "Yoicks!" "Tally-ho!" and "Stole away!"), has caused the flooring of the rooms and corridors in the Abbey to be covered with felt. Her Majesty is to sleep in the apartment formerly occupied by the Viscountess Combermere (the yet flourishing relict of the illustrious Field Marshal), and a suite of rooms are devoted to the Empress's riding-habits, hunting crops, and hunting paraphernalia generally.

The fine old refectory at Combermere Abbey has been used these many years past as a library. Perhaps, when the weather is too inclement to allow her Majesty to ride to hounds, she may find in this whilom dining-hall a select "horsey" library, the contents of which may still keep her on equestrian thoughts intent. What should be the staple of the "horsey" section of a library at a country house? Well, you should have all the "Soapy Sponge" books to begin with, "Ask Mamma," "Plain or Ringlets," "Jorrocks," "Handley Cross," e tutti quanti, with the delightful coloured pictures of John Leech. Then, equally of course, you must have "Stonehenge" on "The Horse in the Stable and the Field;" Samuel Sidney's great "Book of the Horse;" "Nimrod" (if you admire Mr. Appleton's writings); bound sets of the sporting magazines; and Edward Mayhew's "Illustrated Horse Management," a book produced under extraordinary circumstances: the author, who had been a distinguished veterinary surgeon, became in later life hopelessly paralysed in his lower limbs, and his learned books on equine treatment were written in an invalid's chair; and under the same painful conditions he made hundreds of illustrations on wood blocks for engraving.

My contemporary who recently spread consternation in the culinary world by including "morel," the garden nightshade, instead of morells (or, better, morilles, which are highly edible mushrooms), among the ingredients for the stuffing of a turkey has gone to the dictionaries, and has extracted from them about the same kind of information as I gave last week. An "Amateur Fungus Fancier" is also so kind as to tell me that the Morchella Esculenta is usually called "Morell" in this country by the few persons who make practical acquaintance with it. Although it may be plentiful in some few localities, the morell must, on the whole, be considered a scarce delicacy. My experienced correspondent has not heard that the morell is ever used in the manufacture of ketchup; but he adds that morells are by many people in England supposed to be poisonous, in common with some three score more fungoid dainties which are perfectly wholesome.

To my contemporary also has it occurred the happy thought of having a Christmas turkey stuffed with foie gras from a pâté which came straight from Strasburg, viâ Messrs. Moul's, in Piccadilly. My contemporary's cook at first protested against what she considered an unheard-of innovation; but she was fain at last to obey her master's stern behests, and the turkey stuffed with fat liver proved a brilliant success. My contemporary, justly proud of his discovery, intends to dedicate it to his readers, and to call it "Dindon farci à l'Atlas."

As it happens, there were strong men before Agamemnon—and before "Atlas." Lest housekeepers, anxious, like the ancient Athenians, for some new thing, should entertain the notion that all they have to do is to cram into a turkey a quantity of fat goose liver (which without some "binding" accessory would run all away to mere liquid grease and bits of truffle), it is expedient to point out that a scientific recipe for making "Farci de Foie Gras" is to be found in Jules Gouffé's "Le Livre de Cuisine," page 455, paragraph six. The foie gras, which should be very fresh, must, to the extent of 500 grammes, be mingled with 100 grammes of finely-minced tetine de veau and 200 grammes of bread-crumb. The "binding" is given by the yelks of five eggs. In English stuffing there is usually a repulsive superabundance of bread crumb; and when we use a stuffing of foie gras we substitute parboiled chestnuts for the panada, or leave only a "shade" of the latter.

Mem.: Urbain-Dubois recommends "pains" an "bordures" of foie gras à la Régence. I had a Belgian cook once who used to make exquisite cutlets of foie gras in shapes with sham shanks, somewhat akin to the famous Russian "côtelettes à la Pojarski." She was a real cordon bleu, this lady from Flanders, only she had a weakness for imbibing something stronger than sarsaparilla, and for leaving lighted candles in bed; and one night she nearly set the house on fire; so, to my great regret, I was fain to part with this accomplished artist. There is no rose without a thorn.

I read in a paragraph of news from Sunderland that half a dozen tramps who on Sunday had slept in the casual ward of the workhouse were charged before the magistrates with having refused to break their proper quota of stones on Monday morning. The varlets (I suppose all tramps are varlets) had the audacity to urge that they had spent the night in an uncomfortable ward without a fire; and, the blood being completely frozen in their bodies, they declined to work unless they were permitted to go near a fire, which they were not permitted to do. The Bench sent each of these reprehensibly chilly casuals to gaol for a month. They will find it warm enough there.

I am not about to "gush" or to be "sensational," (to use the cant terms) about this mid-January case. Possibly the tramps (who are, as a rule, sadly deceitful at heart) were telling fibs. Very probably the casual ward was warmed by means of a flue, or by hot-water pipes, or by some other calorific-giving apparatus. At the same time, it is obvious that the weather which we are at present enduring is disagreeably favourable to the freezing of the blood in people's bodies. On Monday night last the watchman in a large building-yard in the Gray's-inn-road, within gunshot of where I live, was frozen to death. Every night of the continuance of this awful wintry visitation there will be people who (unless timely aid be extended to them) will die from cold and destitution in the stony-hearted streets. Therefore, to those who have the means of giving to the poor, but who lack the time or have not the vocation to seek out and discriminate in individual cases of distress, I would most deferentially suggest that the offices of the Society for the Organisation of Charity and the Repression of Mendicity are in Buckingham-street, Strand, W.C.; that the bureau of the admirable Society for the Relief of Distress is in King-street, St. James's, and that of the Metropolitan Visiting and Relief Association in Regent-street; and that the Secretary and Honorary Secretaries of these three beneficent institutions have, in a conjoint communication to the papers, signified their willingness to cope with the appalling and daily increasing misery in our midst if they are liberally supported by the donations of the charitable community.

On Monday last, in the pretty graveyard of picturesque old Hendon church, were laid to rest the remains of poor Mrs. Bateman, sometime (after the death of her worthy husband) director of the Lyceum Theatre, and at the time of her lamented death lessee and manager of the New Sadler's Wells Theatre. It was a bitter drive over the frozen roads to Hendon; but we should have been very miserable had we not tendered the last tribute of loving respect to the memory of a most accomplished lady, an intelligent woman of business, an indefatigable worker in a not very thankful vocation, a kindly and genial soul, and the fondest of mothers. It was very pitiable to see her fair young daughters weeping round her grave in the snow and kissing the flowers which they cast on the coffin, which was already a hillock of floral offerings; but, when Time has been good to these poor mourners, they may derive some consolation from the remembrance of the host of sorrowing friends who gathered round their Mother's grave. I learn that, in accordance with the late Mrs. Bateman's earnestly-expressed wish, the future management of Sadler's Wells will be undertaken by her youngest daughter, Miss Isabel Bateman, so long associated with her parent in the conduct of the theatre. Years before Miss Kate Bateman (Mrs. Crowe) came to delight and astonish us all in "Leah," I remember her as one of the bright and clever "Bateman Children;" and her sisters I am glad to have known since they were quite little girls playing in their parents' pleasant house at Brooklyn, New York. And I hope with all my heart that the bitterness of this bereavement will be assuaged, and that these ladies will all prosper exceedingly long after I am under the daisies.

OFFICERS KILLED IN SOUTH AFRICA.

Captain James MacSwiney, of the 94th Regiment, died from his wounds received in the disastrous engagement with the Dutch Transvaal insurgents, while marching from Lydenburg to Pretoria, on Dec. 20. He was born in 1854, was educated at Harrow and Cambridge, and entered the Army, as Lieutenant, in November, 1875, from the 2nd Middlesex Militia. He obtained a first-class certificate at the School of Musketry, Hythe, and was appointed Instructor of Musketry to his regiment in 1878. He served all through the Zulu War, and was present at Ulundi. He afterwards served in the campaign against Sekukuni, and obtained his captaincy on Dec. 1, last year. He was a gallant and efficient officer, whose loss is deplored not by his regiment, but by a large circle of friends.

Lieutenant Herbert Augustine Christopher Harrison, the senior Lieutenant of the regiment, who was killed in the same action, entered the Army in 1877, and became Adjutant of the 94th in October, 1879, after the termination of the war in Zululand. One who knew Lieutenant Harrison speaks of him as a gallant and efficient officer, who will be deeply regretted by his regiment. Lieutenant Harrison was third son of the late Rev. C. R. Harrison, Vicar of North Curry, Somersetshire. He entered the Army in February, 1876. At the time of his death he was senior Lieutenant and Adjutant of his regiment. In our portrait, from a photograph some years ago, he wears the cap of the 89th Regiment, in which he at first served.

Captain Alexander Lawrence Falls, of the 21st Regiment (Royal Scots Fusiliers), who is reported to have been killed in action at Potchef-troom, obtained his first commission in the Army Dec. 18, 1867; became a Lieutenant (by purchase) May 10, 1871; and a Captain Nov. 12, 1878. He served with his regiment in the Zulu war of 1879, and in the operations against Sekukuni, including the storming of Sekukuni's stronghold.

The portrait of Captain MacSwiney is from a photograph by Mr. Bassano, of Bond-street; that of Captain Falls, from one by Mr. Beattie, of Preston; and that of Lieutenant Harrison, from one by Mr. C. D. Wootton, of Taunton.

ATTEMPT TO BLOW UP A GOVERNMENT ARMOURY AT SALFORD.

All England was startled, on Saturday morning, by the news that a Fenian attempt had been made the evening before to blow up the armoury connected with the Infantry Barracks at Salford, adjacent to Manchester. Shortly before six o'clock the neighbourhood was startled by a loud explosion in the butcher's meat store of the barracks, immediately adjoining the armoury, in which are stored, in addition to the arms of the regiment, a number of rifles belonging to the four Manchester regiments of Volunteers, about 5000 weapons altogether. The explosion was exceedingly violent, destroying the shed, and scattering rubbish for several hundred yards. A woman and a boy passing at the time were seriously hurt. The boy died on Sunday night. There seems to be little doubt that dynamite was used for the explosion, and, as the neighbourhood is principally inhabited by Irish, the matter assumes a Fenian character. The armoury is not much injured, so that the object has not been attained. The investigations of the police and the military, and the evidence they have been able to obtain, confirm the impression that the explosion was a deliberate outrage. There are circumstances which point with some clearness to the object in view as the destruction of the armoury, although the authors seem to have been misled as to the part of the building in which the arms were stored, and this suggestion, in its turn, would indicate strangers as authors of the outrage, or at any rate persons who are not very familiar with the barracks. The barracks occupy a considerable area of ground abutting upon Regent-road, from which entrance is obtained. Behind the barracks is a blank boundary wall four or five yards in height. Against this wall, inside the barrack yard, is a long lean-to shed. The shed is divided by partition walls into three compartments, used respectively as a linen store, a meat store, and an armoury. In the boundary wall, and only about a yard from the ground, there are a number of strong iron grids built into the brickwork for the purpose of ventilating the sheds. The explosion occurred close to the last grid in the meat store, and close to the partition wall of the armoury, into which, probably, it was thought the grid entered. This suspicion is strengthened by the fact that the next grid bears marks of attempts to remove it. The canister which was found in the débris was, it is supposed, introduced through the grid near which the explosion occurred, the grid having first been removed, and fired by means of a fuse. It should be remembered that on the night on which the explosion occurred there was a dense fog over the whole district, and the persons who committed the outrage would have no need to fear interruption.

THE ROYAL OBSERVATORY, GREENWICH.

Several Illustrations of the different sets of apparatus provided at the Royal Observatory, for meteorological as well as for astronomical purposes, have appeared in this Journal during the past twelvemonth. Those which find place in the Magnetic Observatory Department, under the superintendence of Mr. Ellis, are not less worthy of notice. In the underground chambers here, called "the Magnetic Basement," the phenomena of terrestrial magnetism are made to register themselves by photography; the declination and variation of the compass, the variations of horizontal magnetic force, and those of vertical magnetic force, each by separate instruments; but the mode of registration is the same in each of these three cases. The magnet carries a mirror, and a special lamp is provided, the light of which, passing through a slit, falls upon the mirror, and is reflected from it to a cylinder turned by clockwork, in front of which is placed a lens to bring the beam of light to a focus before reaching the prepared photographic paper that is wrapped round the cylinder. The photographic negatives formed on this paper, being removed from day to day, are then developed by the ordinary process of photography. This system of magnetic registration has been going on at the Royal Observatory since 1847, formerly in the upper room, but was removed about sixteen years ago to the underground basement, for the sake of a more uniform temperature. The three principal magnets rest each upon a solid brick pier built up from the ground beneath, and having no contact with the surrounding building. There is a separate arrangement for measuring the earth-currents of magnetism. The barometer, and likewise the thermometer, are here also made to register their own variations respectively, by a suitable application of photography. Our Illustration shows this operation being applied to one of the thermometers in the courtyard.

In this courtyard behind the Magnetic Observatory building are the four deep-sunk thermometers, having their bulbs placed at different depths below the surface of the ground; one at the depth of 3 ft., one at 6 ft., one at 12 ft., and one at 24 ft. The variations of temperature indicated by these thermometers respectively are daily noted and recorded, which operation is the subject of one of our present Illustrations. The greater uniformity of temperature, throughout the year, at the greater depth, is of course to be expected; and the range of temperature at 24 ft. underground is but one or two degrees. It is remarkable, however, that the periods of highest and lowest temperature are very different, at or near the surface, and at a considerable depth underground; so that, whereas July is the hottest time of the year above, the hottest time is November as indicated by the deep-sunk thermometer 24 ft. below the surface of the earth. We may suppose—but this conjecture is not of scientific authority—that the accumulated heat of all the summer months remains deep in the earth, becoming still more intense during the autumn season.

THE PRINCESS OF WALES' HORSE-SHOE AT OAKHAM.

During the visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales at Normanton Park—which we illustrated on Saturday last—the Princess drove with Lady Aveland to Oakham, on Thursday, Jan. 13, and paid a visit to the ancient Castle, on the inner walls of which building are nailed numerous horse-shoes, the gift, or rather the toll, of various Royal and noble personages. A larger horse-shoe of steel, perfect in shape and of elegant workmanship, had been made at Lord Aveland's works at Normanton, for the Princess's use; but, as it was not quite completed on the 13th, she was unable to take it with her. She, however, examined the other horse-shoes in the Castle Hall, and chose the position in which she desired her own horse-shoe to be fixed, which is over the large one that is ascribed to the gift of Queen Elizabeth.

A few notes on this subject may prove interesting. The Castle Hall, otherwise called the Shire-Hall, from its having been, adapted (very inadequately) to the purposes of the Assizes and Quarter Sessions, is one of the best-preserved and most beautiful examples of domestic architecture to be found in the whole kingdom. With the exception of ruined walls and various earthworks, this hall is the only portion that remains of the ancient castle, and was probably its banquet-hall. It has a centre with aisles, having four bays, the arches being semicircular, and the capitals of the Norman pillars somewhat Corinthianesque in treatment. The window jambs are decorated with dog-tooth ornaments, the corbels are carved with quaint devices, and all the details are worthy of close study. The style of the architecture is of that period when the Norman was merging into the Early English. Its original roof may have been semicircular; its present roof was put up by George Villiers, Duke of Buckingham, who owned Burley-on-the-Hill House, near Oakham; and the entire building, the roof alone excepted, evidently remains unaltered since the day when it was built, in the reign of Henry the Second, by Walkelin de Ferrars, son of the first Earl.

The title of Farrier, Ferrier, or Ferrator was bestowed upon the faber ferrarius who shod the horses; and, either in Norman-French or in some other shape, was in use in the time of William the Conqueror. One of his knights was Henry de Ferrariis, or Ferrers, to whom he gave Tutbury, in Staffordshire; he was Master of the Horse to the Duke of Normandy, and chief of his farriers or shoeing-smiths. His descendant, Robert, Earl Ferrers, in the time of Stephen, bore for his arms (says Guillim) "argent, six horse-shoes sable;" and the present Earl has, for one of the supporters in his coat-of-arms, a reindeer charged on the shoulder with a horse-shoe. Walkelin de Ferrars, who built the Hall of Oakham Castle, was permitted—the privilege being extended to his descendants—to claim, as a mark of territorial power, a shoe from the horse of every titled person on first passing through Oakham. The bailiff of the manor had the power to stop that person's horse, and to remove one of its shoes, and to nail it upon the Castle gate; but, if a fee was paid him, he would forego his right to take off the shoe, and would provide another in its place. The donor's name was usually inscribed on this votive horse-shoe, the size of which was, at one time, regulated by the amount of the fee; so that, the more liberal the honorarium, the larger the horse-shoe. At the present day, the fee, or rather "tip," has varied from one to ten pounds.

Evelyn, in 1654, noted in his Diary that he rode "through Oakham, a pretty town in Rutland-shire, famous for the tenure of the Barons, who held it by the taking off of a shoe from every nobleman's horse that passed with his Lord through the street, unless redeemed with a certain piece of money. In token of this are certain gilded shoes nailed on the castle gate." Many of these shoes were stolen in the last century, or were used over again for a second donor; and, in 1872, when new gates were placed in the building, all the remaining shoes were removed to the interior of the building, with the exception of two that are placed on the doors as the badge of the county of Rutland. Of the shoes seen by Evelyn probably only three remain—unless we accept the genuineness of Queen Anne's horse-shoe; they bear the names of Earl Gainsborough, Henry Montague, and Earl Grey. Blount, in his "Jocular Tenures," speaks of the horse-shoe tribute to the Ferrars, and says that, with members of the Royal family, the horse-shoe must be of silver: and that a Duke of York once paid a silver horse-shoe to Lord Ferrars.

Among the horse-shoes, specially noticed by the Princess of of Wales, was that given by her Majesty, when Princess Victoria, Sept. 21, 1833; and those presented by the Duchess of Kent (same date), the Prince Regent, afterwards George IV. (on his visit to Lord Aveland's grandfather, at Normanton Park, Jan. 7, 1814), Frederic, Duke of York (1778), Duke of Cumberland (1806), Duke of Cambridge (1843), and the Duchess of Teck (on her visit to Lord Aveland, January, 1874). Other horse-shoes have been given by the Earl of Cardigan (1667), Lord Ipswich (1687). Lord Guildford (1690), Lady Percy (1771), with more modern horse-shoes by the Duke of Wellington (1838), Earls Fitzwilliam, Gainsborough, Spencer, Dudley, Aylesford, Dartmouth, Berners, Harborough, and Lonsdale; Marquisses of Exeter, Cholmondeley, and Tweedale; and Lords Aveland, Calthorpe, Ipswich, Guildford, Wensleydale, Denham, Mansfield, Redesdale, Campbell, Sondes, Hardwick, Vivian, Lyndhurst, Forester, Methuen, Garvagh, and Willoughby de Eresby.

Concerning the horse-shoe given by this last-mentioned nobleman—who lived at Grimsthorpe Castle, visited by the Prince and Princess of Wales, Jan. 12, and illustrated in our last Number, it became an article of popular faith that the shoe was of solid gold, instead of which it was merely a gilded shoe of his Lordship's favourite horse "Clinker." In 1846, the "golden" shoe was missed from its accustomed place, stolen, doubtless, by some thief who credited the popular story. Nothing more was heard of it for the next two years; when, in 1848, on the morning of the day when Lord Campbell's horse-shoe was added to the collection, the Bailiff of Oakham received, by rail, a parcel containing the missing shoe, with a request that an advertisement be inserted in the Standard, "Clinker is back." A poem which accompanied the shoe proves the thief to have been an educated as well as an "ingenious gentleman;" but the affair remains a mystery to this day.

Despite the sudden fall of snow on Tuesday night, the Prince, with Lord Aveland, drove over to Grimsthorpe Castle early on Wednesday morning, and was followed, later in the day, by Lady Aveland and the Princess, four carriages-and-four being used for the party. Luncheon was had in the state dining-room, where hangs the Gobelin tapestry, described in our last week's account of Grimsthorpe; the gold plate was used, and the Princess was taken through all the chief rooms, and was delighted with the numerous works of art that they contain, and the historical and Royal portraits mentioned by us last week. The Royal party had also tea at the Castle, and did not leave there till after dusk.

On Thursday morning the Princess suffered from neuralgia in the face; but she was able to drive from Normanton to Oakham in the afternoon in a carriage-and-four, with outriders, and reached the Castle at 3.45, in company with Lady Aveland, Lady Castlereagh, and Miss Knollys. She was received by G. H. Finch, Esq., M.P., Lord of the Manor; the Right Hon. G. J. Noel, M.P.; Lady Augusta Noel, and others. After looking at the Horse-shoes, the Princess went to the parish church, a large and beautiful building, restored, in 1859, at a cost of upwards of £6000, under the care of Sir Gilbert Scott. She was received by the Vicar, to whom she expressed her pleasure at the beauty of the building, which was gay with its Christmas decorations. Mr. H. Nicholson played the National Anthem on the organ. The Princess then paid a visit to the Hon. Hugh Lowther, whose wife, Lady Grace Lowther, is a younger sister of Lady Aveland. Oakham was gay with flags and devices, and the Princess was warmly welcomed. The last Royal visit to this county-town was when our Queen, as Princess Victoria, passed through it, in 1833.

The Princess's neuralgia prevented her from leaving Normanton on Friday to lunch with Mr. and Mrs. Finch, at Burley-on-the-Hill, where the weather also had prevented the special meet of the Cottesmore Hounds. The Princess had recovered by the evening, and the ball at Normanton went off with the greatest success.

On Saturday the Prince and Princess drove with Lord Aveland to Stamford, in an open carriage-and-four, and received a most enthusiastic welcome; proceeding to Burghley for luncheon, which was given to a large party in the grand room known as Queen Victoria's Hall. Previous to luncheon, the Prince and Princess were taken by the Marquis and Marchioness of Exeter around the house, and shown the suite of rooms that were occupied by the Queen and Prince Consort, Queen Elizabeth's room, and the priceless treasures of art with which the building is filled. The Royal party left for London at 4.20, by special train.

The Prince shot on each of the four days of his visit, and enjoyed great sport on each day; the shooting at Grimsthorpe being unusually good at the "Oaks," the wood near to the keeper's, and more especially in the Bishop Hall wood, at the spot shown in our Illustration last week. The Prince, who had three guns, did his full share of the work, assisted by Lords Aveland and Carington, Colonel Teesdale, and two other guns. When Mr. Roots, the head keeper, counted the game at the end of the day, the number was 1311, including 987 pheasants; and more game was picked up on the next day.

Altogether, the Royal visit to Normanton Park was a great success, and is a memorable event in the annals of Rutland.

THE LAND LEAGUE TRIALS IN DUBLIN.

We publish some additional "Sketches in Court," with the following commentary by our Special Artist, Mr. Wallis Mackay:

"I have put together some pages of my sketch-book which, in an incongruous manner, give some idea of the leading or most notable people to be seen from day to day in the Court of Queen's Bench, at the Four Courts, Dublin.

"The consultation of the two Judges, Mr. Justice Fitzgerald and Mr. Justice Barry, is an occurrence of frequent repetition during the controversies of the various counsel for the prosecution and the defence.

"The benign visage of the Clerk of the Court beams down upon the proceedings of the Court, from the front of the gallery, with as much sweetness now as it did upon the first day of these tedious trials.

"Every morning, before the Court has assembled, the bulky brief-bags of the many lawyers engaged are carried in by women, who are popularly known in legal chambers, as in Trinity College, by the brief appellation of 'skips.'

"The stalwart constable, who is being cross-examined on his shorthand notes, is one of many such witnesses who, by the ingenuity of Inspector French—he may be found at the bottom of the page as he is in court constantly taking notes—have mastered the useful art of phonetic stenography. Inspector French has so far developed the detective system amongst the Irish Constabulary that he now occupies an important office of his own in Dublin Castle, where he will, no doubt, mature this particular branch of peace-protection.

"The faces of the different Counsel for the prosecution and for the defence are dotted about in a higgledy-piggledy manner that, perhaps, best describes the character of the whole business. Amongst them, however, let me point out Mr. John Fox Goodman, 'The Master of the Crown Office,' to whose untiring efforts may be attributed the comfort of the lawyers, the press, and the general public, who have attended the courts during these trials.

"I find the face of 'Scrab' Nally (why 'Scrab' I cannot say) nestling below the feet of the constable. Mr. Nally seems to have spent his time between sedition and 'squaring the authorities.' He is a subject of much humour in court, but of little value, for or against the traversers, who are arraigned, and who will shortly be convicted or acquitted in the cause of Irish Land Leagueism."

The speech of Mr. Macdonogh, Q.C., for the defence of Mr. Parnell and others, began on Thursday last week, and continued next day. Witnesses for the defence, but only a few, were called on Monday, to prove the distressed condition of the Irish tenantry in 1879, when the Land League was formed. Mr. M'Laughlin, Q.C., then addressed the jury for one of the "traversers," Mr. Brennan. On Tuesday, Mr. Peter O'Brien, Q.C., made his speech for another, namely Mr. T. D. Sullivan, M.P. On Wednesday, Mr. J. A. Curran made his speech for Messrs. Walsh, Harris, and Nally; and Mr. Nolan, for Mr. Sexton, M.P. The trial might possibly be concluded this week, or early next week.

The Citizen Almanack, embellished with portraits of the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs, contains a great mass of information concerning the civic, benevolent, and other institutions of the City. Sir Joseph Causton and Sons have issued their Almanack for the current year. It is tastefully mounted and framed, and the calendar is a creditable specimen of decorative printers' art.

The half-yearly election of children to the Asylum for Fatherless Children at Reedham, near Croydon, took place on Tuesday at the City Terminus Hotel. The number of eligible candidates for the twenty vacancies—thirteen boys and seven girls—was 103. The annual subscription list showed a small increase, but an additional £2000 is required to be laid out on the building.

THE SILENT MEMBER.

The Parliamentary deadlock, brought about by what Lord Beaconsfield might call the exuberant verbosity of the Home-Rule members from the Emerald Isle, has been felt most palpably in the House of Lords. A member strolling in from the Lower House may have observed Earl Granville disporting himself with careless ease, as if to the manner born, in the place allotted by custom to the leader; and may then have noticed the noble Lord the ex-Premier sedulously preserving a sphinx-like visage on the centre of the front Opposition bench, his attached follower, Lord Cranbrook, being usually seated next him; but a sumptuous array of empty benches, very sparsely dotted with peers, has been the general spectacle presented since the opening night of the Session. At length a noble Earl, who is, perhaps, the most amiable of peers, was driven to protest against this stagnation. Lord Fortescue on Monday gained no immediate advantage by suggesting that the Government should introduce their measures for "the better protection of life and property in Ireland" in the Upper House. Earl Granville blandly assured his "noble relative" that precedents seemed to show that the progress of the bills would be hindered rather than accelerated by the adoption of the proposal. Replying to Lord Redesdale's novel recommendation of a "constitutional despotism," to be ushered in by a message from her Majesty introducing a bill for the suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act in Ireland, the Lord Chancellor waved the quaint notion aside, but significantly hinted that it might become the duty of the Executive Government to exceed the ordinary course of the law, and seek the sanction of Parliament afterwards. Are there not other Ministerial bills, however, that might fitly be brought before the Lords first? Earl Spencer on Monday secured the first reading of a measure for the prevention of floods—a bill particularly seasonable in view of the deplorable distress occasioned in South London by Tuesday's overflow of the Thames—and Lord Selborne had the satisfaction of passing the Augmentation of Benefices Act Amendment Bill. But has not the Cabinet its Bankruptcy Bill ready for the consideration of their Lordships?

The Earl of Beaconsfield has been driven by the golden silence of the House of Lords to pay one of his rare visits to the Chamber of—silvery speech? It had been observed on Thursday week that the noble Earl was not altogether exhilarated in "another place" by Lord Northbrook's platitudes respecting naval cadets. Hearing his confidential scout, Lord Rowton, report that diversion was to be had in the Commons, Lord Beaconsfield presumably sniffed the battle from afar. He, at any rate, appears to have lost no time in assuming his long overcoat, and in accompanying Lord Rowton to the crowded Peers' Gallery of the Lower House. There (in about the same seat he occupied when he commiserated Sir Stafford Northcote towards the close of the twenty-six hours' sitting which ended at 6.10 p.m. on Wednesday, Aug. 1, 1877), the ex-Premier snugly ensconced himself on the front bench, having his inseparable "Gil Blas" immediately behind him, and manifestly took a lively interest in the incident then engaging the attention of a well-attended House. The complacent leader of the infinitesimal "Fourth Party," Lord Randolph Churchill, had airily risen to inquire (punctuating his queries, as it were, with many angular gestures) "whether, in view of the critical state of Ireland, the Irish Government intends to cancel Mr. Davitt's ticket-of-leave"? Thereupon, the excitable Home Rule members for Ireland were in a ferment. Their leader, Mr. Charles Stewart Parnell, was equal to the occasion. Many visitors to the House have been surprised to find the young Irish agitator so quiet in manner, so deliberate in delivery, so little like a typical democratic leader as the hon. member for the City of Cork is. Scrutinised closely through his little pocket eye-glass by Lord Beaconsfield (who seemed hugely amused by the episode), Mr. Parnell instantly rose to put a pungent counter-question to Lord Churchill. This being declared out of order by the Speaker, the slender captain of the Home Rulers (not improved in personal appearance by the loss of his beard) was not to be denied, and obtained his triumph over the ornamental member of the Fourth Party by asking Mr. Forster "whether Mr. Davitt was not a convict at large on a ticket-of-leave during the time the late Government was in office, and the noble Lord's father was Lord Lieutenant of Ireland?"—a query the badgered Irish Secretary was bound to answer in the affirmative, aptly signifying, at the same time, that the Government had their eyes on the gentleman in question.

Mr. Forster, weighed down by the seriousness of the crisis in Ireland, is wont to answer the manifold parochial questions put by the irrepressible Home Rulers with scrupulous care. Whether, seeing that obstruction to business is plainly the main object for which he is persistently cross-examined at greater and greater length, the blunt and unimaginative Secretary of Ireland might not materially curtail the unduly protracted period for the torture of Ministers, is a suggestion that may not be altogether thrown away. If not wit, that which is said to be the soul of it, brevity, might be employed by Mr. Forster to shorten the preliminary business which is now intolerably prolonged for a set purpose.

Mr. Parnell and the group of zealous followers who throng the second and third benches below the gangway on the Opposition side have at last, however, overtaxed the patience of a forbearing House. Unusual indulgence had been shown Mr. Parnell in permitting the wearisome debate on his amendment to the Address to be prolonged till Friday se'nnight. Then his amendment against "suspending any of the constitutional rights of the Irish people" was negatived by a majority of 378—435 to 57. But when, on Monday, Mr. Justin M'Carthy initiated a fresh week of Irish debate by moving the addition to the Address of the following paragraph:—

> And humbly to pray her Majesty to refrain from using the naval, military, and constabulary forces of the Crown in enforcing ejectments for non-payment of rent in Ireland until the measures proposed to be submitted to her Majesty with regard to the ownership of land in Ireland have been decided upon by Parliament,

Mr. Gladstone fairly roused the House by his vigorous denunciation of the Fabian tactics of the Home-Rule party. The Prime Minister (who was cheered on his reappearance for the first time since his recovery from his cold) remorselessly demonstrated the unreasonable nature of Mr. M'Carthy's proposition; and emphatically indorsed by the House was the point that "if evictions are the main cause of crime in Ireland, let us proceed to legislate on the subject of the land laws." In answer to this, Mr. Dillon, Mr. O'Connor Power, and Mr. Parnell insisted that eviction on a large scale would take place this year in Ireland were the amendment not adopted; that bloodshed would be provoked; and Mr. Parnell candidly admitted that a separate Parliament for Ireland was the goal of his ambition. The Speaker, it may be remarked, was stimulated to restrain the discursiveness of Irish members; and Sir Stafford Northcote warmly protested against the assumption by Mr. Parnell of "a power equal to the Queen."

The Marquis of Hartington, who is justly held to have improved his position considerably since he has displayed more Parliamentary backbone as deputy leader of the House, firmly took up the reins when Mr. Gladstone left on Monday night, and manfully tried to drive the legislative coach over the obstacle of obstruction. A majority of 183 supported the noble Lord in his effort to stay the adjournment. But he subsequently permitted the discussion to drag its slow length over Tuesday night, when Mr. Justin M'Carthy's amendment was rejected by 164—201 to 37—the reduction of the Home-Rule minority being to some extent attributable to the secession of Mr. Shaw, Mr. P. J. Smyth, and other Home-Rule members from the Parnell wing of the party.

The Speaker offered Irish members yet another warning on Wednesday. Mr. Dawson's introduction of a fresh amendment to the Address, praying that a bill assimilating the Irish borough franchise to that of England, was the provocation. Indorsing Mr. Gladstone's opinion, the Speaker deemed it necessary to remind Mr. Dawson that if his example were generally followed "the Address to the Crown would not be moved and carried within the compass of a "Session." Mr. Forster showed the Government favoured the extension of the Irish borough franchise at a more opportune time. Yet even this rational statement did not suffice to prevent the Irish Brigade from entering into a fresh exposition of grievances. Parliament, it is clear, must master the irreconcilable Left; or the Home Rulers will master Parliament.

Captain Gilden, the treasurer and honorary secretary of the Afghan War Relief Fund, makes another appeal on behalf of the widows and orphans of all those who lost their lives in Afghanistan since the commencement of the war in 1878. He states that although the existence of the fund is little known, private applications have already been made by those who are in this country from 22 officers' widows with 48 children, and 42 men's widows with 77 children. The subscriptions received to the present date amount to £2280. In the late Zulu war the numbers entitled to relief were:—Ten officers' widows with twenty-two children, and eighty men's widows with 120 children. For these the public generously responded to the amount of over £29,000. The committee feel confident that the public will, with the above returns (however incomplete) before them, make a hearty response.

MUSIC.

Herr Jean Becker made his reappearance, after many years' interval, at the Popular Concert of last Saturday afternoon, when he sustained the leading violin part in Schubert's quartet in D minor, and played Rust's sonata in the same key for violin solo (with pianoforte accompaniment). The violinist's resonant tone and skilful execution were successfully displayed in each instance. The other members of the quartet party were, as usual, MM. L. Ries and Zerbini, and Signor Piatti. Mdlle. Marie Krebs played, with much effect, Beethoven's solo sonata, "Les Adieux, l'Absence, et le Retour," and also took the pianoforte part in Mendelssohn's trio in D minor. Mr. E. Lloyd sang with fine style Haydn's "In native worth" and Signor Piatti's serenade "Awake, awake!" (with the composer's violoncello obbligato accompaniment). At the evening concert of Monday last the quartet party was the same as on Saturday, and Mdlle. Krebs was again the solo pianist. The quartets were Schumann's in A minor, and Haydn's in D major, from op. 64. Mdlle. Krebs played, as her solo piece, Mendelssohn's "Variations Sérieuses," and was associated with Signor Piatti in Schumann's "Stucke im Volkston," for piano and violoncello. Mdlle. Friedlander was the vocalist.

At last week's London Ballad Concert the following new songs were successfully given:—"The First Letter" (J. L. Molloy), "The Last Watch" (Pinsuti), and "The Children of the City" and "Little Ben Lee" (both by S. Adams). These were rendered, respectively, by Miss M. Davies, Mr. Maas, Madame Patey, and Mr. Maybrick. The third of the evening concerts of this year took place on Wednesday, when a varied programme was announced, associated with the names of Misses M. Davies and C. Samuell, Mesdames Antoinette Sterling and Patey, Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. J. Maas, Mr. Santley, and Mr. Maybrick as solo vocalists, and the South London Choral Association in various part-songs.

Miss Josephine Agabeg (pianist) gave a concert at Steinway Hall on Monday evening with a varied programme of vocal and instrumental music.

A special service was held at Westminster Abbey on Wednesday evening, when portions of Bach's "Christmas Oratorio" were performed.

The fourth concert of the tenth season of the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society—directed by Mr. Barnby—took place on Thursday evening, when Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" ("Lobgesang") and Rossini's "Stabat Mater" were performed—the solo singers announced having been Misses A. Marriott, Thorndike, and Hope Glenn, Mr. E. Lloyd, and Mr. R. Hilton. Mr. Carrodus's concert—including his performance of violin solos by various masters—also took place on Thursday evening, at St. James's Hall.

On the following evening the Sacred Harmonic Society gave the third performance of its forty-ninth season. The programme having comprised Handel's coronation anthem, "The King shall rejoice," Cherubini's "Requiem," and Mendelssohn's "Athalie" music. The principal solo singers were to be Misses C. Penna, J. Jones, and Orridge; the recitation of the text of "Athalie" having been assigned to Mr. C. Fry.

On Tuesday evening next the anniversary of the birthday of Burns will be celebrated by Scotch concerts at the Royal Albert Hall and St. James's Hall. At the former Madame Christine Nilsson and other eminent vocalists are to appear; for the other occasion Mr. Sims Reeves and his son, Mr. Herbert Reeves, are announced as among the principal artists.

"LOLA, THE BELLE OF BACCARATO."

This piece—produced at the Olympic Theatre on Saturday last—like many of its kind that have recently appeared, belongs rather to the class of opéra-bouffe than to that of opéra-comique, its humour and importance consisting more in the fun of stage action and incidents than in its music. The drama is cleverly written by Mr. Frank Marshall. The scene is laid in the principality of Baccarato, on the shores of the Adriatic. Prince Alexis, who is in want of money, turns part of his palace into a gambling-saloon, and attracts to Baccarato a number of visitors, including Mr. Vere de Vere, proprietor of a "society journal," entitled Virtue. Here also arrives the Senorita Lola de Florez, en route to England, with a view to becoming a "professional beauty." The Prince and Vere de Vere both wish to marry Lola, who has made a wonderful coup at the tables, under the direction of her princely and literary advisers. While these two are scheming against each other a Mexican, Edgardo de Toros, appears and claims Lola as his affianced bride. The rest of the plot can be told in few words. Edgardo, who is banished, declares that he will return when least expected. The two rivals plot against each other during a fête given in honour of the Prince's approaching marriage, he believing that he has won Lola for himself. Edgardo returns, disguised as the Marquez di Castello di Spagna, breaks the bank, causes a mutiny in the army and a rebellion among the populace, dethrones the Prince, and reigns in his stead.

The music (by Signor Orsini), without being original or specially comic in style, is pleasingly melodious throughout. Among the most successful pieces were Lola's air, "I'm a guileless child;" that for Edgardo, "Once more my arms," the finale to the first act; the solo for Lola, in the second act, "Jewels fit for any Queen;" the quintet in the same act; Edgardo's air, "Oh, has she forgotten the days of our childhood?" and the duet for him and Lola, "Love me."

The piece has been well placed on the stage, and its representation is altogether effective, the characters being efficiently sustained by Miss E. Loveday (Lola), Miss Everard (Lola's aunt), Mr. Rosenthal (the Prince), Mr. Walsham (Edgardo), Mr. De Lange (Vere de Vere), and others.

Mr. Broadhurst, M.P., has been offered the post of Inspector of Factories by the Home Secretary, but has declined its acceptance, on the ground that his duty to his constituency and to the trades' interests with which he is connected forbids him to resign his seat in Parliament.

Under the direction of the National Skating Association, the Amateur Skating Championship of England race came off on Monday at Grantchester, Cambridge, in the presence of a very large company. In the amateur race Norman skated well, and for the second year won the championship; Webber, the Tebbutts, and Rolph proving themselves formidable opponents. In the Open race the champion won.

There have been great rejoicings this week at the Jews' Free School to celebrate the attainment by Mr. Walter de Rothschild, eldest son of Sir Nathaniel de Rothschild, M.P., of the age of thirteen, at which age a ceremony similar to that of confirmation is celebrated by orthodox Israelites. Presents have been distributed to all the 3000 pupils of the school and to the teachers by Sir Nathaniel de Rothschild, and entertainments provided for the children in four batches on successive evenings. Tons of cake and fruit were bought for the feasts.

DISTURBED IRELAND: A VISIT FI

"RORY OF THE HILLS."

RORY OF THE HILLS.

The terrible name, "Rory of the Hills," which has frequently been used as an impersonation of popular vengeance in threatening letters meant to intimidate the victims of Irish agrarian conspiracy, reminds us of "Captain Swing," in England fifty or sixty years ago, supposed to be the commander of an unlimited gang of incendiaries, who vowed destruction to the farmers' barns and cornricks. But the reality is too surely present and powerful in many parts of western Ireland at this unhappy time; and we all know, from the daily reports of fresh outrages perpetrated in the name of the Land League, if not by its direct instigation, that "Rory of the Hills" is not a mere bogey or bugbear, and that grievous acts of cruelty and mischief have often attended the nocturnal visits of his myrmidons to the homesteads and farms of those who resist the illegal mandates of that association. Our Artist has delineated an exciting incident of this kind, in which a sturdy farmer, whom we should take for a Scotchman, with his wife hanging upon his arm and imploring him not to be rash, confronts the band of ruffians at his house-door, and sternly expostulates against their ruthless malice; but we fear that his arguments will have little effect.

THE COURT.

Her Majesty gave an audience to Earl Granville on Thursday week, the Earl afterwards dining with the Royal family. The next day General Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar and Admiral Ryder arrived at Osborne and joined the Queen's dinner circle. The Duke and Duchess of Connaught arrived last Saturday, and the Empress Eugénie, with Mdlle. Louise Rouher and the Due de Bassano, dined with her Majesty. Divine service was performed at Osborne on Sunday by the Rev. Arthur Peile, Vicar of Holy Trinity, Ventnor. Her Majesty, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, and Prince Leopold were present. The Queen and the Royal family have had some sleighing; and the younger members have skated. Princess Louise of Lorne has left Osborne.

The Prince and Princess of Wales returned to Sandringham last Saturday from Normanton. The Prince came to London on Tuesday.

The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh have visited the studio of Mr. Oswald Brierly, to see his picture of Lord Henry Seymour in the Rainbow sinking a galleon of the Spanish Armada at the engagement off Gravelines, 1588. The picture is one of the Armada series being painted by Mr. Brierly for the Hon. W. J. Clarke, of Melbourne.

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught, before leaving town for Osborne, had some skating at Prince's Grounds, and also went to St. James's Theatre.

Prince Leopold has been to see the Midgets.

The Field Marshal Commanding-in-Chief held a Levée at one o'clock on Wednesday at the Horse Guards.

The Queen of Sweden, attended by the Countess Electra and Countess Wedel Jarlsberg, and the Lord Chamberlain, Baron Heckenstone, left Flushing on Thursday week by the Zeeland Steam-Ship Company's steamer Princess Elizabeth, and, on arriving at Queenborough the next morning, proceeded by the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway to Herne-hill, where the saloon-carriage in which the Royal party travelled was attached to a London and South-Western train en route for Bournemouth. Crag Head House has been taken for her Majesty, who intends spending three or four months at Bournemouth.

The Right Hon. the Speaker commenced his Parliamentary dinners on Wednesday, when, according to the usual etiquette, the leading members of the Government dined with the right hon. gentleman.

FASHIONABLE MARRIAGES.

The marriage of Mr. Leopold de Rothschild, youngest son of the late Baron Lionel de Rothschild, with Mdlle. Marie, daughter of the late M. Perugia, of Trieste, was celebrated on Wednesday afternoon at the Synagogue, Great Portland-street, before a crowded congregation. The entrance and corridors of the Synagogue, as well as the space before the Ark, were decorated with tasteful arrangements of evergreens, ferns, palms, azaleas, and camellias. The impressive Hebrew marriage ritual was most effectively conducted by the Rev. A. L. Green, the officiating priest, assisted by the Rev. S. Lyons, secretary and registrar of the Synagogue, and the Rev. MM. Hast and Keizer. The musical service was exquisitely rendered by the well-trained choir, assisted by contingents from other synagogues. The prayers and chants were recited by the officiating priest and choir, and an address to the bride and bridegroom and to the congregation followed. The bride wore a long and flowing bridal veil, and was attended by four bridesmaids, Mdlle. Beatrice de Rothschild, Miss Luna Sassoon, Miss Forbes, and Miss A. Forbes (of Newe). The holders of the bridal canopy were Baron Arthur de Rothschild, son of the late Baron Nathaniel, of Paris; M. Perugia, brother of the bride; M. E. de Rothschild, son of Baron Alphonse, of Paris; and M. Lambert, of Brussels. The bridegroom was supported by Baroness Alphonse de Rothschild and Sir N. M. de Rothschild, M.P. The supporters of the bride were Madame Perugia, her mother, and M. G. Landauer, of Trieste, her maternal uncle. Mr. Alfred de Rothschild, the bridegroom's brother, was "best man." Among the company were the Prince of Wales, the Earl and Countess of Rosebery, and many of the most influential members of the Hebrew community.

The marriage of Count Francis Valentine Lützow, eldest son of his Excellency Count Lützow, Austrian Privy Councillor and Chamberlain, with Mdlle. Anna de Bornemann, daughter of the late Minister of Mecklenburg in Paris and Madame de Bornemann, and niece of Count and Countess Edmond Batthyany, was solemnised on Tuesday at The Oratory, Brompton. Notwithstanding the intense inclemency of the weather, a large number of the relatives and friends of the bride and bridegroom were present on the occasion.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

Beginning of Courses:—Next Week: Professor Schäfer, first of eleven lectures on the Blood, Tuesday, Jan. 25; Mr. Francis Hueffer, first of four lectures on the Troubadours, on Thursday, Jan. 27; Professor Sidney Colvin, first of four lectures on the Amazons, on Saturday, Jan. 29. The discourse on Friday next, the 28th, will be by Dr. Arthur Schuster, on the Teachings of Modern Spectroscopy.

Mr. J. Russell Lowell, the United States Minister, has given £40 to the funds of the Working Men's College, Great Ormond-street. Concurrently with the new term the eighth series of Free Popular Lectures at this college has begun, and the lecturers appearing in the list are Professors H. Morley and J. W. Hales, Mr. Leslie Stephen, and others.

Mr. William Henry Nicholls, of 4, Lincoln's-inn-fields, solicitor, has been appointed a commissioner for taking and receiving affidavits in and for the courts in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, Canada.

It is stated that the trustees under the will of the late Mr. E. Harris, of Preston, purpose founding in that town an orphan home and a science and art school. They will expend on the first-named institution £100,000, and on the other £50,000.

Sir Philip Cunliffe Owen, in distributing the prizes won by the students of the Kidderminster School of Art, commented favourably on the growth of art-culture in the kingdom, and said that the directors of South Kensington Museum were prepared to send loans of art-produce to provincial schools.

Mr. W. Done-Bushell, treasurer to the Cardiff Infirmary, has been authorized to place the name of Mr. James H. Insole, of Ely Court, on the subscription-list towards the erection of a new infirmary in the town for £1000, and the names of Mr. Insole's two sons for £250 each.

A new industrial school at Desford, near Leicester, which has been erected at a cost of £20,000, was on Monday opened by Mr. Mundella, M.P., who, in the course of a brief address on the subject of education, pointed out the impolicy of sending juvenile offenders to prison for trivial offences.

The council of the Woolwich and Plumstead High School have unanimously elected Mr. George Turner, M.A., second master of the Loughborough Grammar School, Leicestershire, to be head master, in succession to Mr. Loftus Monroe, appointed to be one of her Majesty's Inspectors of Schools.

Sir H. Selwin-Ibbetson, M.P., has been elected president of the Essex Agricultural Society, in succession to Mr. W. Nunn; and Mr. Courtauld, M.P., has been chosen president of the Essex Chamber of Agriculture, in succession to Mr. George Allen Lowndes.

The Joseph Hume scholarship in political economy has been awarded by the council of University College to Miss Ada Heather-Bigg, LL.A., St. Andrews, and Moral Science scholar 1877 (Cambridge higher local examination). This is the first time that this scholarship in political economy has been carried off by a lady.

In consequence of the large quantity of floating ice in the Thames, the race for the sculling championship of the world and £1000 between Hanlan, of Toronto, and Laycock, of Sydney, which was to have been rowed on Monday, has been postponed until this (Saturday) afternoon, when, if practicable, the men will be in their boats at four o'clock.

A Corporation report recently issued states the cost of the Temple Bar Memorial to be £10,690 0s. 7d. Of this £5260 is payable to Messrs. Mowlem and Co. for the foundations, scaffolding, granite work, masonry, carving, and modelling; £2152 to Mr. Boehm, R.A., for the statues in marble of the Queen and the Prince of Wales; £1081 to Mr. Birch, A.R.A., for the "Griffin" in bronze; and £1603 for the busso-relievos.

The polling for Wigan on Tuesday ended in the return of Mr. Francis Sharp Powell, the Conservative candidate, in succession to Lord Lindsay, also a Conservative, who has been called to the peerage as Earl of Crawford and Balcarres. Mr. John Lancaster was the Liberal candidate. Mr. Duncan McLaren, one of the members for the city of Edinburgh, has resigned his seat.

Tuesday's Gazette announces that the Queen has authorised Mr. Gerald Fitzgerald, C.M.G., to accept and wear the insignia of the Third Class of the Order of the Osmanieh, which the Khedive has conferred upon him. Mr. Albert Richard Brown has also authority to accept and wear the insignia of the Fourth Class of the Order of the Rising Sun, which has been conferred upon him by the Emperor of Japan.

Sir E. Watkin, M.P., in presiding on Tuesday at the half-yearly meeting of the Metropolitan Railway Company, said that, with respect to the completion of the Inner Circle, the directors had made what they considered a final proposal to the public bodies. That was under consideration, and, if rejected, they must consider the Inner Circle at an end for the present. If accepted, they would call the shareholders together.

The entries for the Kennel Club's exhibition of dogs, which opened at the Crystal Palace on Monday, comprise over 1200 dogs, including 27 bloodhounds, 84 mastiffs, 91 St. Bernards, 22 Newfoundlands, 22 deerhounds, 42 pointers, 92 setters, 53 retrievers, 100 spaniels, 180 fox terriers, 52 dachshunds, 86 sheep dogs, 9 Pomeranians, 11 poodles, 46 bulldogs, 32 bull terriers, 32 black-and-tan terriers, and 17 Skyes.

Yesterday week the Earl of Aberdeen, supported by Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., presided at the opening of a coffee tavern belonging to the Coffee Palace Company (Limited). The new tavern, which is situated in High-street, Notting-hill, has a spacious hall connected with it designed for a reading and smoking room, and there are forty bed-rooms for the use of working-men at a reasonable charge.

The French National Society, founded by some of the leading French residents in London for the purpose of bringing together their fellow-countrymen either temporarily or permanently engaged in the metropolis for social, commercial, and artistic purposes, was formally opened last Saturday evening by a dinner held at the Freemasons' Tavern. The chair was taken by M. Etienne Ralli, the president of the society, who was supported by the Comte d'Annay, First Secretary to the French Embassy (representing M. Challemel Lacour, who was unable to attend through illness), the Lord Mayor, and 300 other gentlemen.

A Parliamentary paper has been issued containing a series of reports from foreign countries on the working of the Clôture. The list embraces Austria, Germany, Belgium, France, United States, Italy, Spain, and Switzerland. The reports are almost all of the same character, showing in each of these States the existence and practical exercise over speakers in the Legislative Chambers by the Houses themselves and by their respective presidents of a control unknown in the English House of Commons.

A meeting of the Victoria (Philosophical) Institute took place last Monday, when a paper on "Pliocene Man in America," by Dr. Southall, of Virginia, United States, was read; after which the results of all recent researches on the subject were described in a paper by Dr. Dawson, F.R.S., of M'Gill College, Montreal. Professor M'Kenny Hughes (Woodwardian Professor of Geology at Cambridge), Mr. J. E. Howard, F.R.S., Mr. Mello, F.G.S., and others took part in considering the subject. Twenty new members were elected.

Mr. Fawcett, M.P., addressing the Metropolitan Board of Works yesterday week in support of a memorial in favour of preserving Kingsland-green as an open space and recreation-ground, said that amongst the many useful works carried out by the Board their efforts in the direction of preserving open spaces would rank as high as any. The Board had under their consideration the difficulties connected with carrying out the Artisans' and Labourers' Dwellings Improvement Acts, and approved of the report of their works committee, who had submitted suggestions to the Home Secretary which, if carried out, would practically result in the passing of a new Act giving increased powers to the Board under the authority of the Home Department to deal with unsanitary areas.

A paper on the subject of Mr. Leigh Smith's Arctic Discoveries was read last Monday evening, by Captain Markham, at the Royal Geographical Society. It stated that the Arctic Expedition, undertaken by Mr. Leigh Smith, during the summer of last year, has met with unparalleled success, and that the discovery of a navigable route to Franz-Josef Land, and of the coast trending westward and then northward, will probably open a new era in Polar discovery. The exploring steam-vessel, the Eira, 360 tons burden, was built for ice navigation, and was manned by twenty-five persons, among whom were Mr. Leigh Smith and Mr. Grant, who had made three previous Arctic voyages, while at Lerwick four Shetlanders joined the complement. They visited Spitzbergen, Amsterdam Island, and Magdalena Bay, and on July 31 commenced the attempt to advance northwards across the Barents Sea to the coast of Franz-Josef Land, which was reached on Aug. 14. "The problem," says Captain Markham, "was solved, and the route was proved to be easily navigable, which will surely lead future explorers to new and important discoveries in the Far North." After giving an interesting narrative of incidents connected with the expedition, the lecturer concluded:—"The voyage of the Eira must be pronounced to have been the most important summer cruise that has ever been made in the Arctic regions. Mr. Leigh Smith's discoveries in 1880 will form a fresh starting-point for future Polar discovery, and they thus open a new and, let us hope, a brilliant and fruitful chapter in the glorious history of Arctic exploration."

THE WEATHER.

Reports received from all parts of the country show that frost has set in with exceptional severity. In London the cold of Sunday night and Monday morning is stated to have been the severest experienced since the year 1881, 20 deg. of frost having been registered. Navigation on the Thames is almost stopped. All the available metropolitan skating-ponds were thronged. Throughout the provinces skating has been general. In the north several rivers have been frozen over, which has not happened for twenty years. On the York-hire moors and in Wales the snow lies to a great depth, and it is feared that many sheep must have perished.

But on Tuesday the weather was phenomenal. The state of things on that day are well set forth in the Times of Wednesday:—"We have heard a good deal of late about obstruction; but no such block of human business, no such closing up of the ways of the English world, has befallen us within living memory as that which has visited the South of England, and, indeed, for all we know in our sudden isolation, the whole of the British isles, in the last four-and-twenty hours. Frost we know, snow we know, gales we know, high tides we know; but it has been reserved for the 18th of January, 1881, to show what a combination of all these forces together can do to reduce the greatest city in the world to a condition of helpless isolation and inactivity. A walk across London suddenly assumed the dimensions of an Alpine adventure. The snow was as capricious in depth as that of the Grand Plateau; the biting wind laden with icy particles was no mean imitation of the tourmente. As to locomotion, that has been almost impossible, except to stout pedestrians or to those who could reach the underground railways. The services of the latter were legitimately dwelt upon by Sir Edward Watkin in his speech at the meeting of the Metropolitan Railway yesterday. Heavy traffic in the roads was stopped altogether, the few cabmen who plied had to protect their eyes with veils and spectacles, and here and there an omnibus might be seen ploughing through the muffled streets like a Russian post crossing the steppes. Hansom cabs were driven 'tandem,' with improvised postboys sturdily braving the pitiless storm. Suburban railways were thrown out of gear, and tramcars were brought to a standstill. All this has been done, and the whole traffic of London has been stopped by a hard frost, a few hours of driving snow, and a gale of wind hardly matched in force and ferocity since the memorable squall which swept through London at the time when the ill-fated Eurydice went down in the Channel, nearly three years ago. The inhabitants of the southern shores of the Thames have also had to bear the stress of an unprecedentedly high tide. The south-east wind, piling up a flowing tide, poured the water into the low-lying districts, and brought upon them a disastrous flood laden with floating blocks of ice. More than a hundred barges are said to have been sunk, and the pier at Woolwich has been wholly washed away. Brighton, Portsmouth, and Exeter are blocked with snow, and the whole traffic of the southern and western lines is either thrown into confusion or suspended altogether. At Dover, only one packet arrived and none sailed, while those which attempted to make the passage were unable to approach the Admiralty Pier, and were forced to put to sea for safety. The Irish mail did not reach London till the afternoon. The majesty of the law itself had no immunity from mishap. The two Judges who left London yesterday morning to open the assize at Maidstone found themselves snowed up at Shoreham, just two and twenty miles from London, after seven hours' travelling."

NEW BOOKS.

Melancholy reflections are suggested by such a book as Across Patagonia: by Lady Florence Dixie (Richard Bentley and Son); or, if not by the book, by the reasons acknowledged for its existence. Here is a lady, with all the coveted advantages of life, with wealth, rank, and troops of friends, if appearances go for anything, and with health and strength to enjoy her advantages; a lady with a name well known not only in the society where her sex is supreme but in the field of what are commonly called manly sports, and yet she is so bored to death by civilisation that she feels irresistibly moved to fly away from it for a while and reset the edge of her being with a touch of primitive barbarism. If this be the effect of civilisation, with its concomitants, upon those who have the best of it, what is to be said of those who have the worst? Of those whose spirits are dulled by its constant demands upon them, without any chance of being quickened by the recreations, whether in doors or out of doors, which it permits to the rich and the leisurely? Yet they, too, feel the need of change, of travel, of "a more vigorous emotion than that afforded by the monotonous round" of their daily vocations; and no wonder if, for lack of the means of satisfying their need by contemplation of a refreshing barbarism abroad, they relapse into a fitful barbarism at home. If the strain of civilisation is felt so severely by the gentler sex in the upper spheres, the rougher sex in the lower spheres can hardly be expected to bear it without chafing and without an occasional exhibition of the worst propensities of the noble savage. But perhaps the lady whose book has led to these remarks is a notable exception; at any rate, her book is exceptionally interesting, from the nature of it and from the sex of the writer, and it is illustrated "from sketches by Julius Beerbohm, engraved by Whymper and Pearson," in a manner which enhances the interest. It is a long while since Captain Musters published his account of the Patagonians; but, to speak from memory, his work was calculated rather to diminish the prestige of those barbarians as giants equal in height to the fabled Polyphemus, and subsisting chiefly on raw flesh, human by preference. Lady Florence, who, by-the-way, does not add much to our knowledge of the Patagonians from the moral and social point of view—indeed, she had little opportunity of studying them, being more intent upon shooting their game—gives the following evidence as to their physical proportions:—"I was not struck so much by their height," she says, "as by their extraordinary development of chest and muscle. . . . I do not think the average height of the men exceeded six feet, and as my husband stands six feet two inches I had a favourable opportunity of forming an accurate estimate. . . . The women were mostly of the ordinary height, though I noticed one who must have been quite six feet, if not more." Of course a race which averages six feet in height may be fairly included among the Anakim. As regards their taste for uncooked food, human flesh by preference, they seem to have outgrown their cannibalism, if they were ever justly accused of it, but to retain their liking for the raw article in the matter of meat, a liking which must save a great deal of trouble. "We soon killed a guanaco," says Lady Florence, "and were busily engaged in the laborious occupation of cutting it up, when we heard a grunt, and looking up, saw an Indian behind us on horseback. He watched our clumsy efforts for some time in silence, occasionally breaking out into loud laughter, and then, dismounting, took out his own knife, and with a few adroit and easy cuts, did the whole trick in no time. He rewarded himself for his labours by cutting out the kidneys and the heart, and eating them raw and bloody, there and then. This disgusting repast over, he smacked his lips, mounted his horse, and rode away, grinning eloquently, and leaving us wondering and horrified." It will be seen that there is nothing mincing about Lady Florence's style of writing, any more than about that of her riding, hunting, and shooting; and in this bold and dashing, as well as frequently amusing, style she fills some two hundred and fifty pages of very easy reading with gossip referring chiefly to sporting matters, to guanacoes, ostriches, pumas, wild horses, tame horses, dogs, and an egotistically philosophic dog, with a superannine, and even superhuman, regard for number one.

A collection of short, easily read, and, for the most part, pleasantly written essays, concerning everything under the sun, is contained in the volume entitled Free Lance: by Charles J. Dunphie and Albert King (Tinsley Brothers); and one of these authors, Mr. Dunphie, not long since gave the public a taste of his quality in a similar volume, entitled "Sweet Sleep." That taste may have created a desire for more; and, if so, here is that more, and plenty of it, with a diversity of subjects ranging from "The Necessity and Inconvenience of being Born" to "Among the Horses," the latter leading up to a description of what is to be seen and heard at Barnet Cattle Fair. One of the two writers seems to have been a great traveller, having gone, to his infinite discomfort, as far as Boulogne, across the "silver streak;" and either his experience has been exceptional, or he has a tendency to throw a "glamour" over whatever is foreign to the depreciation of whatever is English. In Boulogne, according to him, people live a sort of life which would throw into the shade that of Saturn's golden age or of the early, unsophisticated Christians; that is to say, the natives of the place so live: the wicked English, who are by no means few or far between in that famous French seaport, ought to learn a lesson from them. It is in Boulogne that your chin is shaved by a pretty Frenchwoman in a pretty shop, so tidy and clean that you might eat your dinner off the boards of the floor, and as full of sweet smells as the perfumed air of Araby the Blest; and it is at Boulogne that all the French fisherwomen are lovely and cleanly and housewifely, and all the French fishermen sober and pious, with never an oath upon their lips. What a contrast to—Yarmouth, for instance! Perhaps the writer is a fortunate man; at any rate, he seems to have seen Boulogne at its very best. It does not fail to the lot of every man who visits the place to be shaved by fair hands in the cleanest of rooms amidst the most fragrant of odours, or to watch a fishing-boat put off from shore, to the sound of cheerful songs from the godly crew, before the eyes of affectionate and beautiful fisherwomen. Peradventure somebody will draw for us a similar picture, from memory or imagination, of Calais or Dieppe. They may do everything better in France; they may be more decorous, more religious, more cleanly, less foul-mouthed; but it must be remembered that eye and ear are quicker in the case of familiar scenes and language, and that slang and oaths in foreign tongues are frequently quite unintelligible, and nearly always relieved of their native offensiveness. There is no need, however, to dwell upon this point, or to dwell, indeed, upon any point at all, for the prominent feature of the book is its agreeable variety.

A thoroughly artistic work of topographical description and illustration has been published by Messrs. Seeley, Jackson, and Halliday, in a thin folio volume, entitled Cambridge. It consists of historical and descriptive notes, written by Mr. J. W. Clark, M.A., late Fellow of Trinity College, with etchings and vignettes drawn by Messrs. A. Brunet-Debaines, H. Toussaint, and G. Greux, whose merits have been familiar to readers of The Portfolio during several years past. Mr. Clark's account of the old University town on the border of the Fenland, and of the principal Colleges, is both interesting and instructive. It is curious to remark that the name of Cambridge was not derived from the river now called "the Cam." That river was called "the Grant," until the seventeenth century; and the Roman town, Camboritum, which has given its name, in an Anglicised form, to our English Cambridge, certainly did not get it from the river. Grantebrigge, or Cantebrigge, was the ordinary name of the town in the Middle Ages. This was afterwards converted into what seemed to be a partial restoration of the Roman name; and the change of appellation was soon extended to the river itself. The University existed here long before the Colleges, the earliest of which, Peterhouse, was founded in 1284. This is the subject of Mr. Clark's second chapter. In the next, he describes Clare Hall, founded in 1325, and Pembroke, which dates from 1348. But he relates, meantime, the progress of both the town and the University; describing the ancient condition of Market Hill, and the old monasteries and churches, one of which, that of the Holy Sepulchre, is of the round form, and the oldest in England. Great St. Mary's Church, which is shown in the view of Market Hill, also engages some of the author's attention. The history of Trinity College occupies two chapters, and the same amount of space is devoted to King's College. These parts of the work are likely to interest a great number of Cambridge men and their friends. Some very attractive views are those of King's College Chapel, from the river, and its interior; Neville's Court, Trinity; and the Great Court of Trinity; but the etchings which represent St. John's College, and the tower of St. John's Chapel, seen from the river near Trinity, are among the finest in the whole series. Mr. Clarke further supplies a moderate amount of information concerning Christ's College, Magdalen, Gonville and Caius, Queen's College, and Emmanuel. The Senate House and the University and College Libraries are likewise described and illustrated. Many of the vignette woodcuts, which are very good, show picturesque details of the different college buildings. In his concluding chapter, the author glances at the social life of the University, not as it now is, but as it was sixty years ago. He relates some rather amusing anecdotes of the manners and humours of Cambridge men, Dons, Fellows, and Undergraduates, in those bygone days. It is, however, in the artistic illustrations, more than in the descriptive commentary, that the value of this work is chiefly found.

The Government of India has published the second and concluding volume of a costly folio treating of the Antiquities of Orissa, by Rajendralala Mitra, LL.D., C.I.E. We noticed some time ago a former work, on Buddha Gaya, by the same learned author, and we have much pleasure in calling attention to this large and important work on Orissa. Both its volumes are extensively illustrated with maps, plans, lithographs, photographs, and photo-collotypes. By means of these, we can realise very clearly the Buddhist rock excavations of Udayagiri and Khandagiri, with their sculptures, which date nearly two centuries B.C.; also, the celebrated Hindoo temples of Bhuvanesvara, which are among the earliest examples of the Hindoo "Sikhara" or Spire. Here we find it constructed of great size, and in a solid and solemn form, richly decorated with figures and ornament. An account is given of the town and temple of Puri, the celebrated shrine of Jagannatha, which is usually written "Juggernath"—the word meaning "Lord of the World." The name of this place generally known is that of the image of Jagannatha, but its correct designation is Puri, or "The City." The word "Puri" is from the Sanscrit, and is to be found under a variety of forms in India at the present day, as in Cawnpore, Oodeypore, and other names of places. Puri is supposed to have been formerly called Dantapura, or the "City of the Tooth," on the assumption that it was the spot where the Sacred Dalada Relic, or Buddha's Tooth, was preserved for some centuries before being taken to Ceylon. Rajendralala does not endorse the terrible reputation which has been given to Jagannatha. The worship of the Lord of the World at Puri, as has been pointed out by others besides our learned authority in this book, was connected with the worship of Buddha and of Vishnu, in which the deity is represented with a benignant, not a ferocious aspect. The supposed bloodthirsty character of Jagannatha and his dreadful car has been founded on an exaggeration of the accidents which result from such an accumulation of people as that which assembles at the Ratha Yatra, or Car Festival. But accidents have occurred at the Lord Mayor's Show, or processions where the Queen and the Prince of Wales have been present; and these personages are no more to blame for them than is Jagannatha for what may have chanced at his processions. The questions dealt with, however, in these two volumes are not confined to Jagannath. The early condition of art, as well as of faith and morals, is considered. The costume, arms, and musical instruments of the early dwellers in Orissa are illustrated and described. The author has the advantage of being a Sanscrit scholar, and is thus able to draw upon the ancient literature of his country for information. There is one knotty point of controversy in which the author fights hard for the reputation of his countrymen in ancient times. This is, whether they were in the habit of using stone as a building material. There is no doubt that the architecture of India at an early date was principally wooden. Rajendralala Mitra thinks otherwise, and also useful refers to a work known as the Nirkuta of Yaska, the oldest known gloss on the Vedas, in which twenty-two words are given as the synonyms for houses, and some of them, he affirms, could only apply to those built of stone. One curious point is that the Vedas mention "iron-built cities." The Hindoos have an Iron Age, but they do not know of it under that name. They call it the Kali Yuga, or the Black Age; hence the Iron Cities cannot be connected with that legendary period.

The merits of Miss Arabella Buckley, as a writer of pleasing and instructive books of descriptive science, for the young reader's profit and delight, have been acknowledged on former occasions. It will be gratifying to many intelligent persons of different ages, that the authoress of "The Fairyland of Science" and of the "Short History of Natural Science," has produced a new volume. This, like her two preceding works, is published by Mr. Edward Stanford at Charing-cross. Its title is Life and Her Children, which signifies, more precisely, "Glimpses of Animal Life, from the Amœba to the Insects." Let none of our own children, or other unscientific readers, be alarmed or distressed by the word "amœba," or by such as "foraminifera," "globigerina," and other dreadfully learned names of some of the simplest living creatures. When they see the engraved figures, and understand the easy descriptions, in Miss Buckley's book, they will feel quite familiar with those funny little lumps of slime, or these sung inhabitants of pretty little chambered shells, often pierced with many holes, from which the animal puts forth its feeding threads. It is rather want of acquaintance with the objects, than any difficulty about the scientific names, that seems to repel the unaccustomed student from this kind of knowledge. But Miss Buckley proceeds to treat of things more commonly known, at least more often heard of in common talk, and often seen on the seashore; sponges and jelly-fish, sea-anemones, sea-urchins and star-fish, oysters, mussels, and cockles, and many other children of "Life," which every human child, in a summer seaside holiday, is likely to have noticed. Her classification of the "lass-o-throwers," the "mantle-covered," the "mailed warriors of the sea," and the "snare weavers," the insect "biters," "suckers," "sippers," and "gnawers," has a sort of dramatic interest. She does not, however, lose sight of the true scientific distinctions of structure when she makes particular mention of the "elastic-ringed" animals, on sea and on land; those with "ringed bodies and jointed feet;" those which "change their coats, but not their bodies," and those which "remodel their bodies within their coats." Her last chapter is devoted to the "intelligent insects with helpless children," as illustrated by the ants. The drawings of marine animals are by Dr. J. J. Wild, of the Challenger expedition, and those of insects by Mr. Edwin Wilson.

The point of excitement approaches in the tenth, the January (1881), number of Sunrise, by William Black (Sampson Low and Co.): for lots are cast to determine "who is to settle the business of the Starving Cardinal," and the lot falls upon—George Brand. Meanwhile, the practical Mr. Brand, who seems to be so mightily out of place in the company of crack-brained, romantic conspirators, has effected his purpose of bringing Natalie and Natalushka, mother and daughter, together, and lodged the former, at a cheaper rate than the experience of many a reader will lead them to anticipate, in Hans-place. He, moreover, goes a-shopping in person to promote the mother's comfort, and the articles he purchases are set forth in detail, but the prices are not appended. The grateful Kirski appears upon the scene, and goes through his usual course of kow-towing, wearing out the knees of his trousers, and kissing the hand of Natalushka, an operation which his betters, whether Mr. Brand or another, would probably have been glad to perform in his stead. There is a characteristic letter from Calabressa; and there is a meeting of conspirators, if they may be so termed, in Lisle-street, and there some strong language is used about libertines and about the righteous measure meted out to scoundrels by Judge Lynch. Squalls are apparently at hand; and something tremendous may be looked for in the next number of the series, or soon afterwards. The "starving cardinal" is as good as doomed.

"WAITING FOR THE FERRY."

Not a little of the interest of this picture, by Mr. G. Clausen, is due to its excellent technical qualities. It was said, in our notice of the Exhibition of the Institute of Water-Colour Painters that "the artist has derived from the recent Dutch school the secret of the great artistic value of just tonal relations." The drawing consists primarily of two or three great breadths of twilight sky, polder embankment rising darkly against it, and foreground receiving some reflected light; and if these masses were not of the right tone and value, one relative to another, the whole would be spotty and discordant, whereas the drawing is, as we have said, most telling. But the sentiment also of the picture is quite in keeping with the effect. In the serene summer evening, while the sun's ruddy glow still lingers in the almost cloudless sky, the Dutch haymakers, male and female, with scythe and rake, and the sunburnt lad with her yoke and brightly polished brass vessels, are wending towards, or actually waiting at the inevitable ferry ("inevitable" in a land reclaimed from the sea, and where, in some places, canals are almost as frequent as in Venice). It is a type of the transit at the close of life's short day, from which, however, there will be no return on the morrow. The great dyke bank on the opposite side suggests the vast works which the Dutch and Flemings have constructed to keep out the sea on the one side and the Rhine on the other. The colossal embankment which the Flemings have constructed against the assaults of the sea between Ghent and Bruges is compared by Dante to that which (in the "Inferno," xv. 4-6) separates the River of Tees from the sandy Desert:—

Quale i Fiamminghi tra Guzzante e Bruggia,
T'emendo 'l flotto che inver lor s'avventa,
Fanno lo schermo, perchè 'l mar si fuggia.

THE ROYAL COMMISSION ON AGRICULTURE.

The Royal Commission appointed by the late Government to inquire into the question of agricultural distress have made a special report on the Irish branch of the question.

This report is signed by the Duke of Richmond and Gordon (the President of the Commission) and twelve of its members. In the report they state that they have examined a large number of witnesses with reference to the condition of agriculture in Ireland, and they point out that there is a conspicuous difference between tenancies in Ireland and tenancies in England. The Commission state that, with regard to small holders in the Western districts of Ireland, they are satisfied that with the slightest failure of crops these people would be unable to exist on their farms even if they paid no rent. Employment at a distance, always precarious, largely failed them during the late calamitous harvest. After referring to the provisions of the Act of 1870, they give a description of the general condition of Ireland, and of the agricultural distress which prevailed in the three years of 1877, 1878, and 1879. They attribute that distress to the inclemency of the seasons, and the consequent loss of the potato crop, to foreign competition, to the undue inflation of credit, to the excessive competition for land, followed by an unreasonable increase in the payment for tenant right, to the arbitrary increase of rent, to over-crowded population, and to the inordinate subdivision of farms.

The remedies which they suggest are emigration, migration, the establishment of Public Works, and the reclamation of waste land. They express the opinion that emigration, under a properly organised scheme, and the voluntary act of the people, would materially tend to relieve the congestion of population, and would conduce to the moral, social, and material welfare of those who emigrated as well as of those who remained behind. On the subject of tenure, they say that the desire to protect the tenants by legislative interference from the arbitrary increase of rent does not seem unfounded; and probably legislation, if properly framed, would not be objected to by the majority of the landlords in Ireland. They state that the "Three F's" were advocated by many witnesses, but none of them were able to support the demands contained in that proposition without consequences involving injustice to the landlords.

A separate report is signed by Lord Carlingford, Mr. Stansfeld, Mr. Mitchell Henry, Mr. Cowen, Mr. Rice, and Mr. Clay. This report is strongly in favour of the three F's.

Mr. Bonamy Price agrees with the majority, but objects to the clause as to the proposed arbitration of rents.

The Pont des Invalides at Paris, the rebuilding of which has occupied nearly two years, has been reopened to the public. This is the fourth bridge that has been built on this spot during the past fifty years.

FANCY-DRESS BALL AT A LUNATIC ASYLUM.

The Surrey County Lunatic Asylum at Brookwood, near Woking, under the judicious management of Dr. Brushfield, Medical Superintendent, has gained a high reputation in the practice of "psychological medical treatment." A pleasant feature of life at the Brookwood Asylum, and one that has indeed been described as of yearly observance in several other institutions of this kind, is the Fancy-Dress Ball which Dr. Brushfield and his assistants get up, as well as theatrical and musical entertainments, to afford the patients an evening of social pleasure. We present in this sheet a page of illustrative Sketches, drawn by our own Artist, of some of the various and ingenious costumes worn at this fancy ball on Tuesday of last week. The patients, four hundred in number, had it all to themselves from half-past seven to half-past nine o'clock, after which two hundred visitors were admitted. The music was supplied, till nine o'clock, by the Asylum Band; subsequently, by that of the 18th (Royal Irish) Regiment, which attended by permission of Lieutenant-Colonel Gregorie. Every person admitted had to wear some fancy dress. Dr. Brushfield himself appeared as Master Waiter, in the play of "The Hunchback;" his assistants, Dr. Barton and Dr. Moody, figured respectively as the Duke of Marlborough and a Japanese warrior. The spacious Recreation Hall was beautifully decorated with exotic plants, flags, wreaths, statuettes, mirrors, and Chinese lanterns. Refreshments were provided for the patients at twelve o'clock; but the visitors, amongst whom were many officers, and ladies and gentlemen of the neighbourhood, kept up the ball several hours after midnight. Most of the persons, whose fancy dresses are shown in our Artist's Sketches, are patients of the Asylum, but two or three are attendants or visitors. The reader will observe such amusing devices as "The Queen of Hearts," an old lady covered with playing-cards; and the two newsvenders, plastered with announcements of the topics of their "special editions;" while "Captain Cuff," in Hanoverian officer's costume of the last century, with exaggerated wristbands and ruffles, the Duke of York, Flora Macdonald, Queen Elizabeth, Mother Goose, an Indian Chief called "Fine Feathers," a Clown, a Nigger Minstrel, and a personification of the Temple Bar Griffin will at once be recognised. The Medical Superintendent, in his costume of "The Hunchback," is introduced at the bottom of the page, as "The Ruling Spirit" of this lively and diverting company.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

Mr. F. H. Cowen's song "Casabianca"—which has been sung with such success by Madame Patey—has recently been published by Messrs. Patey and Willis, who have also lately brought out other effective vocal pieces, among which are "Daisies," a pretty duet, by J. Blumenthal; "Grace Darling," an effective song, and "The March of Time," a descriptive song, both by J. L. Roeckel; "The Voice of My Love," by C. Pinsuti; "Madeline," by J. de Sivrai; "After the Rain," by Henriette; and "Clover Blossoms," by J. B. Boucher—all pleasing songs, that lie within a moderate compass of voice.

"Music of the Heart" and "'Twas on a Market Day" (Ashdown and Parry) are the titles of two effective songs by Ciro Pinsuti—the first in a lively vein, the other in a more sentimental style.

Mr. Joseph Williams's recent publications include a pleasing song, "Two Children by a River," by Lady Jenkinson; a characteristic "Song of the Muleteer" (in bolero style), by J. Leybach; "Land of Enchantment," a song with well-marked rhythm, and "Sweet Babe," a piquant song, by the same; and "I Ask for No Other Riches," an expressive song by B. Goddard. Among the instrumental music from the same source are "The Progressive Music School," a series of selected pieces for the pianoforte, edited by J. Leybach; and "Favourite subjects" for violin and pianoforte, arranged by C. Tourville.

"Nursery Rhymes" (Stanley Lucas, Weber, and Co.) This is a collection of verses, set to music, of a simple character, addressed to a juvenile public, and well calculated for its purpose. The interest of the book is materially enhanced by some excellent illustrations by F. Barnard. The same publishers have brought out some vocal music that will be welcome to drawing-room singers. These productions include: "Come not, when I am dead" (poetry by Tennyson) and "When I am dead, my dearest" (words by Christina Rossetti)—two songs set by Caroline Reinagle, an accomplished musician formerly well known, when Miss Onger, as an excellent pianist.

"Le Roman de Pierrot et de Pierrette," par J. Burgmein-Ricordi—(Milan, Rome, Naples, Florence, and London). This is a collection of characteristic pieces for two performers on the pianoforte, the primo part being assigned to the pupil the secondo to the teacher. They are in a lively dance style, each with a suggestive title, such as "Sérénade de Pierrot à Pierrette," "Duo Amoreux," "Bal de Noces," and "Cortège Nuptial." The music is interspersed with coloured illustrations and fanciful designs that are piquant and artistic; and, both musically and pictorially, the book will be found an interesting and seasonable gift for young people.

Messrs. Neumeyer and Co. have added to their many publications of the works of Heinrich Hofmann, a cheap edition of his expressive four-part songs, "Salve Regina" and "Adeste Fidèles," each with Latin and English words. The same publishers have brought out Mr. A. S. Mackenzie's characteristic "Scotch Rhapsody," entitled "Burns"—his second composition of the kind—in full score, orchestral parts, as a pianoforte duet, and for pianoforte solo. "Separation" (andante), by Gustav Lange, and "Two Nocturnes," by V. M. Otto Denk, are extremely graceful pianoforte pieces, very melodious in style, and well written for the display of the instrument.

Mr. Brassey, M.P., Civil Lord of the Admiralty, has furnished a public reference library in his house at Claremont, Hastings, at a cost of between £2000 and £3000. The library, which was formally opened on Saturday, in presence of a large number of people, is intended to suit the requirements of various classes of readers.

Messrs. Sampson Low and Co. have issued the first part of "Pathways of Palestine, a Descriptive Tour through the Holy Land." By the Rev. H. B. Tristram, Canon of Durham. The work is to be illustrated with forty-four permanent photographs; the first part containing photographs of the Samaritan Roll, Hebron, and Bethlehem.

Mr. Charles Dickens has published a diary of the past year, recording all important and interesting events and occurrences in their due order, reference being facilitated by a most complete index. A daily account of the weather is given, the movements of the Stock Exchange are registered, and it would be hard to name anything of note that is omitted. The work is supplemented by a calendar and useful information for 1881.

TRAVELS IN NEW GUINEA.

One of the few remaining "unexplored countries" of the world is "New Guinea," to which an Italian naturalist, Signor L. M. D'Albertis, has devoted several years of courageous and industrious personal research. "What I did and what I saw," as he puts it in his titlepage, fill two fair volumes, published by Messrs. Sampson Low and Co., which are further adorned with several coloured plates of very beautiful birds, and with a multitude of wood engravings. There is also a map; but the geographical importance of his discoveries is less than might have been expected. The first part of his work relates to his sojourn, from April, 1872, to December of that year, of two or three places in the north-west peninsula of New Guinea, which is under Dutch sovereignty, and where there are Dutch missionary stations. He left his companion, Dr. Beccari, at a place called Andai, on the coast of Geelvink Bay, and went up with the native folk to Hatam, in the Arfak mountains, where he dwelt among those simple and hospitable people, till driven away by the threatened attack of a hostile tribe. His enthusiasm for the pursuit and collection of rare ornithological specimens appears to be justified by the splendid illustrations given in this book, as well as by his scientific notices of those birds and insects which he found. The narrative of his labours and perils, and of his sufferings from repeated illness of a painful kind, by which his life was more than once endangered, will excite the sympathy of his readers. He deserves, moreover, some praise for the humane and equitable sentiments which he frequently expresses regarding the native race of people. When some of these were occasionally troublesome, he managed to frighten them without hurting them, by exhibiting the range and force of his guns, or by exploding pieces of dynamite, and persuading them of his supernatural powers. We fear it will not always be possible for his successors in the exploration of that region to prove their superiority by such harmless tricks. Unwillingly yielding to the maladies arising from the climate, and from exposure to fatigue and to wet, he left the island on board the Italian surveying frigate Vittor Pisani, which conveyed him to Sydney, New South Wales. Having there recovered his health, Signor D'Albertis returned to Europe.

The author then went home to Italy, but in 1875 was again a traveller on the shores of New Guinea; this time, however, visiting its opposite extremity, the long, mountainous peninsula that stretches to the south-east, opposite Cape York, the northernmost point of Australia. This part of New Guinea, or some portion of its coast, has recently been annexed to the British dominions; and Captain Moresby, R.N., who commanded H.M.S. Basilisk there in 1872, has published an interesting account of his expedition. From March to November, 1875, Signor D'Albertis lived on Yule Island, and visited Epa, near Redscar Bay and Port Moresby, of which we have heard from several English travellers and geographical reporters. His personal experiences in that locality are not without interest, if they fail to add much to our previous acquaintance with the country and people. It should be well known by this time that the natives of south-east New Guinea, at any rate the majority of them, belong to an entirely different race of mankind from the so-called Papuans, who are of a negroid type resembling the Australian blacks. These, on the contrary, have skins of a brown-yellow colour, with smooth hair instead of crisp or woolly, and features not of the negro visage. They seem to belong to the Polynesian race, and are more advanced in some arts of civilisation, though cannibalism is not unknown amongst them. The second volume is occupied with the narratives of three successive attempts, in 1875, 1876, and 1877, to penetrate the interior of New Guinea by the inland navigation of the Fly River. That large stream, which descends from the central range of mountains to the middle of the south coast, flowing a distance of seven or eight hundred miles in a south-easterly direction, seems to afford the most promising facilities of admission to the unknown interior. Its outlet is not far from Moatta, which is at the most southerly point of the New Guinea shores, and the nearest point to our Australian settlements on the other side of Torres Strait.

For its geographical and commercial interest, this part of Signor D'Albertis' work is of far more value than the preceding; but the results are still incomplete. The leader of the 1875 expedition up the Fly River was the Rev. Mr. Macfarlane, the missionary, and the author of these volumes only accompanied him, with others, in the small steamer Ellangowan as far up as it could go. An account of this expedition is given by another of the party, Mr. Octavius Stone, in his recent volume, "A Few Months in New Guinea." But in the two following years, Signor D'Albertis, having been furnished by the New South Wales Government with a steam-launch, the Neva, under his own command, was enabled to ascend twice as far up as the Fly River, coming within sight of the central range, to which he gave the name of King Victor Emmanuel. The want of water in the upper part of the stream, from the dryness of the season, at length stopped his progress inland, but not before he had got a large amount of useful information. There was more than one conflict with the natives, some of whom were shot. The party, including an English engineer and several Chinese or Polynesian seamen, had much to endure from the lack of fresh meat, as there was little game, fish, or fruit to be obtained. It would be costly, but apparently not impossible, to equip a sufficient exploring expedition for a thorough survey of the interior. We are inclined, from various reports, to doubt whether New Guinea will ever prove a suitable field of European colonisation. The existence of gold-fields there is by no means certain, or even supported by any trustworthy evidence. There is much fertile soil, as well as a favourable climate, for the growth of a variety of tropical produce; but, until the natives can be induced by friendly commerce to undertake its cultivation with perfect freedom of industry, we had better let it alone. The occupation, however, of several points along the seacoast, for the protection of maritime trade, was a measure of undoubted expediency, and is much to be approved.

The arrivals of live stock from the United States and Canada last week landed at Liverpool show a large decrease in cattle, and were the smallest landed for many months past, and, as regards sheep, there were none landed. The quantity of fresh meat was also smaller than that of the previous week. There was a total of 7981 quarters of beef, 1773 carcases of mutton, and 695 carcases of pigs; against a total of 2008 cattle, 122 sheep, 1176 quarters of beef, 1418 carcases of mutton, and 1125 pigs on the preceding week.

The Southport and West Lancashire Banking Company (Limited), at Southport, having branches at St. Helen's, Ormskirk, and Skelmersdale, stopped payment on Monday. It began business four years ago, with a capital of half a million sterling in £10 shares, of which £150,000 has been paid up, as well as a reserve fund of £22,000. The bank has, it is stated, since lost a quarter of a million, and last year's losses are estimated at £60,000. Their last dividend was at the rate of 5½ per cent. The depositors will be covered by the remaining calls.

The Extra Supplement.

CHESTER CATHEDRAL.

The Episcopal See of Chester was founded in 1541; the first Bishop was John Bird, who had been Provincial of the Order of Carmelites in England. Before that time Chester was in the diocese of Lichfield and Coventry. It is true that in 1075 Peter, the first Norman Bishop of Lichfield, removed from that town to Chester, which was then an important commercial seaport. He obeyed a decree that year of the Council of London for the removal of Bishops from smaller to larger cities. But his successor, Robert of Limesey, went back, not indeed to Lichfield, but to Coventry. Those Norman Bishops, while seated at Chester, used the monastic church of St. John the Baptist for their cathedral. The first of them began rebuilding this on a grand scale, but the second discontinued that work on coming to Coventry. When King Henry VIII. established the Bishopric of Chester, the Abbey Church of St. Werburgh became its Cathedral. She was a descendant, in the seventh century, of a King and Queen of the East Anglians, both saints, who had four saintly daughters, two of them being Etheldreda, Abbess of Ely, and Ethelburga, well known in the City of London. St. Werburgh was the grandchild of Sexburga, their sister, who in her widowhood became Abbess of Sheppey; but St. Werburgh's father was Wulfere, King of Mercia. She is patroness of the city of Chester. The old Saxon monastic foundation here was replaced by the Norman Hugh Lupus, Earl of Chester, with one of Benedictine monks. The Norman Abbey Church fell into ruin, and was rebuilt in the thirteenth century. The eastern part of the existing Cathedral, a portion of the choir, the Lady Chapel, the Chapter-house, and the Refectory, are of that Early English architectural period. The nave is mainly Decorated Gothic, of the fourteenth century; the upper parts, and nearly all the exterior, are of the Perpendicular style. A great deal of restoration has been done of late years in this Cathedral, which is, on the whole, a fine building, with many interesting features, though not of the first rank among our ecclesiastical edifices. The View we have engraved, drawn by Mr. S. Read, will be acceptable to many of our readers. Among the Bishops of Chester have been several men of literary note; Bishop Brian Walton, compiler of the Polyglot Bible in 1657; Bishop Wilkins, an eminent friend of science, and one of the founders of the Royal Society; Bishop Pearson, author of the Exposition of the Creed; Bishop Porteus, a leader in the crusade for the abolition of the slave trade; Bishop C. J. Blomfield, who afterwards became Bishop of London; and Bishop John Bird Sumner, who in 1848 was promoted to be Archbishop of Canterbury.

"THE LADIES' GAZETTE OF FASHION" for October, 1880, says:—
LOUIS VELVETEEN
in Paris—that City of the fashionable—is enough to assure it of success, even were its own intrinsic merits of colour, fineness, lightness, and excellent wearing qualities to "LOUIS." constitute an insufficient recommendation. It is, indeed, a "happy thought" of its manufacturers to stamp it with its own name on every yard, for, having once made a trial of it, we shall not desire to become the purchasers of any other, and there are so many new kinds in the market that there is plenty of competition. Many ladies have adopted the
in place of real velvet, for evening wear, and the list of colours in which it is manufactured is so long that every purchaser can suit her own complexion."
Ladies are respectfully informed that on and after this date all Louis Velveteen, both "LOUIS." Black and the New Autumn and Winter Colours, have stamped on the back plain instructions for removing all creases, folding-marks, &c., made in conveyance by rail, post, or other causes.

HULL, BARNSLEY, AND WEST RIDING RAILWAY AND DOCK.

The ceremony of cutting the first turf in the work of constructing this railway and dock was performed on Saturday by Lieutenant-Colonel Gerard Smith, the chairman of the company. Although snow covered the ground to a depth of several inches, many thousands of persons assembled to witness the ceremony. Spacious platforms had been erected, one of which was for the accommodation of the trade and friendly societies and other public bodies who took part in the procession. On the opposite side of the inclosure there was a platform for shareholders of the new company, another for the Mayor, Corporation, and various officials and ladies, while a third was occupied by a choir of 2000 voices. The day was observed as a general holiday, and the streets of the town, especially along the route of the procession, were gay with flags, while in several places there were triumphal arches and Venetian masts. These decorations were furnished by Messrs Defries and Sons, of London. The North-Eastern, the Great Northern, and the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Companies ran special trains, conveying thousands of excursionists from the large towns in the West Riding and the South Yorkshire colliery districts. The societies and others taking part in the procession, including the Order of Foresters and the Ancient Order of Druids, assembled at noon, principally at the end of the Beverley-road, and marched thence through the leading thoroughfares, the Corporation and the directors of the new line joining the procession as it passed the temporary offices of the company. The miners of South Yorkshire sent deputations from a hundred and twenty Lodges, each with its banners and regalia, which represented a large population. The spot fixed on for the turning of the first turf, which is at the north-west corner of the new dock, was reached about one o'clock in the afternoon, and here Lieutenant-Colonel Gerard Smith, chairman of the company, was presented with a silver spade and a polished oak barrow. At the conclusion of the ceremony the choir of 2000 voices, accompanied by about a dozen bands, sang an ode, written by the Rev. H. W. Kemp, the Master of the Maison Dieu, or Charter-house, at Hull, to commemorate the event.

The dock works thus commenced are both extensive and convenient, the dock having a water space of 46½ acres, with fine jetties projecting from the quays, these jetties being provided with railway lines for the taking of cargo direct to or from the ships. At the west end of the dock there will be provided the most approved appliances for the loading of coal, both by the low level and the high level system. At the north-east corner of the dock there are two spacious graving docks, one 450 feet and the other 500 feet long. The appliances for the shipment of coal, coupled with the fact that the railway is driven into the very heart of the South Yorkshire coal district, are expected to make Hull what it has never been before—a coal port—seeing taht the unworked coal bed of South Yorkshire comes within about twenty-nine miles of the port. This fact was among the most prominent in the addresses during the day.

In the evening a grand banquet was held in the Artillery Barracks, presided over by Lieutenant-Colonel Gerard Smith; and there were splendid illuminations provided by Messrs. Brock, of the London Crystal Palace.

We present, besides our sketches of the ceremony, and of the procession and the banquet, a portrait of Lieutenant-Colonel Gerard Smith, who is a gentleman of much local influence, a county Magistrate, and Chairman of the Hull, Barnsley, and West Riding Railway and Dock Company. The portrait is from a photograph by Messrs. Turner and Drinkwater, of Hull.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL GERARD SMITH.

THE TOWN OF HULL.

Some Views of the Town of Hull, from photographs by Messrs. W. J. Wellsted and Son, of Paragon-street there, appear in this Supplement, besides a few Sketches, by our own Artist, of the classes of people and street vehicles which strike the visitor's attention.

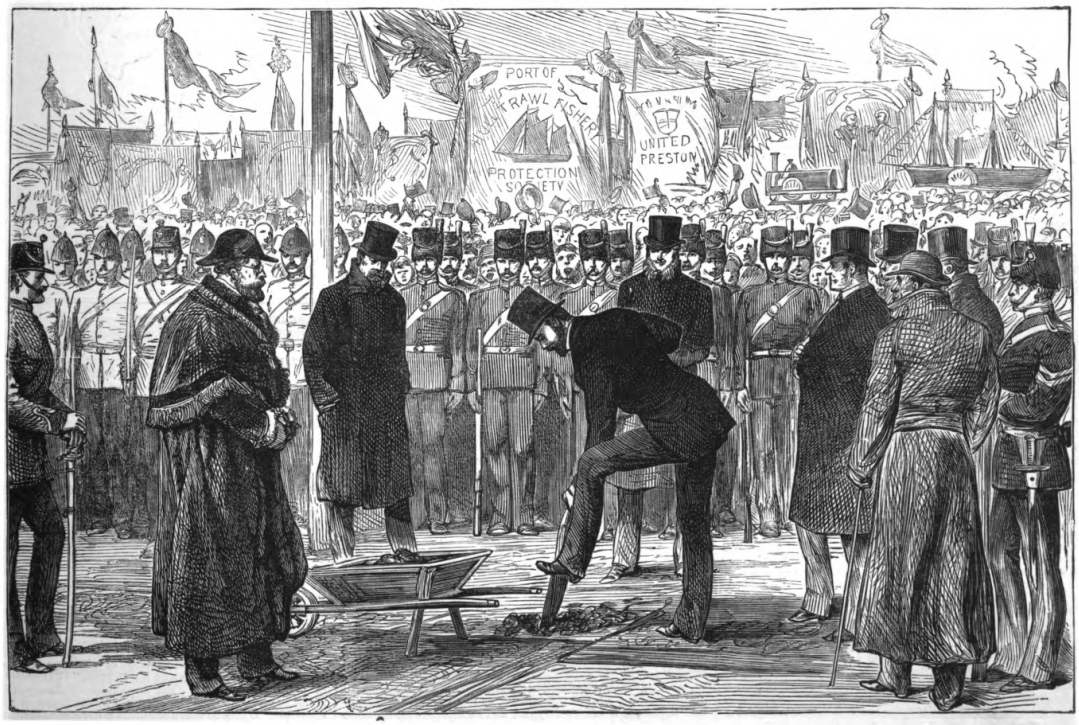
"Kingston-upon-Hull" is the name that was bestowed upon this important seaport town of the German Ocean coast, when Edward I. came there, in 1299, on his return from one of the wars in Scotland, and found a mere hamlet, called Wyke, in the time of the Saxons and the Danes, but which had been known as "Hull" since the time of Richard I. King Edward observed the commercial advantages of its position, on the north or Yorkshire bank of the broad Humber estuary, into which a small stream called "the Hull" flowed at this place. He at once purchased the site from the Abbot of Meaux, and laid out a "Bastide," or regularly planned town, constructed with a public square and parallel streets crossing one another, in the rectangular style of a Roman military station; a type which the same King had adopted in his other foundations, as at Winchelsea, and at Leyburn or Liborne, on the Dordogne estuary in Guienne. He offered great privileges, franchises, and immunities, to all who would inhabit this new Royal town.

The maritime trade, however, of that coast was then chiefly enjoyed by the ports of Hedon and Ravensea, near Spurn Head, which old sea-ports are now almost forgotten, having been destroyed long ago by physical changes in the shore. "Hull," to give it the short name which it has retained in spite of "Kingston," had grown rich and populous under Edward III., to whose navy it could send forth sixteen ships with 460 men, being two-thirds of the contingent supplied by London. It was never, like Winchelsea and other southern ports, attacked by a French or any foreign foe; but in our own Civil Wars its repeated sieges, by the Royalists against a garrison under Fairfax, played a considerable part; and the disputed military custody of this fortified place was the immediate occasion for that national struggle. The seizure of the town, in 1688, by the Protestant and national party, for William of Orange, again brings Hull into note as a place of some English historical associations.

The mercantile traffic of this place, however, first with the Netherlands, afterwards with Denmark, Norway, and Sweden, the Baltic and Russia, has been the principal cause of its importance. It formerly had a large share, too, of the Greenland whale-fishery, but this has much decreased at Hull, though by deep-sea fishing in the German Ocean the port employs more than four hundred seagoing boats, with nearly three thousand hands. The exports of the manufacturing North of England, Lancashire cotton yarns and cloth, woollens of the West Riding, iron rails, machines, and agricultural implements, find their way by Hull to Northern Europe. Its own industrial business includes much ship-building and sail-making, some ironworks, flax and cotton spinning, oil-crushing, and other manufactures favoured by its trading position. It has many lines of steam-ships to the Baltic, Holland, and Norway, and a good deal of coasting trade, so that its commercial rank is next to London and Liverpool. The population, now above 125,000, is likely enough to be doubled in the next century.

This flourishing town, with the lines of wharves and warehouses, stretches nearly two miles along the flat north shore of the muddy Humber, which is the outlet of the Trent, the Ouse of York, and most of the lesser East Midland rivers. There is the Old Hull Dock, or Queen's, constructed in 1778, which has been a most profitable concern; the Humber Dock, opened in 1809; the small Junction Dock, between those two, completed in 1829; the Railway Dock, west of the town; the large Victoria Dock, to the north-east, 1850, for steam-ships of a good size; and the Albert Dock, of 1869, with a lock 80 feet wide. The Quay is a crowded and busy place; and so is the Pier, for passenger and ferry traffic, with a fine open view of the Lincolnshire shore, three miles across the Humber.

The town itself is not very pretty, but has several good buildings, two or three of which are shown in our Illustrations. The Dock Office, situated between the Queen's and the Junction Dock, is a handsome Italian edifice, with domed towers; and close to this rises a column to the memory of Wilberforce, the estimable Christian political philanthropist, who was M.P. for Hull. But the finest building is the Town-hall, in Lowgate, designed, like that of Leeds, by Mr. Cuthbert Broderick. It is of Italian architecture, with a stately clock-tower, and with gilt balcony railings, which contrast fairly with the rich-coloured stone. A statue of King Edward I. adorns the principal staircase.



LIEUTENANT-COLONEL GERARD SMITH CUTTING THE FIRST TURF OF THE HULL, BARNSLEY, AND WEST RIDING RAILWAY AND DOCK.

In the Market-place, shown by one of our Views, stands the Dutch-gilt statue of King William III. on horseback, by Scheemaker, which is an artistic curiosity. Here also is the noble old Gothic Church of the Holy Trinity, the largest parish church in England, of mixed Decorated and Perpendicular architectural styles, which has nave, transepts, aisles, and chancel, with central tower. It may some day be promoted to the dignity of a Cathedral, now that the multiplication of Bishoprics has come into vogue as the ecclesiastical policy of our time. The restorations, of course by Sir Gilbert Scott, have lately cost £0,000. St. Mary's Church, in Lowgate, is also a fine specimen of Perpendicular Gothic building, and its tower is seen in the distance in one of our Views.

The antiquities of Hull, which have both historical and biographical interest, comprise the Trinity House, where portraits of local worthies and other old pictures are preserved; the monuments of the De la Pole family, old Hull merchants, who rose to nobility under the Tudors; the ancient Grammar-School, founded in Richard III.'s reign, in which Andrew Marvell, William Wilberforce, and one or two learned Bishops and Deans were educated; the Charterhouse, and the old hospitals, almshouses, and taverns. The Citadel, a small fort on the point between the Hull and the Humber, still retains two blockhouses constructed by King Henry VIII. A collection of local antiquities may be seen in the Hull Museum. This town has its Botanical Gardens, and its Park, given by Mr. Pearson in 1860, which is adorned with a statue of her Majesty Queen Victoria.

THE REVOLT IN THE TRANSVAAL.

Our Liberal Prime Minister, Mr. Gladstone, little more than a twelvemonth ago, in his Mid Lothian speeches of November, 1879, complained that our Government "has annexed in Africa the Transvaal territory, inhabited by a free, European, Christian, Republican community," in spite, as he truly remarked, of the fact that above 6500 persons of that community, out of 8000 qualified to vote upon the subject, "protested against it." Mr. Gladstone, now the head of our Government, denounced, as an act of insanity, this wanton "invasion of a free people in the Transvaal, Protestant in religion, Hollanders in origin, vigorous, obstinate and tenacious in character, even as we are ourselves." He protested against coercion, "to compel them to accept a citizenship which they decline and refuse." Four times did Mr. Gladstone repeat his utterance of this sentiment, the last time being so lately as March 18, at the crisis of the General Election. Lord Hartington, the second in leadership of the Liberal party now in power, about the same time, in his North Lancashire speeches, bore similar testimony to the injustice of the Annexation of the Transvaal. It cannot, therefore, be doubtful that, notwithstanding the prepossessions of the Colonial Office, in which Lords Kimberley and Brabourne have but yielded to the same delusive influences that misled Lord Carnarvon, the present Ministry are disposed to redress the scandalous wrong that has been done, and not to spend another sum of five millions, and shed the blood of thousands of brave men, in a new South African War—this time a war of conquest for the subjugation of freemen belonging to the race of our nearest European kinsfolk, of the Dutch nation, our allies in those great historic struggles against Spain and France, by which the civil and religious liberties of England were preserved. It is impossible, moreover, that statesmen who value, as these do, the honour of their Queen and country, should not take the earliest opportunity of stopping, by a concession that is simply just, the deplorable conflict which arises from a flagrant violation of the plighted word of our Sovereign, who in 1852 promised, by a formal Convention, to respect the independence of the South African Republic for all time to come. Whatever due atonement may be exacted for any fierce and hasty deeds of the Boers that have attended the recent outbreak of their insurrection, the political question will have to be settled, as quickly as possible, in the only way that is consistent with the fair fame of the English nation—by letting the Dutch Commonwealth again go free.

This is the spontaneous dictate of conscience, without waiting for the voices of all other nations of Christendom, Holland, Germany, France, Italy, and America, whose public opinion has already declared to the same effect. But the British Government, having recently assumed, though perhaps unadvisably, a virtual Protectorate of some of the many native South African races, will not consent, we are sure, to an absolutely unconditional re-establishment of Dutch rule in the Transvaal. The conditions it will prescribe cannot be other than such as to require a new and strict delimitation of the territory assigned to the South African Republic, so as to exclude its future interference with the different races and tribes of uncivilised people dwelling on its western, northern, and eastern frontiers. We refer more particularly to this point upon the present occasion, since it is needful to apprise our readers that the accompanying Map does not include, to the northward, some very large portions of the territorial extent which was claimed for the Transvaal in 1876 and preceding years, when there was much controversy upon this subject with the British Government. It has often been said, with some exaggeration, in any case, but with much less truth, in reality, if the views of the British Government at that time were correct, that the Transvaal country is "as large as France." It looks very large in the ordinary Maps of South Africa, which give it a general breadth of 400 miles from east to west, and length of 450 miles from north to south, comprising an area of 120,000 square miles; while that of France, including Corsica, is about 200,000 square miles. But the northern territories there, called by the Dutch Waterberg and Zoutpansberg, are not properly settled and inhabited by them; and their claims, under the Republic from 1852 to 1877, to the eastern and south-eastern districts, bordering on Zululand, and to the south-western districts, the abode of some broken tribes named Barolongs and Batlapins, were always denied by the British authorities in South Africa. If these territories, around three fourths of a circle which would include the whole elevated table-land, the Hooge Veldt, or High Plain, having Pretoria for its centre, were to be deducted from the Transvaal, its extent would be reduced nearly one-half; and the southern portion alone, excluding all the Waterberg and Zoutpansberg regions, is shown in our present Map. Now, it is of some political importance to observe that the open and treeless plain of the Hooge Veldt, which is entirely occupied by the Dutch pastoral farms and homesteads, does not contain any native tribes; it was vacant of population, indeed, when the Dutch colonists arrived there nearly forty years ago. The native races, sometimes vaguely estimated at 250,000, inhabit the forest and mountain countries beyond, the Busch Veldt, to the north, with the valleys of the Limpopo and its tributaries, and of the Olifant's River; also the Terrace-Lands, called the Banken-veldt and Rooge-velt, situated eastward, along the mountain ranges that form a continuation of the Drakenberg, adjoining the country of the Swazi or Amaswazi, and of the Zulus in the Utrecht district. It is quite certain that all these territories, with their large native populations, were not delivered over to the Transvaal Republic by the Sand River Convention of 1852. If now, therefore, her Majesty's Government should feel called upon, returning to the honourable observance of that Convention, to re-establish the Transvaal Republic, it will be only just and right to cut off all those outlying dominions, gained by unjustifiable Dutch encroachments, and reduce their future realm to its original extent. The Map which we give this week shows, in its northward limit, something like the utmost verge and scope of a fair arrangement to this purpose. It happens that Nature has provided a most convenient boundary, in the Waterberg and several other ranges, stretching all across the Transvaal region from west to east, from the Marico to the Lydenburg districts, to shut off the principal native tribes from the Dutch commonwealth. The Bush country beyond has proved insalubrious to man and beast, and the Boers can do very well without it. At any rate, we do not think they will ever get it with the goodwill of the British Government, which is pledged to stop further aggression upon the native tribes; though it has, with singular inconsistency, made war on Cetewayo for resisting these encroachments on the Pongola and in the Utrecht district.

An association, to be called "The Transvaal Independence Committee," of which Sir Charles Trevelyan and Captain E. H. Verney, R.N., are leading promoters, has been formed in London this week. It undertakes to procure and disseminate accurate information upon the subject.

Ample entertainment is surely provided at the Amphitheatre in the Westminster Bridge-road by the Messrs. Sanger in exchange for the trifling sums charged for admission. There are scenes in the circus with wild horses and tame elephants, trained monkeys and performing Africans, and there is Little Sandy the Droll, whose every movement induces merriment. A compressed version of Mazeppa follows. The pantomime, "St. George and the Dragon," is very elaborately placed upon the stage. For chromatic brilliancy and glitter it has never been surpassed, even at this home of gorgeous spectacle. Where so much attention is devoted to display, there is generally but little chance for the actor, yet the performance of Miss Alice Rogers as Goodygood will hardly escape notice. This graceful lady probably found puns in her primers, and danced breakdowns in her babyhood. A brief and brisk harlequinade, with Little Sandy as clown, terminates a varied and never tedious entertainment.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

ITALY.

The King and Queen arrived at Syracuse from Catania on Sunday morning, and were received by the Archbishop and the local authorities. In the course of the day their Majesties received the officers of her Majesty's ironclad Superb, which is lying in the roads. The King and Queen returned in the evening to Catania, whence they proceed to Messina. The telegrams state that their Majesties' reception in every part of Sicily has been enthusiastic.

The Government sustained a severe reverse on Sunday in an election for the second constituency of Rome. Signor Ruspoli, of the Right, was returned by a large majority over the Ministerial candidate, Signor Falomba.

SPAIN.

Last Saturday the Chamber of Deputies resumed the debate upon the Address in reply to the Royal Speech. Señor Cosgayon, the Minister of Finance, stated that the condition of the Spanish Treasury was good in consequence of the revenue having increased. The Minister for the Colonies announced that the pacification of Cuba is complete.

The Madrid correspondent of the Daily News says that a movement has been set on foot by the Madrid papers, with the support of the literary, artistic, and scientific societies of the kingdom, to celebrate this year the centenary of Calderon. Señor Canovas has accepted the presidency of the committee to organise the festivities, and he has the co-operation of statesmen of all parties.

Immense damage has been done by floods.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

The Archduke Rudolf of Austria arrived at Brussels on Sunday evening, and was met at the station by the King of the Belgians and the Count of Flanders. In the evening the Queen of the Belgians, with Princess Stéphanie and the Archduke Rudolf, were present at the representation of the "Prophète" at the Théâtre de la Monnaie.

The resignation is announced of Baron von Streit, the Austrian Minister of Justice, and Herr Kremer, the Minister of Commerce. The Vienna correspondent of the Daily News says that their resignation has deprived the Cabinet of the only Ministers in whom the German Constitutional party placed some confidence.

Tuesday's Official Gazette announces that the following gentlemen have been summoned by the Emperor to the Upper House as life members:—Landed Proprietors Counts Franz Couvenhove, Seilern-Aspang, Stadnicki, and Tarnowski; Privy Councillors Max Gagern and Helfert; Professors Randa and Szujski; Count Frederick Schoenborn; Herr Lomaschek, formerly head of a Ministerial Department; Monsignor Rotter, Abbot of the Benedictines; and Herr Zyblickiewicz, Town-President of Cracow.

GERMANY.

The usual New-Year's greetings were exchanged on the 13th inst. (New-Year's Day Old Style) between the Czar and the Emperor of Germany, who excused himself for not sending his message until the afternoon by having been confined to his bed for some hours by indisposition. His Majesty has been suffering from a cold and sore throat, but is now better.

Speaking last Saturday at the general meeting of the board of directors of the Victoria National Association, of which he is patron, the Crown Prince expressed his views with regard to the anti-Semitic movement, and said that he could not conceive how men standing upon an intellectual eminence could lend themselves to the support of a movement which must be condemned alike for its tendencies and aims.

Prince Bismarck, who had a long conference with the Emperor on the 13th inst., visited the Crown Prince on Sunday afternoon, and, according to a Daily News telegram, conferred with him on home affairs, particularly on the Jewish question.

According to the latest arrangements, the civil marriage of Prince Frederick William of Prussia is to take place on Feb. 26, the day before the religious ceremony. Eighty-five Prussian towns have combined to present ornamental plate to the Prince on his wedding day. The sum subscribed is 400,000 marks (about £20,000).

In the sitting of the Lower House of the Prussian Diet yesterday week Herr von Windthorst (Meppen), supported by all the members of the Centre and the Poles, brought in a resolution declaring that the administration of the sacraments and the celebration of mass are not subject to the penal clauses of the laws of May 11 and 12, 1873, May 20 and 21, 1874, and April 22, 1875. An amendment is being prepared.

SWEDEN.

The Riksdag was opened on Tuesday by King Oscar in person. In the Speech from the Throne his Majesty dwelt upon the connection between the reform of the taxation system and the organisation of the army, and stated that both these questions must be settled together. At the subsequent sitting of the Lower House the Budget was presented by the Minister of Finance. The revenue is estimated at 76,388,000 crowns, and there is an estimated surplus of 1,368,700 crowns, which is to be devoted to increasing the reserve fund of the State.

RUSSIA.

The health of the Czar has greatly improved.

A despatch from General Scobeleff has been received at St. Petersburg describing the severe fighting which took place at Geok Tepe on the second Sunday in the year. The Turcomans made a sortie in great force, and gained possession of the Russian outworks and part of the second parallel, besides capturing several guns. The Imperial troops suffered severely, and their artillerymen who were taken prisoners were immediately put to death. The Turcoman dead filled the trenches. The Russians claim to have recovered all they lost, position and guns, except one mountain gun. On the 10th the Russians report that they captured the outworks, and the siege was being continued on the following day.

TURKEY.

The Porte has addressed another Circular to the Powers, calling attention to the Greek armaments, and suggesting the opening of negotiations for a pacific settlement by the Powers signatory to the Berlin Treaty.

GREECE.

The 13th inst. being New-Year's Day (Old Style) a "Te Deum" was sung in the cathedral. The King subsequently held a reception at the palace, which was attended by the Ministers, the members of the diplomatic body, the Holy Synod of the Greek Church, and the principal military, naval, and civil authorities, who offered their congratulations to his Majesty. In the evening the King entertained 150 distinguished personages at a banquet at the palace.

The Minister of War has ordered the formation of the regiments of the Greek army into brigades, and several Brigadiers-General have been nominated. No leave of absence will henceforward be granted to officers or men.

SERVIA.

The Skuptschina was opened on Sunday. In his speech the Prince expressed his gratitude to Austria-Hungary for assisting the consolidation of Servia's independent position, and his satisfaction at the establishment of diplomatic relations between his country and Greece. The construction of railways and the introduction of sanitary measures will receive his attention, and the obligations of Servia under the Railway Convention will be met by provisions in the Budget.

AMERICA.

General Garfield has received a deputation of negroes from the Southern States, who made strong representations upon the disabilities from which they suffer. The President-elect said, in reply, that education had much to do with overcoming the inequality between the white and the coloured races. He would not then disclose his policy, but he recommended the deputation to make personal efforts to raise their own race.

General Grant has accepted the presidency of the World's Fair Commission.

The Military Committee of the House of Representatives have voted against the bill proposing to place General Grant on the retired list, with the rank and pay of a General on active service.

In the House of Representatives on Monday Mr. Newberry, member for Michigan, introduced a resolution requesting President Hayes to call the attention of the British Government to the allegation concerning fraudulent fishery statistics presented to the Halifax Commission, and to request Great Britain to join the United States in appointing a Commission consisting of three members, one nominated by each State and the third by Great Britain and America conjointly. This Commission would investigate the grounds of the Halifax Award, and report to the respective Governments. Another resolution for the appointment of a Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Representatives to investigate the same subject was also introduced. Both resolutions were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The Maine Legislature have declared Mr. Plaisted, Greenbacker, legally elected Governor by a plurality of votes, in accordance with the Constitutional amendment adopted at the last election.

The convention of the National Land and Industrial League of the United States sitting at Buffalo last week, which has been formed to aid the Irish Land League and to secure the favourable verdict of the American people for the objects at which it aims, resolved at its meeting yesterday week to form an organisation, entitled the National Land League of the United States, with Mr. Patrick A. Collins, of Boston, as president. It will next meet at Washington. Meetings are being held and active measures taken by the branches of the Irish Land League for the purpose of raising money and extending their organisation.

Intelligence received at New York states that forty Indians have attacked a stage-coach in New Mexico. The bodies of the drivers and four of the passengers—three men and one woman—have been found mutilated and burnt. Troops have been sent in pursuit of the perpetrators of the outrage.

The mining town of Alta, Utah, has been nearly destroyed by avalanches. Ten persons are stated to have perished.

CANADA.

It is stated at Ottawa that Princess Louise will return to Canada in May next.

Professor Hind has written another letter to the Marquis of Lorne pointing out additional falsifications in the coal and fish statistics submitted to the Halifax Arbitration Commission. In the Senate on the 13th inst. notice was given of a motion calling attention to the charges preferred by Professor Hind in reference to the Fishery Award.

After a long debate in Committee of the House of Commons on the terms granted by the Government to the Pacific Railway Syndicate, the Ministerial resolutions were agreed to on the 13th inst., in accordance with the arrangement made between Ministers and the leaders of the Opposition. On the following day, the Premier, Sir J. A. Macdonald, declared that he would postpone the debate on the Pacific Railway until the proposals of the new syndicate, received that day by Sir C. Tupper, the Minister of Railways and Canals, had been submitted to the House. The Premier concluded by moving that the debate should go on daily until the Ministerial resolutions were disposed of. The House agreed. On Tuesday Mr. Blake, the leader of the Opposition, after a long speech against the Pacific Railway contract, moved that it should not be ratified by the House.

The Ontario Legislature was opened on the 13th inst. by the Lieutenant-Governor, the Hon. J. B. Robinson, who, in his speech on the occasion, alluded to the revival of commerce in the province, and urged the desirability of establishing railway connections with the Canadian Pacific line.

INDIA.

The Viceroy arrived in Calcutta on the 11th inst. He did not suffer from his journey, and is gaining strength rapidly and drives out daily. He did not, however, take part in the Legislative Council on Friday.

Sir Stuart Bayley, Chief Commissioner in Assam, will succeed Sir R. Meade as Resident in Hyderabad, on the retirement of the latter next April.

The official announcement of the appointment of Sir Donald Stewart to succeed Sir F. Haines as Commander-in-Chief was received at Calcutta with general satisfaction.

In consequence of the continued interference by gangs of robbers with the supplies destined for Candahar, troops have been ordered to proceed to Maiwand, in order to assist the Sirdars in maintaining order. The Marris who have submitted to Sir Robert Sandeman consented to pay the penalty imposed upon them.

Tranquillity is reported to have been restored without conflict in Jeypore and Vizagapatam, owing to the precautions taken by the authorities.

The trials of the twenty-seven men who are charged with being concerned in the Kolapore plot are still going on.

The Secretary of State for India has appointed Mr. Robert Leycester Upton solicitor to the Government of India at Calcutta, vice Mr. Charles Sanderson, resigned.

According to the returns of the late Census, the population of Vienna is 707,532, which is an increase of 100,000 on the Census of 1869.

There was an earthquake shock in Thurgau, in Switzerland, last Thursday night, accompanied by underground noises sufficiently loud to wake people from their sleep.

The Agent-General for New South Wales has been informed by telegram of the arrival in Sydney of the ship Glamis, which sailed from Plymouth with emigrants in October last.

Sir Robert Biddulph, the High Commissioner of Cyprus, held a levée at Nicosia on Thursday week, New-Year's Day (old style), when he stated explicitly that the happy circumstances now existing in Cyprus were to be attributed to the British administration of the island. He stated that steps would be taken by the Government to ensure a satisfactory supply of water for irrigation purposes, in order to provide against drought. He also stated that a Census of Cyprus would be taken this year, and begged the Assembly of Notables to assist the Government in obtaining accurate returns. The Greek Archbishop, the Armenian Bishop, the Cadi, and the Mufti, replied, and thanked the High Commissioner for the promises he had made and the sentiments he had expressed.

The expenses of the Afghan war to the end of March next are now estimated by the Indian Government to amount to about seventeen and a half millions sterling, inclusive of about five millions for frontier railways, and it appears from a Parliamentary paper issued on Monday that the Secretary of State in Council is prepared to "treat any further charges as ordinary Indian expenditure."

News from the seat of war in South America relates the dislodgment of the Peruvians from Lurin, which is described as a "good defensive position." There were 9000 Peruvians in the town, and the place was carried by the Chilians, after fighting for an hour and a half, at the point of the bayonet. It is stated in a telegram from Valparaiso that the Chilian army operating against Lima consists of 22,500 infantry, 800 cavalry, and 2400 artillery, together with eighty pieces of artillery and ten Gatling guns. A telegram from Buenos Ayres states that the Chilian forces number 30,000 men, and that the defenders of the city are 40,000 strong.

Mr. J. D. Sedding, of 18, Charlotte-street, Bedford-square, has been elected as diocesan architect of Wells, in succession to the late Mr. Ferrey.

The Archbishop of Canterbury has offered to Archdeacon Hose, of Singapore, the bishopric of Labuan, which the venerable gentleman has accepted.

Last Sunday morning the Bishop of Bedford (Dr. Walsham How) preached at St. Peter's, South Kensington, before a crowded congregation, in behalf of the extension and maintenance of the Consumption Hospital, Brompton. The collection after the service amounted to £64.

The Archbishop of Canterbury has conferred the degree of Doctor in Divinity upon the Rev. James M'Connel Hussey, M.A., of Exeter College, Oxford, Vicar of Christ Church, North Brixton, Honorary Canon of Rochester, and Rural Dean of Kennington, in recognition of his eminent services to the Church in South London during an Incumbency of more than a quarter of a century.

The Lords Justices gave their decision last Saturday in the appeals of the Revs. T. P. Dale and R. W. Enraght. On the question of their inhibition by Lord Penzance, the appeals were dismissed with costs; but on the ground of irregularity in the issuing of the writs for their arrest they succeeded, and the appellants were ordered to be discharged, Lords Justices Brett and Cotton remarking that every necessary form would have to be complied with in cases involving the imprisonment of any one. Mr. Dale was thus for the time confirmed in his freedom, and Mr. Enraght was declared entitled to a rule for a Habeas Corpus, which led of necessity to his discharge. Mr. Enraght was liberated on Monday morning from Warwick Gaol, after having been incarcerated nearly eight weeks.

The east window of the north aisle of Kemerton church, near Tewkesbury, has recently been filled with fine stained glass by Messrs. Clayton and Bell, in memory of the late Rector, Archdeacon Thorp. The window itself, a work of the late R. Carpenter, the architect of the church, is of noble proportions and elegant design. It is of three lights, divided by well-moulded mullions which support bold and graceful tracery. The style used is the Second Pointed, or Geometrical Decorated, of the early part of the fourteenth century. It is a fitting memorial to one who for his good works will long be reverenced and loved among them; and commemorates besides, as the subjoined inscription (which is in Latin) at the base of the window records, the personal affection of a brother:—"To the honour of God, and in memory of his beloved brother Thomas Thorp, B.D., Vice-Master of Trinity College, Cambridge, Archdeacon of Bristol, and Rector of this church, who died on the Festival of St. Matthias, 1877; Disney L. Thorp embellished this window with painted glass in 1880."

OBITUARY.

SIR THOMAS TOBIN.

Sir Thomas Tobin, J.P. and D.L. county Cork, F.S.A., died on the 9th inst., at his residence, Ballincollig, in the county of Cork, aged seventy-three. He was eldest son of Thomas Tobin, Esq., of Liverpool, and nephew of the late Sir John Tobin, of that city. He received the honour of knighthood in 1855, on the occasion of the inauguration of the Athenæum at Cork, of which he was president. He married, in 1835, Catherine, eldest daughter of Lister Ellis, Esq., of Crofthead, Netherby, Cumberland. We may add that the late Sir Thomas Tobin was one of the best and most earnest friends in Ireland of the National Life-Boat Institution. Many years since he set on foot a "penny" life-boat subscription, and raised from thousands of persons (a remarkable instance of his popularity) £114.

MAJOR-GENERAL WHINYATES.

Major-General Frederick William Whinyates, R.E., of Walton, Cumberland, died on the 9th inst., at Dorset Villa, Cheltenham, aged eighty-seven. He was son of Major Thomas Whinyates, of Abbotsleigh, Devon, by Catherine, his wife, daughter of Admiral Sir Thomas Frankland, and was consequently brother of the late General Sir E. C. Whinyates, K.C.B. He received his education at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, and entered the Army in 1811. In 1816 he was present at the attack on Algiers by Lord Exmouth, and in the two following years served in France. In 1838 he attained the rank of Major, and in 1839 was commanding officer of Engineers with the field force in New Brunswick, when the disputed territory was invaded by the State of Maine. In 1855 he was promoted to be Major-General. He married, in 1830, Sarah Marianne, daughter of Mr. Charles Whalley, of Stow-on-the-Wold, and leaves issue. His eldest son, Frederick Thomas, is Lieutenant-Colonel Royal Horse Artillery.

MR. RICHARD PADMORE.

Mr. Richard Padmore, of Henwick Hall, Worcester, M.P. for that city, in the Liberal interest, from 1860 to 1868, whose death, at the age of ninety-one, is just announced, was an ironfounder in the city he represented, became its Sheriff in 1845, and was twice Mayor. He was eldest son of Mr. Thomas Padmore, of Ketley, in Shropshire, and married, in 1823, Emma, only daughter of Mr. John Jones, of Worcester. Mr. Padmore made several gifts to Worcester, including one of £5000 towards the establishment of an orphan asylum.

The Rev. Dr. Lloyd, Provost of Trinity College, Dublin, on the 17th inst., after a short illness.

Mr. Henry Denison Pender, son of Mr. J. Pender, M.P., on the 13th inst., at Foot's Cray-place, Kent, of typhoid fever, contracted at Rome, aged twenty-eight.

Jane Eliza, Lady St. Paul, wife of Sir Horace St. Paul, Bart., and daughter of George Annett Grey, Esq., of Millfield, Northumberland, at Ewart Park, near Wooler, on the 9th inst., in her thirty-eighth year.

The Rev. Charles Edward Ricketts Robinson, M.A., Vicar of St. John's, Torquay, Hon. Canon of Rochester, son of the late Venerable Archdeacon Robinson, D.D., Master of the Temple, on the 4th inst., aged fifty-seven.

Mr. Henry Huntly Mervyn-D'Arcy-Irvine, of Castle Irvine, county Fermanagh, the male representative of a very eminent and largely-acred family in the north of Ireland, on the 10th inst., at Bournemouth, in his eighteenth year. He was only child of the late Mr. Henry Mervyn-D'Arcy-Irvine, of Castle Irvine, by Huntly Mary, daughter of the Hon. Francis Prittie.

Mr. Montagu Wilmot, of Norton House, county Glamorgan, son of Sir Robert Wilmot, second Baronet, of Osmaston, in the county of Derby, by Marianne, his second wife, daughter and heiress of Charles Howard, Esq., of Pipe Grange, in the county of Stafford, on the 8th inst., at his residence near Swansea, in his seventy-sixth year. He married Sarah-Frederica, daughter of Mr. Thomas Eden, nephew of the first Lord Auckland, and leaves, with four daughters, one son, Robert Rodney, heir-presumptive to the baronetcy of Wilmot of Osmaston.

On Monday the body of the one hundred and first, the last of the victims of the Pen-y-Graig explosion, was recovered from the pit. It was that of David Williams, aged twenty-six, who left a widow and four children.

We learn from the Architect that Glasgow has been compelled to illustrate the proverb that "there's many a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip." Mr. John Bell, of Northpark, intended to leave his valuable collection of paintings and the building in which they are deposited, to the Corporation, in trust for the citizens. But, unfortunately for Glasgow, Mr. Bell's will was written in pencil and was without a signature. The ambition of his life has consequently been frustrated, for the Town Clerk has advised the Corporation that they possess no claim to the property.

Mr. Andrew Johnston, High Sheriff of Essex, on Tuesday opened a loan exhibition at the Shirehall, Chelmsford, which has been got up under the auspices of the Essex Museum. The principal feature is a collection of about 400 oil-paintings, water-colours, engravings, etchings, and sketches by Essex artists, or representing scenes in the county. The programme includes scientific demonstrations, vocal and instrumental music, and Shakspearean and other recitations. The exhibition remains open till this (Saturday) evening.

A memorial to Mr. Gladstone is in course of signature at Bradford and other towns in the West Riding in support of an application to the Treasury for some public pecuniary recognition being bestowed upon Mr. Alexander Atkinson, accountant, of Booth-street, Bradford, who for some years has devoted considerable time in an effort to induce successive Governments to do what has just been done by her Majesty's Government—adopt the scheme of the railway parcel post. The memorial sets forth the labours of Mr. Atkinson in reference to this and other schemes of parcel and postal reform. It states that during the past sixteen years Mr. Atkinson has been an energetic postal and railway reformer.

Last week 2486 births and 1604 deaths were registered in London. Allowing for increase of population, the births were 193, and the deaths were 161 below, the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. There was a further increase in the number of smallpox patients in the Metropolitan Asylum Hospitals. Deaths from measles are declining, but fatal cases of scarlet fever showed an increase on recent weeks, and slightly exceeded the corrected average. There was a remarkably large mortality from puerperal fever, and the deaths from diseases of the respiratory organs show an increase. At the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, the mean reading of the barometer last week was 29·65 in. The mean temperature was 28 deg., being 10 below the average in the corresponding week of the twenty years ending 1868. The mean was considerably below the average on each day of the week; the coldest day was Saturday, when the mean was only 19·6, and showed a deficiency of 18·8. The lowest night temperature was 11, on Saturday.

PROBLEM No. 1927.

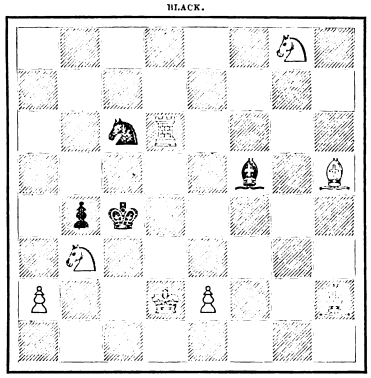
By F. J. KELLNER (Vienna).

BLACK.



WHITE.

White to play, and mate in three moves.

Played recently at Purssell's between the Rev. S. W. EARNSHAW and another Amateur.—(Evy Lopez.)

| WHITE | BLACK |
|---|---|
| 1. P to K 4th | P to K 4th |
| 2. Kt to K B 3rd | Kt to Q B 3rd |
| 3. B to Kt 5th | Kt to K B 3rd |
| 4. P to Q 3rd | P to Q 3rd |
| 5. B takes Kt (ch) | P takes B |
| 6. P to K R 3rd | P to K Kt 3rd |
| 7. Kt to Q B 3rd | B to Kt 2nd |
| 8. B to Kt 5th | P to B 4th |
| 9. Kt to Q 5th | B to K 3rd |
| 10. P to Q B 4th | |

10. Kt takes Kt is decidedly preferable to thus weakening the Queen's Pawn.

|---|---|
| 10. | Castles |
| 11. Castles | B takes Kt |
| 12. B P takes B | Q to Q 2nd |
| 13. Kt to R 2nd | Q R to Kt sq |

Anticipating 14. P to K B 4th, and preventing it, meanwhile White cannot now play that coup without loss.

|---|---|
| 14. P to Q Kt 3rd | Kt to R 4th |
| 15. B to Kt sq | P to K B 4th |
| 16. P to K Kt 4th | |

White's position is not an enviable one. If he play 16. P takes P he will then have two isolated Pawns on the Queen's file; and if 16. P to K B 4th, then P takes 16. P to K R 3rd and 17. Kt takes P, &c.

| WHITE | BLACK |
|---|---|
| 16. | P takes Kt P |
| 17. Kt takes P | Kt to B 5th |
| 18. B takes Kt | R takes B |
| 19. K to R 2nd | |

19. K to Kt 2nd, followed, in due time, by P to K B 3rd, offers a better resistance.

|---|---|
| 19. | Q R to K B sq |
| 20. R to K Kt sq | |

A very feeble move, as the sequel shows.

|---|---|
| 20. | P to K R 4th |
| 21. Kt to K 3rd | R takes P (ch) |
| 22. R to Kt 2nd | Q R to B 6th |

| 25. Q to K B sq | |

If 25. R to Q B 2nd, then follows 25. R to B 3rd, &c.

|---|---|
| 25. | R to Kt 6th (ch) |
| 26. R to Kt 2nd | R takes R (ch) |
| 27. Q takes R | Q to K 6th (ch), and wins. |

The following lively Skirmish occurred at Tingewick Rectory between the Rev. Mr. SKIRWORTH and the Rev. Mr. COKER.

(Double Gambit.)

| 3. P to Q Kt 4th | B takes Kt P |
| 4. P to K B 4th | P takes P |
| 5. Kt to K B 3rd | P to Q 3rd |

5. P to Q 4th, enabling him to retreat the Bishop to Q 3rd when White advances the Q B P, is unquestionably the best move here.

|---|---|
| 6. P to Q B 3rd | B to R 4th |
| 7. Castles | B to K Kt 5th |
| 8. Q to Kt 3rd | B to Kt 3rd (ch) |
| 9. P to Q 4th | B takes Kt |

It would have been safer to have retreated the Bishop to K R 4th. In justice to Mr. Coker, it should be said that he's error in this partie is much below his usual form.

|---|---|
| 10. B takes P (ch) | K to B sq |
| 11. R takes B | P to K Kt 4th |
| 12. R to R 5th | Kt to K B 3rd |
| 13. Q to K 6th | K to Kt 2nd |
| 14. R takes P | |

The right move well timed. There is no satisfactory reply to it.

|---|---|
| 14. | P takes R |
| 15. B takes P | Q to B 3rd |
| 16. B takes Kt (ch) | Q takes B |
| 17. Q mates. | |

In compliance with the wish of several correspondents, we give another problem by the Hermit of Tynnan:—

White: K at K B 3rd; Q at Q R 3rd; B at Q B 2nd; Kt at K Kt square; P at Q B 4th. (Five pieces.)

Black: K at K R 5th; Pawns at K R 3rd, K Kt 4th, and Q B 4th. (Four pieces.

White to play, and mate in three moves.

A match was played last week between the Bermondsey and Shaftesbury Clubs, and resulted in a victory for the former with a score of 5½ to 3½. It should be mentioned that the score of Shaftesbury includes one game forfeited through the absence of one of the Bermondsey champions.

A circular from the Carlisle Chess Club informs us that the members of that association meet for play, on the evenings of Tuesday and Friday, in each week, at the Border Café, Botchergate, and that the club is free to all chessplayers for occasional play. The circular is something more interesting than the conventional prospectus; for, in addition to the information cited above, it presents us with an extract from Mortimer Collins's essay in praise of chess as a recreation, and a diagrammed problem by a member of the club.

The French national tourney is drawing to a close, most of the seven competitors who entered the lists having only two more games to play. The highest scores at present stand to the credit of MM. Rosenthal, Clerc, and De Rivière, in the order named.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated June 6, 1873) with a codicil (dated Aug. 14, 1879) of Mr. Joseph Jones, late of Abberley Hall, Worcestershire, who died on Oct. 15 last, was proved on the 3rd inst. by John Joseph Jones, James Frederick Tweedale, and James Jones, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £500,000 in the United Kingdom. The testator bequeaths to his wife, Mrs. Emily Jones, all money due to him from the estate of his late father-in-law, in addition to the annuity settled on her at her marriage; to his executors, £100 each; to his nieces, Emily Atthill and Veronica Russwurm, annuities of £100 each for their respective lives; to his cousins, William Jones and James Jones, £30,000 each; and he devises all his manors, messuages, tenements, farm lands, mines, and hereditaments in the county of Worcester, to the use of his cousin, the said John Joseph Jones, for life, with remainder to his first and every other son successively, in tail male. The pictures, plate, books, bronzes, and articles of virtu at Abberley Hall are to be held as heirlooms with the mansion house; and the household furniture, effects, wines, horses and carriages are to be enjoyed by the first person who shall become tenant for life of the said property. The residue of his real and personal estate the testator gives to the said John Joseph Jones.

The will (dated Aug. 9, 1860) with a codicil (dated Aug. 4, 1869) of Mr. Henry Francis Shaw Lefevre, of 29, Green-street, Grosvenor-square, and 2, Copthall Buildings, City, the senior partner in the firm of Messrs. Henry Shaw Lefevre and Co., was proved by the executors, William James Farrer and William Wickham, on the 14th inst., the personalty being sworn under £350,000. Subject to provisions for carrying on the business, the testator divides his estate equally between his three daughters.

The will (dated July 20, 1880) of Mr. Ralph Sigismund Straus, late of Manchester, and of The Holme, Sedgley Park, Prestwich, Lancashire, merchant, who died on Nov. 7, last, was proved at the Manchester district registry on the 2nd ult. by Mrs. Josephine Straus, the widow, Sidney Ralph Straus and James Richard Straus, the sons, and Jacob Alphonse Weiller, the acting executors, the personal estate, including leaseholds, being sworn under £200,000. The testator leaves, to his wife 200,000 Reichmarks of his four per cent German Bonds, all his furniture, plate, wines, and household effects, and the sum of £2000, to be distributed at her discretion among public charitable institutions or private persons; legacies to his godchildren; and the residue of the personalty upon trust for his wife for life or widowhood, she maintaining and educating sons under twenty-one and daughters until marriage (in the event of her marrying again she is to have an annuity of £1000 instead of the life interest), and then for all his children in equal shares. The whole of his real estate he gives to his wife for life or widowhood, and then to all his sons.

The will (dated Oct. 7, 1871) with six codicils (dated between Dec. 31, 1873, and May 15, 1880) of Mr. Henry Wilson, late of Westbrook, Sheffield, who died on Nov. 16 last, has been proved at the Wakefield district registry by Mrs. Eliza Wilson, the widow, and Alfred Wilson, the son, the executors, the personal estate, including leaseholds, being sworn under £120,000. The testator leaves £1000 to the Church Pastoral Aid Society; £500 each to the British and Foreign Bible Society, the Church Missionary Society, to which he was a subscriber, and the Sheffield Church of England Scripture Readers' Society; the patronage of the churches of St. Stephen's, Sheffield, and St. Bartholomew's, Carbrook, near Sheffield, to Dr. Pelham, Bishop of Norwich, the Rev. Charles Kemble, the Rev. Edmund Holland, William Long, and C. J. Bevan as joint tenants; his moiety of the advowson of the vicarage of Sheffield, with the alternate right of presentation, to the Rev. William Carns, the Rev. John Venn, the Rev. Edmund Holland, the Rev. Edward Auriol, and the Rev. William Cadman as joint tenants; to his wife £20,000 and all the furniture, plate, pictures (except twelve oil-paintings, to be selected by his son), effects, horses and carriages at his residence, and for life his residence Westbrook and £2000 per annum; upon trust for his daughter Mrs. Elizabeth Harriet Thompson, £8000; upon trust for his daughter Mrs. Louisa Ellen Harland, £25,000; and there are bequests to his brothers-in-law and coachman. The residue of his property, real and personal, he gives to his said son Alfred.

The will (dated March 14, 1877) of Mr. John Frederick Franks, late of No. 7, St. James's-place, Westminster, and of Misterton Hall, Leicestershire, who died on Nov. 16 last, was proved on the 21st ult. by the Rev. William Edwards Partridge, Astley Paston Cooper, and William Thomas Carlisle, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £100,000. The testator bequeaths to his executors and to his brother-in-law, the Rev. Henry Teush Hecker, £200 each; to the children of his deceased nephew, Henry Teush Hecker, £1000 each; to Miss Mary Lætitia Eardley, £1500; and to the minister and churchwardens of the parish of Misterton, £2000 upon trust, to invest the same and to apply the dividends half-yearly for ever for the benefit of such of the poor of Misterton and Walcot, Leicestershire, as they may in their discretion think fit. All his real estate and the residue of the personalty he leaves upon trust, as to one moiety, for his niece Emma Catherine Teush Hecker, and, as to the other moiety, for his niece Frances Lily Teush Hecker.

The will (dated Sept. 26, 1870) of Mr. Richard May, late of Acorn Wharf, Old Kent-road, timber merchant, and of Pond House, Dulwich, who died on Nov. 20 last at Brighton, was proved on the 13th ult. by George May and Thomas May, the brothers, and Richard James May, the son, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £60,000. The testator bequeaths to his wife his household furniture and effects and an immediate legacy of £100—his leasehold properties in Kent-street, Southwark, are also left upon trust for her for life; to his niece, Annie Eliza Fentiman, £200; to "Spurgeon's College for Young Ministers," the Baptist College, near Bury, Lancashire, the Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society, the Female Reformatory, 200, Euston-road, and the Baptist Home and Irish Missionary Society, £100 each; to his said son the goodwill of his business, together with his leasehold premises, Acorn Wharf, subject to an annuity of £200 to his wife for life; and bequests to his executors. The residue of his estate, real and personal, is left upon trust for all his children in equal shares as tenants in common.

The will (dated May 3, 1861) of Mr. Acton Tindal, late of Aylesbury, Clerk of the Peace for the County of Bucks, who died on Oct. 26 last, was proved on the 27th ult. at the Oxford district registry by Nicolas Tindal-Carill-Worsley, the son, the personalty being sworn under £10,000. The testator leaves memorial legacies to his children, and the residue of his property to his wife, but, she having predeceased him, such residue will be divisible between his children, as next of kin.

A Civil List pension of £200 a year has been granted to Mr. Alfred R. Wallace, the eminent naturalist.

TO

OFFICERS,

NON-COMMISSIONED and OTHERS,

VISITING OR RESIDING IN HOT CLIMATES.

From the "European Mail" of Nov. 5, 1880.

"Of all the trials that man almost recklessly places upon his constitution, none perhaps is so severe and prominent with danger as that which accompanies a sudden and extreme change from a hot to a mild and cool climate, or in the reverse direction. At such times it is of the most vital importance that the body should be kept cool, and free from the most minute germs of disease. To effect this object, the judicious use of a saline is unquestionably the best safeguard that can be called into requisition, and of such preparations ENO'S FRUIT SALT may be said to be one of the best-conceived compounds. To residents in tropical climates the use of a medicinal comfort of this kind is indispensable, while its value in preventing prickly heat, boils, and whitlows is simply incalculable.

"Whatever may be the climatic conditions, the human body stands at all times, and under all circumstances, in need of some agent that will as thoroughly disinfect all its pores and air-tics against the liability to epidemic diseases as the disinfectants of sanitation purge the sewers of a populous town. At the same time, such are the special therapeutical properties of the FRUIT SALT that a tone is given to the system, the strength is fortified, and the spirits exhilarated.

"With the temperature upwards of 100 deg. in the shade, and the system consequently unstrung through fatiguing occupation, exercise, or study, a saline of the character like that prepared by Mr. Eno is a boon the value of which is scarcely to be estimated by those who have never lived under similar climatic conditions. In cases where the liability to attack from lungic, marsh, and yellow fever exists to an alarming degree, the daily use of the FRUIT SALT will be found a thoroughly effective preventive.

"Speaking more generally, it may be said that the use of the preparation has a marked effect in improving the general health of persons of scorbutic habit, as well as of those who are liable to epileptic affections. In the latter case attacks may be warded off by the patient taking a full dose of the saline in a tumbler of cold water immediately upon feeling unwell, while persons suffering from nervous and dyspeptic headaches should take a spoonful in about half the quantity of water. Mention has been made of the mode of applying the remedy prepared by Mr. Eno for use in regard to these two classes of disorders with the view of showing the extreme simplicity of the mode of action, no less than that of the agent employed.

"In cases of irritability of the stomach, nausea, vomiting, sea-sickness, rheumatism, gout, and many other of the ills which human flesh is heir to, ENO'S FRUIT SALT not only claims, but has been proved again and again to possess remedial properties of a marvellously high order, and no household that wisely counts the comfort and safety of its members—whether located under the sun of England or India, or Southern Africa, the West Indies, or Australasia—will neglect to provide itself with a safeguard to health at once so pure, simple, and effective as the preparation which has caused the patentee's name to be a household word from one end of the earth to the other."

SUCCESS IN LIFE.

"A new invention is brought before the public and commands success. A score of abominable imitations are immediately introduced by the unscrupulous, who, in copying the original closely enough to deceive the public, and yet not so exactly as to infringe upon legal rights, exercise an ingenuity that, employed in an original channel, could not fail to secure reputation and profit."—Adams.

FLORIMEL OF PALM.

A white and delicate hand is the first attribute of beauty and civilisation. "The hand," says Sir Charles Bell in the "Bridgewater Treatise," "distinguishes man from the brute; be careful of it, for in polite society it is an index not only of the body but of the mind."

The Florimel of Palm being rubbed over the skin is to be removed with a little water, then dried with a soft towel. Once using will convince the most sceptical that, it easily applied, has much cause to be said in favour of Florimel of Palm for rendering the skin or hands white, delicate, soft, and fair.

Sold in Jars, 3s. 6d. each.

PIESSE and LUBIN, 2, New Bond-street, London.
May be obtained of any Chemist or Perfumer in the world.

TURKISH PASTILS.

"Through all my travels few things astonished me more than seeing the beauties of the harem smoking Narghiles at Stamboul. After smoking a sweet aromatic incense or pastil as used by them, which is said to impart an odour of flowers to the breath, I have never seen those beauties spit but once in Europe, and that was at PIESSE and LUBIN'S shop in Bond-street."—Lady W. Montagu.

ROWLANDS' ODONTO is the purest and most fragrant dentifrice ever made. All dentists will allow that neither washes nor pastes can possibly be a efficacious for preserving the teeth and keeping them sound and white as a pure and non-gritty tooth powder; such Rowlands' Odonto has always proved itself to be.

ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL has been known for the last eighty years as the best and safest preserver and beautifier of the hair. It contains no lead or mineral ingredients, and is especially adapted for the hair of children. Sold in usual four sizes. Ask any Chemist, Perfumer, or Hairdresser for Rowlands' Articles.

THE SKIN.—The glory of woman, the pride of man. It contains the delicate lines of beauty and constitutes all that we term "loveliness;" yet how many thousands have their skins blemished by the use of the irritant soaps. Carbolic, Coal Tar, Glycerine, and the coarse coloured soaps, caustic with alkali and made of putrid fats. The more delicate the skin the quicker its ruin. The ALBION MILK AND SULPHUR SOAP is the purest, the whitest, and most purifying of all Soaps, by its purifying action taking away and preventing all pimples, blotches, and roughness. It is recommended by the entire Medical Profession as the most elegant preparation for the skin that is known. By all Chemists, in Tablets, 6d. and 1s. G. OVEREND DREWRY, M.D., Physician to the National Free Dispensary for Consumption and Wasting Diseases, Author of "Common-Sense Management of the Stomach," &c., referring to cases treated at the National Free Dispensary for Consumption and Wasting Diseases, says that "'Hydroleine' (or Hydrated Oil) produces an effect such as neither cod-liver oil nor any preparation of it with which I am acquainted even faintly approaches, and patients are unanimous in their statement that the appetite is much increased by taking 'Hydrated Oil,' and that, so far from possessing the unpleasant taste of ordinary cod-liver oil, the taste of 'Hydrated Oil' is agreeable rather than the reverse, and is described by some as resembling Devonshire cream. These, I submit, are very important points in cases usually attended by great irritability of stomach. The general improvement in strength shown within a fortnight was in many instances surprising, even to myself, who had seen already in private practice many startling results from its use. My experience, however, shows that in cases where cod-liver oil or an emulsion of it has been depended upon, increase of weight is rarely obtained."—Page 16.

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil),
Equal to Ten times the quantity of Cod-Liver Oil.

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil)
Entirely supersedes plain Cod-Liver Oil.

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil)
Produces rapid increase in flesh.

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil)
Is certain in result, and is pleasant to take.

TRY YOUR WEIGHT!!

TRY YOUR WEIGHT.—HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil) has proved of the highest value as a food in consumption and all wasting diseases, invariably producing increase in flesh and weight. This preparation of Hydrated Cod-Liver Oil is tonic, digestive, and ten times more strengthening and nourishing, as well as far more pleasant to taste, than plain cod-liver oil. Hydroleine may be described as partially digested oil, which will nourish and produce increase of weight in those cases where oils or fat, not so treated, are difficult or impossible to digest. All tendency to emaciation and loss of weight is arrested by the regular use of Hydroleine, which may be discontinued when the usual average weight has been permanently acquired. Of all Chemists, 4s. 6d.; or sent direct, carriage paid, to any address in England for 54.—Sold wholesale by the ANGLO-AMERICAN DRUG COMPANY, Limited, 33, Farringdon-road, London.

READ the following Extracts from a few among the hundreds of letters received, showing that HYDROLEINE will nourish and cause increase of flesh and increase in weight where plain cod-liver oil will not; the original letters, with many others, may be seen at our Office.

DR. AUSTIN, of Sunnyside, East Grinstead, writing on May 13, 1880, says:—"I recommended one patient to get it, and he gained 8 lb. weight in a week; left it off next week, and lost 4 lb. This speaks well."

MR. JAS. STEWART, Chemist, of Dalkeith, writing April 28, 1877, says:—"I weighed only 11st lb. on March 25, took the Hydroleine very irregularly I must confess, and on April 16 weighed 12st. 4lb. I found it very pleasant to take, never experienced the least approach to eructation, and rather think it acted very much as a tonic."

WRITING of Hydrated Oil on May 14, 1877, Mr. KENNETH M'DONALD, of Dunkeld, says:—"I had been taking cod-liver oil all winter myself, and thought I would first experimentally test it with the Hydroleine, and I must say, whether it is that or not, I am much better; in fact, at night-time, and I certainly give it the credit, and will recommend it to all in preference to the ordinary oil—it is much easier taken."

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil) has been favourably received by all classes of people, as well as the press, as the following extracts will show:—

MRS. ELLEN COOKE, Weston-super-Mare, in a letter dated May 24, 1879, says:—"I think the last bottle you sent me has saved the life of a little boy three years old."

MR. J. H. GREGORY, Master of Caxton Workhouse, Cambs., writing on March 12, 1880, says:—"The effect of the bottle I received from you was marvellous, as I increased nearly 4 lb. in weight, and felt better in every way."

MRS. MARYATT, Bayswater, W., writing on Jan. 29, 1877, speaks of the Hydrated Oil in the following terms:—"My little boy (aged five and a half years) is so extremely fond of it that he will take it just as it is, without the ginger or orange wine, and will smack his lips after it. As for myself, I can never sound its praises too loudly. I consider it a perfect life-giver."

MR. JOHN MILTON, writing from Liverpool on June 7, 1877, says:—"Five weeks ago a small pamphlet was handed to me descriptive of your Hydroleine, and since that time my wife has been taking just one bottle a week with certain benefit."

MR. A. BOYCE, Chemist, Hayward's-heath, writing on July 9, 1877, says:—"I have given it to several consumptive cases, and am pleased to inform you with very good result. The effect of it on two persons (children) has been wonderful. I am trying to make it known very widely."

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil)
Is not a patent medicine.

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil)
Has the formula upon every bottle.

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil)
Is used to increase flesh.

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil)
May be relied upon to increase weight.

THE CHEMICAL PRINCIPLES upon which HYDRATED OIL is prepared were first described in a treatise on the Assimilation and Digestion of Fat in the Human Body, by H. C. Bartlett, Ph.D., F.C.S., published by Messrs. J. and A. Churchil, New Burlington-street (Fat in the Human Body, page 41)—Nothing appears to restore the healthy functions of the liver and pancreas in these cases except the frequent ingestion of oil or liquid fat, so treated artificially that it is already partially transformed by fermentation and the reaction of bile, before it comes in contact with the absorbents. It is insensibly assimilated by the digestive organs, until they gradually become strengthened, not only to provide their own nourishment, but to transform a sufficient quantity of fat to supply the inevitable waste throughout the body."

ALL persons taking HYDROLEINE are particularly urged to WEIGH ACCURATELY from WEEK to WEEK of their WEIGHT, that the gain and improvement may be shown. The makers, having devoted special attention to perfecting a process by means of which uniformity in the production of HYDRATED OIL is secured, desire to direct the attention of the medical profession and the public to this preparation, to distinguish which the name of HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil) has been registered under the Trade-Marks Acts. Ask your Chemist for it. If your Chemist has not the "Hydroleine" in stock, a bottle will be sent from the Factory (carriage paid) to any part of England, on receipt of Post-Office Order, 5s. Sold whole ale by the ANGLO-AMERICAN DRUG COMPANY, Limited, 33, Farringdon-road, London. Pamphlet sent free to any address.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, JANUARY 29, 1881.

Coercion Bills in Parliament and Arctic weather outside form the staple of a rather cheerless tale of this week's affairs. Of the latter we speak first. It has overtaken us in the natural course of things. We had hoped to be spared the calamity—for calamity it is—but the severity of the season, although some time postponed, set in at last with sudden vigour. It caught us unprepared, of course. The memorable snowstorm of Tuesday so might buried, for the time being, many objects upon which the eye had been accustomed to look—but it also disclosed, in London at least, certain matters which have been regarded with characteristic indifference. The Municipal Government of the Metropolis has stood out in hideous relief. For a while, business was at a standstill. All the machinery of commercial and social life became dislocated. The streets, even the main thoroughfares, were wellnigh impassable. The doors of dwelling-houses and, in some places, of warehouses were barricaded by snowdrifts. Crystallised particles were driven by a fierce north-east wind through every crack and cranny upon which it blew. Chimneys, here and there, crashed through the roofs. It seemed as though no place of secure refuge was left to inmates. In the Provinces, almost every considerable town and even village has had its history, not of inconvenience merely, but of danger, suffering, and woe. Railway communications have been seriously interrupted. Whole trains have been embedded in snow-wreaths and have passed hours in their isolated position. Happily, the railway authorities, one and all, energetically wrestled with the evil which beset locomotion. The experience we have passed through is exceptional. The losses we have sustained cannot yet be fully known. What is in store for the future is equally uncertain. But no one in this country, least of all in the Metropolis itself, will be likely to forget the winter of January, 1881, nor the terrible snowstorm with which it has been distinguished.

It seems a luckless season in which to be concocting coercive law for Ireland. Let us not, however, permit ourselves to be run away with by sentimental imagination. A reign of terror paralysing all the ordinary movements of social life is more to be dreaded than Draconic laws. Mr. W. E. Forster's description of what is taking place in many parts of Ireland certainly prepares us to acquiesce, for a few months, in a despotism not more formidable than that which now follows the proceedings of the Land League, and not likely to be exercised save for the purpose of protecting persons and property. Nevertheless, it is a frightful weapon which Parliament is asked to put into the hands of the Executive. There cannot be a doubt as to the extreme reluctance with which her Majesty's Ministers have agreed to seek the additional powers which, in present circumstances, they hold to be necessary. That fact, at least, is a guarantee that they will exercise them as sparingly as possible. To arrest and to detain in custody upon mere suspicion is a stretch of authority which nothing but extreme emergency can for a moment justify. It is a sad case when personal liberty is placed at the discretion of a Police Force, even when that force is under the immediate supervision and guidance of so cautious and kind-hearted a statesman as the present Chief Secretary for Ireland. But he, at any rate, is responsible for the use he may make of the authority intrusted to him, and Parliament (to say nothing of the country) will keenly watch his every movement in the suppression of the evils he has described. Most of those evils—so far as they proceed from organised action—result from the machinations of but very few persons well known to the Police. Remove them, and you really set free a large portion of the inhabitants of Ireland who, through fear, acknowledge their sway. Many of them, it is probable, will not wait to be removed. They will be off to concealment, or they will cross the Atlantic, as soon as Government shall be armed with the power of laying hands upon them. This, be it remembered, is but indirectly and remotely a political movement; but is primarily a social one. It is more seeming than real, or, at all events, its reality consists far more in what it seems than what it is. But the longer it lasts the more contagious is its influence. The sooner it is efficiently dealt with the sooner will society in Ireland throw off the spell of terror which now binds it fast.

The facts and the legitimate inferences from them which have already been brought under the notice of Parliament and the country illustrate and explain the intense desire of the Ministry to put off their disagreeable task as long as might be. What has already come to light has served to show how useless it would have been to have made a premature attempt to do what is now being slowly done. It is well, perhaps, that the Cabinet was not moved to undertake in an Autumnal Session last year the responsibility they have not eventually shirked. The grounds upon which they now base their demands would not have been nearly so strong if they had not patiently waited over Christmas. But, having waited, it is to be hoped that they will put up with no formal obstructions within their power to remove. It does seem to us, however, that, in deference to the wishes of not a few of their friends, they might wisely communicate to the House of Commons, as soon as may be, the substance of that permanent relief legislation which is to follow closely upon the heels of the Coercion Acts. We have never seen much practical good evolve itself from mystery. The frankest tactics are, in the long run, the safest. What men may think when under the fullest light of information they can seldom think too soon. Concealment does not ordinarily alter the definitive judgment of the people. It may be, however, that modifications of a permanent Land Bill, in accordance with the evidence taken before the two Commissions, are intended, and hence no sufficiently definite outline of the Measure may have been agreed upon. If such should chance to be the case, it may fairly be presumed that the more advanced Liberals will refrain from disconcerting the plan of procedure arranged by the Government. Theory is one thing, practice is another; and it sometimes happens that the first is compelled to yield in some particulars to the last. Public law must in any case be vindicated where it has been set aside by private combination, and, as soon as its authority has been re-established, should be revised and readapted to the wants of the people. Happily, in the present instance, they who bear rule over the United Kingdom have given pledges of their deep attachment to freedom of person and action sufficient to authorise our trust in their good intentions. That they will misapply the powers with which they are furnished by Parliament is not to be suspected of them. That they will strive to do the best, consistently with justice, which they can do for the welfare of the Irish people, may well be believed. Unwillingly they ask of us what unwillingly we must give them. But let the responsibility be theirs, and we have little doubt that they will honourably discharge it. Their task is onerous enough. True Liberals will see that they are not needlessly worried in the performance of it.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

Although the elements continued to be unpropitious, and Wednesday, the nineteenth, was one of the most miserable days of the miserable fortnight the anguish of which we have been shiveringly enduring, I contrived by hook and by crook (I say "and" instead of "or," since both hooks and crooks were needed to accomplish the feat of travelling through the snow-drifts and the icebergs between the Foundling Hospital and Great Portland-street) to reach the Central Synagogue, and to be a most interested and edifying spectator of the marriage of Mr. Leopold de Rothschild to Mdlle. Marie Perugia.

I remember once having been a guest at a Jewish wedding at Tangiers, in Morocco. The nuptial rite took place in the patio, or courtyard; and the festivities extended over two, if not three, days. The bride was dressed and redressed in rich apparel a great number of times; eating, drinking, tambourine-banging, and performances on ear-piercing fifes went on almost without intermission; and immense quantities of very sticky sweetmeats were flung broadcast among the company.

Pageantry of this kind was altogether absent from the Rothschild-Perugia wedding, which was, nevertheless, a very imposing display, with just enough Orientalism about it to make it picturesque. The architecture of the interior of the Synagogue (of which there is a capital engraving in Cassell's Old and New London, Vol. iv. p. 457) is decidedly Moresco to begin with; and the decorations of the recess in which is the Ark containing the Sacred Scrolls of the Law (a recess corresponding with the niche called the Mihrab, in which, in a Mohammedan mosque, the Koran is deposited) are tastefully Saracenic. Doctrinal reasons, not to be touched on here, do not, it would seem, allow the officiating rabbis to wear sacerdotal vestments; so that none of the gorgeous priestly robes which you see figured in Dom Calmet's "History of the Bible" were visible in the Synagogue on the nineteenth. The custom that all, congregation as well as celebrants, should remain covered does not strike as being strange those who have been in the habit of visiting Oriental mosques; still, surveying the great company of Christians and Jews assembled in the Portland-street Synagogue, one could scarcely fail to be struck by the exceeding ugliness of that essentially modern form of headgear, the modern "stove-pipe" hat. In combination with a plain black gown and bands of white linen, like unto those of the Anglican (moderate) clergy, the stove-pipe hat was certainly not æsthetic. There was, however, close to me a strikingly handsome, auburn-bearded Rabbin (a foreigner, I wonder?) who, in lieu of the objectionable "chimney-pot," wore a kind of black velvet biretta, or porringer of black velvet, the effect of which was very pleasing.

Mem.: In Picart's "Rites and Ceremonies (Vol. i. p. 140) there are some very elaborate engravings illustrating the nuptial ceremonies among the Jews in Portugal and Germany at the beginning of the last century. In the Portuguese rite the bride, amply veiled, sits on a throne on a dais under a rich canopy, and she is flanked by two venerable ladies, looking more like brides-grandmothers than bridesmaids. The bridegroom, surrounded by a numerous assemblage of "backers up" (elsewhere known, I believe, as unterführen), is at the foot of the throne, and is casting down the glass or "brittle vessel" which he is subsequently to trample underfoot. In the German rite the ceremony takes place in a courtyard, to the sound of many musical instruments. The bride and bridegroom are covered by the same large square white veil, and beneath this common veil is another, a black one. At the Rothschild-Perugia wedding this veil was replaced by the nuptial canopy—a very sumptuous "arrangement" in crimson and gold, supported on gilt columns.

The Morning Post will have told you all about the grand folk, Princes in Christendom as well as in Israel, who were present at the wedding. Touching the toilettes of the fashionable ladies present, I find it stated in the Daily Telegraph and the Standard that the Countess of Rosebery wore a purple satin dress, and a white hat set with diamonds, and adorned with ostrich feathers. The Daily News said that her Ladyship wore "a plush gown." Now, I am very blind; still, my eyes served me well enough to be able to discern, close to his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, the faces and forms of the Earl of Rosebery, Lord Londesborough, Lord Dorchester, Colonel Loyd-Lindsay "and many more." But I failed to see the noble châtelaine of Mentmore for the very same reason which, on a memorable occasion, caused the Spanish fleet to be invisible to the naked eye. The Countess of Rosebery was "not in sight" any more than the Spanish fleet was. It was the Baroness James de Rothschild whom my contemporaries mistook for the Countess. Another contemporary speaks of her Ladyship's "heliotrope bonnet." As well might he have alluded to her "round tires like the Moon." Lady Rosebery's state of health, as most people know, was far too delicate on Wednesday se'nnight to warrant her physicians in allowing her to be present at the wedding at all.

Touching a potential "horsey" library for a country house, a very few books for which I glanced at last week, a correspondent at Eastbourne informs me that he is the possessor of a great work on equitation, which he believes to be scarce. I do not know whether the book to which my correspondent alludes is scarce, but a copy of it, in good condition, is certainly costly. Very highly do I prize my own copy of "La Méthode Nouvelle; ou Invention Extraordinaire pour Dresser les Chevaux, par le très noble, haut et très puissant Prince Guillaume, Marquis et Comte de Newcastle, Vicomte de Mansfield, Baron de Bolsover et Ogle, Seigneur de Cavendish, Bothel et Hepwell, Pair d'Angleterre, &c., &c., &c." This superb work, in two folio volumes (of which the English translation is known "in the trade" as "the Duke of Newcastle's Horsemanship") was first published at Antwerp in 1657, when a certain Oliver Cromwell (himself no mean judge of horseflesh · did he not own the "Coffin" Mare?) was Lord Protector of the Commonwealth of England. The original plates, magnificently engraved in line, are by French artists.

Mem.: One of the frontispieces (there are several) is a grand tableau of My Lord of Newcastle in a Roman habit and wearing his Marquis's coronet, enthroned in a triumphal chariot, drawn by two centaurs. He is surrounded by a circle of wild horses, kneeling in adoration. We have all heard of "proper pride;" and the accomplished nobleman who, at his own expense, gave this important contribution to "horsey" literature to the world, took certainly a proper estimate of his own worth. The chief "cracks" in his stud seem to have been "Parragon, un Barb," "Machicola, un Turq," and "Nobilissima, un Coursier Napolitain." They are all steeds of a kind which seems to have almost entirely disappeared from the modern haras—lumbering horses, with prodigiously high crests, hollow backs, and round and drooping quarters, like the old pictures of the "Godolphin Arabian"—which was not an Arabian, but a barb. The English translation, published by Brindley, of Pall-mall, bookseller to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, 1753, is in one sense more interesting than the French original; since, in addition to all the French plates, it contains a number of engraved headings to chapters and culs de lampe illustrative of the military manège in the last years of the reign of George II. Thus, on one page you see, in his habit as he lived, the Cavalier who fought at Naseby and Worcester, and on the other the trooper who was with "Johnnie Cope" at Prestonpans, and with Duke William at Culloden. The titles of many more "horsey" books, "which no country gentleman's library should be without," have occurred or have been suggested to me since penning last week's paragraph; but the exigencies of space constrain me to hold them over.

Should cabmen be allowed to charge more than the legal fare during the continuance of this fearfully arctic weather? Mr. Vaughan, the humane and considerate magistrate at Bow-street, appears—to judge from a recent decision of his—to hold the opinion that cabmen have no right whatever to make the frost and snow an apology for demanding extra remuneration. A day or two since a driver was summoned before Mr. Vaughan for refusing to take a gentleman late at night from the Freemasons' Tavern to Shepherd's-bush for less than ten shillings. That would have been nearly three times his legal fare. The same cabman demanded four shillings as a fare from Great Queen-street to St. Pancras; say double his ordinary due. The magistrate, in convicting the defendant, and fining him twelve shillings and costs, observed that the extortion practised by cabmen during the present weather was becoming very serious. They had no right, he continued, to ask more than their legal fare, whatever the state of the weather might be. If they did, they rendered themselves liable to be proceeded against. The defendant pleaded for time to pay the penalty imposed on him; but the magistrate refused to accede to his request, remarking that a case had come under his notice where a gentleman who wished to be driven from Euston Terminus to the Reform Club, Pall-mall, was unable to obtain a cab under a payment of two guineas.

Personally, I incline very strongly to the opinion that cabdrivers, under the present terribly exceptional circumstances, are entitled to receive a considerable addition to their usual remuneration—say a fare and a half during the day, and double fare after ten o'clock at night. The sufferings which these poor men endure in severely wintry weather are simply awful. They have to face the wind, the cold, and the snow, and many of the drivers (in particular the four-wheeled cabmen) are well stricken in years, and are often martyrs to rheumatism, asthma, and bronchitis. Moreover, inclement weather such as the present puts them to great additional expense; since the price of almost every requisite for their equipment has risen.

The trouble in the matter is that if the cabmen are allowed unchecked impunity to charge what they like, the door will be opened to a system of the most monstrous extortion; and the practice of demanding fantastic fares will create so revolutionary a disturbance in cab economy that, long after a Thaw has made London herself again, overcharging will be common, and the relations between cabdrivers and passengers will be on the worst possible footing. I have always thought it a pity that hackney carriage fares should be permanently fixed by Act of Parliament. Free trade in fares is, of course, impracticable under our present conditions of civilisation; but surely the tariff might be adjusted (as it is in provincial cities) by municipal rules and regulations, including a sliding scale of prices, and admitting of the regulations being temporarily suspended in cases of sudden and momentous urgency.

An officer on board H.M.S. "Elk" writes me from Buenos Ayres to make inquiry as to the origin of the saying, "Who would not sell his farm and go to sea?" Good Master Lieutenant, may you live a thousand years; but I do not know. There is no mention of selling one's farm and going to sea in Admiral Smyth's "Dictionary of Nautical Terms." Of course I went to the last edition of Mrs. Cowden Clarke's "Concordance to Shakspeare," which Messrs. Bickers kindly sent me the other day. But there is nothing in the Concordance about selling a farm and going to sea. Curiously enough, in the whole of Shakspeare specific mention of farms and farmers does not occur more than a dozen times, and there is only one solitary allusion (in the "Merry Wives of Windsor") to a farm-house. On the other hand, "palace" appears thirty-nine times, and "castle" forty-five; while there are one hundred and eighty-seven mentions of "prison," "prisoners," "prison-house," and "prisonment." There must have been a good deal more misery than felicity in the "good old times," I fancy; and that is why people enjoyed themselves so uproariously. They never knew when they might be flung into the dark dungeon beneath the castle moat, or tried up to the gallows, or brought to the block.

My gallant correspondent at Buenos Ayres adds that the expression of the derivation of which he is in quest is in constant use in the Royal Navy, mainly among the officers; although on rare occasions he has heard it employed by the men.

In the Wills and Bequests section of this Journal for Jan. 15, I noticed that probate had been granted to the will of Don Joaquin Procopio Gemoro de la Trinidad Beistegui y Garcia, formerly of Mexico, whose property in England was sworn under £400,000. I wonder whether the deceased Don was the gentleman with whom I travelled seventeen years ago from Mexico city to the great silver-mines of Real del Monte, of which he was one of the chief owners. The country at the time was swarming with banditti; and I remember that we travelled with an escort composed of an omnibus full, in and out, of French Zouaves, and drawn by twelve mules; a squadron of mounted "contra guerrilleros" armed with lances (contra guerrilleros were reformed highwaymen, who had turned honest under the incentive of a dollar a day and the keep of a horse), and a brass field-piece.

The Mexican millionaire told me a very curious story of the system of coercion made use of by the Republican Government just previous to that French expedition which culminated in the elevation to a phantom throne of the unfortunate Emperor Maximilian. The Ministry at Mexico were in the most desperate shifts for ready money; and the system adopted for "raising the wind" was, from time to time, to kidnap some leading merchant or banker, and literally to starve him into making a large financial advance to the Government. If the kidnapped candidate was robust, he might hold out, say, for forty-eight hours; but sooner or later hunger was sure to have the mastery, and he succumbed to the "persuasion" of the Mexican Government. There was a kind of price current for the refreshments supplied "for a consideration" to the wealthy prisoner. A roast chicken, I was informed, could not be obtained under 50,000 dols.; while a puchero with frijoles (boiled beef and black beans) was accounted cheap at 10,000 pesos.

If I remember aright, my lamented friend Don Eustaquio Barron, of the great banking-house of Barron, Forbes, and Co., had never been subjected to this financial pressure. He was a British subject (he was once, indeed, her Majesty's Consul at San Blas), and he kept in his house in the Calle San Francisco, Mexico, a British flag of prodigious size. Whenever political things looked unusually ugly, up went the colossal Union Jack on the roof of the Barronian mansion; and the kidnappers desisted from molesting Don Eustaquio. Poor gentleman! He was the kindliest and most generous of hosts and friends, and he should be alive now, and merry;—but there is no armour against Fate.

I note the recent publication by Messrs. Cassell of the Twelfth Edition of Dr. E. Cobham Brewer's "Dictionary of Phrase and Fable." The singular copiousness and minuteness of detail to be found in this treasury of derivations or origins of Common phrases, allusions, and "Words that have a Tale to Tell" may be well instanced in the term "Brosier." Eton boys know well enough in what "brosiering" consists; but the reading public at large has to be told by Dr. Brewer that to "brosier" is to eat one out of house and home: and that at Eton, when a "dame" keeps an unusually bad table, the boys agree on a given day to devour, alienate, and waste everything eatable in the house. The censure is generally understood, and the hint usually effective with the dame. Dr. Brewer derives "brosier" as a verb active from the Greek brasо, to eat.

Another "word that has a Tale to Tell" has not escaped the notice of Dr. Brewer in the case of "Dundreary, Lord." This he defines as "the impersonation of a good-natured, indolent, blundering, empty-headed 'swell,' the chief character in Mr. Tom Taylor's dramatic piece of 'Our American Cousin.' Mr. Sothern created the character of Lord Dundreary by the power of his conception and the genius of his acting."

I beg to tender my sincere thanks to Mr. Behramji M. Malabari, who sends me all the way from the Queen's-road, Chowpatty, Bombay, some numbers of a periodical which he is editing, entitled "The Indian Spectator." Mr. Malabari likewise writes me in a flowing Italian hand, and in excellent English, a very polite note, in which he tells me that he is "a young Parsee, an intense admirer of English literature, an amateur rhymester, a political reformer, journalist," and many other things besides. He says that he loves the Bible (although he is not a Christian), Shakspeare, Carlyle, Thackeray, Dickens, &c.—I hope he likes George Eliot and Charles Lamb. The numbers of the "Indian Spectator" have not yet come to hand (they have been snowed up, probably), but when they do, I will promise to read them.

Still, notwithstanding the malignity of the weather, the foreign mails are coming in somehow. From the "Circolo Filologico di Firenze" I receive, with the signature of its Inspector, Dr. Lorenzo Conte, a courteous invitation to attend a grand musical and rhetorical solemnity to be held at Florence on Thursday, the Twenty-seventh, in commemoration of the anniversary of the first condemnation inflicted (to the shame of his native country) on Dante Alighieri. Was this the proscription of Dante after Corso Donati and the other leaders of the Neri had become supreme in Florence and drove out the "divino poeta," to wander in exile and poverty far from the wife and children whom he loved—far from all things most dear:—"Ogni cosa diletta più caramente!" But how can one think of crossing the Alps in this wretched weather? I must telegraph something polite to the Circolo Filologico di Firenze.

I was tendering Dr. Cobham Brewer respectful eulogy just now; but a query addressed to me by a lady correspondent writing from the Junkerngasse, Berne, Switzerland, reminds me that Dr. Brewer, like the good Homer, can sometimes nod. Is the word "Dukery," "writes "E. C.," an English word, and what does it mean? Now "Dukery," or rather "Dukeries," ought to be in the "Dictionary of Phrase and Fable;" but the word is not to be found there. I confess that, although I have heard, time out of mind, that there is a district in the English Midlands popularly called "The Dukeries," from the number of ducal estates which are conterminous or nearly conterminous there, I have been so bad a traveller in my own country that I have not the slightest idea as to where the "Dukeries" are actually situated. I have not the honour to know any Dukes; and I never went hunting nor shooting in my life; and I am neither a pedlar, nor a gipsy, nor a "walkist" or tramp; so why should I know where the "Dukeries" are?

PARISIAN SAYINGS AND DOINGS.

Paris, Tuesday, Jan. 25.

The snow last week threw the postal service between France and England into such disarray that my letter did not reach London until the Illustrated London News was already on its way to the uttermost ends of the earth. This week I hope that the elements will enable me to keep my engagement with my readers. The great topic of conversation here, as in London, is the snow and the cold, which has been excessive. The whole town is still covered with a white mantle; the Champs-Elysées remind one of one of Cremer's snow pictures. Sledges abound, and the mondaines and mondaines, wrapped in their voluminous furs, imagine themselves in the Newsky Parade. Alas! we are not prepared as the Russians are to combat the cold. Parisian houses have neither double windows nor double doors. The common staircases are receptacles for all the damp and cold that accumulate in the street; the fireplaces are constructed so as to allow the greater part of the heat to escape up the chimney; in new houses the joinery does no credit to the modern Parisian workman; coachmen become exorbitant; small boys become obstreperous; and servant-maids amuse themselves, in spite of the police, in shovelling snow off the balconies on to the heads of innocent wayfarers.

How terrible, too, is such weather for those who have no right to be sick! Singers and cantatrices come under this category. During the last fortnight the manager of the Opera has been in constant tribulation. It was in vain that his pensionnaires had themselves wrapped up like the serpents at the Jardin des Plantes; sneaking draughts have been constantly introducing into their precious larynges those unwelcome visitors known as chats. In fact, the only people who are happy at Paris are the Esquimaux, now on exhibition at the Jardin d'Acclimatation. The Parisians are wretched, although the Municipality has brought out snow-ploughs, snow-melters, and armies of street-sweepers.

The snow has been the cause of a terrible accident. In order to enable cartloads of snow to be shot down directly into the sewers wells have been constructed all over the town. These wells are generally in the middle of the streets or squares. On Friday a little girl, Georgette Babin, slipped down one of these wells in the crowded Rue des Petites Ecuries just as a cartload of snow was being shot down. The body has not yet been found. What a terrible death! The poor little girl was only nine years of age.

The Chambers met for serious business on Thursday last. MM. Léon Say and Gambetta were re-elected Presidents of the Senate and Chamber respectively. In thanking his colleagues for the honour they had conferred upon him M. Gambetta reviewed the past work of the present Parliament, and pointed out what remained to be done in a veritable Speech from the Throne. This speech was delivered on Friday. On the previous day M. Gambetta had been the guest of the Parisian marchands de vin, and had made another important speech, in which he briefly sketched out his programme of a progressive Republic, and referred to the defeat of the revolutionary element in the recent Municipal elections.

Apropos of revolutions, how long will it be before the reputedly revolutionary Parisians will rise up in rebellion against the crushing tyranny of concierges? The Cerberus that keeps the door of every house in Paris is, with rare exceptions, a nuisance. In the days of the Empire he was often a mouchard; in the days of the Republic he has added murder to his other bad qualities.

Last Thursday week (the snow is the cause of my news being so old) a young doctor, M. André Poullin, who had just obtained his diploma and was about to enter upon a career which promised to be brilliant, fell a victim to the vengeance of a drunken concierge. Dr. Poullin lived with his brother in a house in the Rue Jacob that belonged to the family. The door-keeper of this house was a man named Cubilier, who was an habitual drunkard, and of whom the tenants were constantly complaining. Young Dr. Poullin at last persuaded his brother to send the fellow away. Cubilier knew that the young doctor was the principal cause of his dismissal, and his rage became fiercer as the end of his term approached. Finally, on Thursday night, when the Poullin family gave a dinner, to celebrate the doctor's success, Cubilier could contain himself no longer. He lay in wait for Dr. Poullin and shot him in the back with a double-barrelled gun. The contents of the second barrel were divided amongst the three persons who came up to assist the victim. Dr. Poullin died the following morning, and the three other persons are in the hospital, severely wounded. The concierge Cubilier tried to commit suicide after he had shot Dr. Poullin; but he did not succeed, and he is now in the hospital, being cured of his wounds and carefully prepared for the vengeance of society.

The French artists are working out a revolution of their own. The Salon this year will not be under the control and patronage of the State. The State simply provides the galleries of the Palais de l'Industrie at a nominal rent; as to the organisation of the exhibition, the admission of pictures and the distribution of prizes, the artists will this year, for the first time, be entirely free. In spite of all its efforts to please, in spite of annual changes in the conditions of the exhibition and the composition of the jury, the State has hitherto failed to win anything but reproaches; now the artists will be left to manage their affairs themselves, with what success remains to be seen. An executive committee of ninety members has been elected, who will be charged with the organisation of the Salon—namely, fifty for painting, twenty for sculpture, ten for engraving, and ten for architecture. In this committee all groups and all opinions are represented, and its eclectic character is in many respects a faithful representation of the present state of French art. As regards the Salon exhibition, there is a tendency, that has long been becoming more and more strongly pronounced, to substitute for it private exhibitions. The man who first constructs a convenient picture-gallery in Paris, such as you have in London by the rozen, will certainly not lack support as far as the artists are concerned.

The book of the week is a volume of the Souvenirs de Madame Cordier Jaubert (Hetzel et Cie.). Madame Jaubert was a daughter of D'Alton-Shée, and her salon has seen most of the celebrities of this century, from 1840 upwards. The principal personages about whom Madame Jaubert gossips in the present volume are Henri Heine, Berryer, Lamfrey, and Alfred de Musset, a number of whose letters she publishes.

The Paris theatres during the past week have been dull. A new comic opera called "Janot," by MM. Meilhac and Halévy, music by Lecocq, was brought out at the Renaissance on Saturday. It is gay and amusing, but not otherwise remarkable. M. Zola's piece, "Nana," is being prepared at the Ambigu, with an unparalleled amount of preliminary puffing. Madame Favart has left the Comédie Française, on account of a slight cast upon her by the meanness of M. Perrin, the manager, in concert with the Sociétaires. The eminent actress has been engaged at the Odéon to play in a new piece by Coppée, "Madame de Maintenon."

THE REVOLT IN THE TRANSVAAL.

A full month is required for the large military reinforcements sent from England in the first week of January to arrive in Natal. But Sir George Pomeroy Colley, the Governor and Commander-in-Chief, has not waited for them, and has already, on Tuesday last, advanced from the frontier town of Newcastle, crossing the Buffalo river, into the Utrecht district of the Transvaal. The town of Utrecht, which is twenty-eight miles from Newcastle, will not be defended by the Dutch Republicans, but they are expected to offer some resistance on the mountain road beyond, from Utrecht to Wesselstroom, some twenty miles farther on. This town, which is sometimes inaccurately called "Wakkerstroom," and bears that name even in the new military map of the Horse Guards' Intelligence Department, is only the chief place of a district properly named Wakkerstroom, including that portion of the Drakenberg highlands forming the watershed between the streams that flow to join the Tugela River, in Natal and Zululand, and those belonging to the interior basin of South Africa, drained here by the Vaal River. It is in Wakkerstroom, therefore, that the natural frontier of the Transvaal country is to be found; the Utrecht district, formerly disputed between the Dutch and the Zulus, is an outlying piece, which could not long be retained against an invading enemy from the British province of Natal.

The immediate and urgent business of Sir George Pomeroy Colley, if, with his comparatively small force of a thousand fighting men, he can get through Wakkerstroom, is to relieve the beleaguered English garrisons of Standerton and of Pretoria. It is not likely that the Dutch leaders, who have a large number of mounted riflemen, but no artillery, would risk a decisive battle in front of either of those towns. They would rather be inclined to destroy the town of Pretoria, as the houses and shops there mostly belong to Englishmen, Germanns, or other foreigners; and would then prepare an obstinate resistance in the western and north-western districts of the Transvaal. The Boers have good horses, and have ample means of transport for their families, their household goods, and the simple stores they possess or need, in the capacious waggons that serve, with teams of their farm oxen, to perform the longest journeys. By withdrawing, at an early period of the campaign, several hundred miles into the interior of the Transvaal, where their settlements are fertile and rich in pastoral and agricultural wealth, they can well afford to let the British troops occupy Pretoria, the nominal seat of Government. Potchefstroom, a town of some border trade, which is situated to the south-west of Pretoria, would perhaps be more important, from its vicinity to the Orange Free State; but it is scarcely possible for the small garrison in the fort there, under Colonel Bellairs, to hold out beyond the present month. Its surrender may be expected any day; but Sir Owen Lanyon, in the fort at Pretoria, can maintain his position, in all probability, until Sir G. P. Colley has passed Standerton and Heidelberg, advancing to the relief of these military posts. There is little doubt of this service being speedily accomplished, even though it should be found necessary to stop and wait for the reinforcements now at sea; but the capture of Pretoria will scarcely put an end to the war, unless her Majesty's Government will then consent to restore the political independence of the Dutch Republic, upon such conditions as may effectually secure the tranquillity of its borders, and protection to all the native tribes around.

These conditions of the restoration of Transvaal independence may be as conveniently understood just now as they will be six weeks or two months hence, after the military conflict which seems inevitable on the road to Pretoria. It was pointed out by us last week that the only feasible settlement, with due regard to the interests of British subjects and others who have lately settled in that part of South Africa, and to the welfare of the diverse native tribes, is by cutting off a moiety of the vast territories hitherto claimed by the Transvaal Government. Few persons in Europe, who have not studied the obscure history of the Dutch South African Commonwealths, are likely to be aware that the Republic which was formally established and recognised by Great Britain in 1852 did not possess nearly so great an extent. The eastern district, which is called that of Lydenburg in the maps, adjacent to the land of the Swazis, was first settled quite as a separate colonial republic; and so was that of Utrecht, to the south-east, bordering on Zululand.

The union of these two, Utrecht and Lydenburg, with the Transvaal, which took place some years after the recognition of Transvaal independence, formed what was absurdly styled "the South African Republic;" a title which seems the more arrogant, because the other Dutch Commonwealth, the Orange Free State, had an equal right to be so considered. But the Dutch were never able really to govern or protect the Lydenburg district. In the northern part of it, between the Steelpoort and the Olifant's rivers, are the gold-fields of Pilgrim's Rest, Spekdoorn, and Malamane, which attracted hundreds of English and other foreign diggers, seven or eight years ago. These people found the Transvaal authorities quite unable to help them, when they were in some danger of being molested by the warring savage nations, Bapedi and Swazi, during the unlucky Dutch expedition of 1876 to Secocoeni's mountain. The whole district has now been rendered safe by Sir Garnet Wolseley's conquest of Secocoeni, since the Zulu War. Again, the districts of New Scotland, Londinia, and Luneburg, which are on the north-west frontier of the late Zulu Kingdom, were partially settled by English, Scottish, and German colonists, who purchased their land, claims in London some years ago. By the result of the Zulu War, achieved solely at the cost of Great Britain, perfect security has been gained for those districts. The same remark may be applied to the border district of Utrecht, extending between the Pongola and the Buffalo river, to the frontier of Natal. It may fairly be contended on behalf of British interests—without going back to the old controversy upon the very questionable title of the Dutch to all these eastward territories—that they were lost to the Transvaal, reconquered by the British Government, and henceforth must be retained under British dominion. The Lydenburg district seems to be endowed with mineral wealth, of which the Dutch could never make any profitable use. A railway of 130 miles, from the excellent port of Delagoa Bay to the highlands, would make it easy of commercial access. These just and valuable acquisitions to the British Empire might be retained without the slightest necessity, political or geographical, for denying independence to the original commonwealth of the Transvaal.

In the next place, for the discharge of that implied duty of the British Government to take care of a vast but unknown multitude of native tribes—their aggregate number, by the best computation, is not 800,000, or 400,000, but 250,000—at most—it will be needful to draw the northern boundary of the Transvaal along the dividing mountain ranges, the Waterberg and those rising to the east, as far as the Steelpoort and the Lydenburg district. All the Hooge Veldt, the high open plain watered by the northern tributaries of the Vaal, and the western districts, Zeerust and Marico, are and must remain a Dutch settlement. To the north, beyond those mountain ranges, lie immense tracts of unhealthy Bush Veldt, through which several rivers flow to join the Limpopo, in tropical latitudes, and find their way to the Indian Ocean. A few patches of rich grass land in that region were sometime used as a winter pasture during four months of the year, but none of the Boers have been able to live there, or to keep their horses and oxen alive there, for a single twelvemonth. The explorations of Sir John Swinburne, Mr. Thomas Baines, and others in search of gold, had not a very encouraging result. It would, on all accounts, be most desirable to abandon those Waterberg and Zoutpansberg districts to the various native tribes who are content to dwell there in peace. The restored Transvaal Republic should be bound and compelled, by a distinct treaty with her Majesty's Government, to refrain from any encroachment beyond a northern frontier, to be settled by a Royal Commission, which would give up to the natives, under a British Protectorate, a country nearly as large as England, abundantly sufficient to maintain them in peace and comfort.

This method of a threefold partition of the vast, loosely compacted, heterogeneous territories which were, before 1877, nominally possessed by the "South African Republic," will be found the only practical solution of the present difficulty. It is clearly enjoined upon us by the natural conditions of the entire region, which consists of the High Plain, the eastern Terrace-Land on the Drakenberg slopes, and the northern Bush-Land inclining towards the Limpopo; each division peculiarly fitted for a different kind of population. It is, moreover, in clear accordance with the historical facts of the case, with the mode and direction of the European settlements in that region, and with the more recent colonial and political interests consequent upon the Zulu War and the brief English administration in the Transvaal. If these legitimate interests, with the Imperial responsibility for the protection of the native races in South Africa, can be most effectually provided for by a territorial arrangement, which the Dutch insurgents would now very gladly accept—then we do earnestly appeal to Mr. Gladstone's Government to "seek peace and ensue it." The British garrisons in the Transvaal towns must be succoured without delay. The Dutch leaders of the revolt, whatever political justification they can plead for it, will be forced to submit to reasonable terms, and to make atonement for any excesses or outrages that may be proved, on strict inquiry, to have been committed by the undisciplined bands of rude yeomen who have taken up arms in this quarrel. We rely upon the present advisers of her Majesty to maintain the dignity of the British Empire by frankly doing justice to all concerned, and by speedily restoring "peace with honour" in South Africa, to leave no cause there for implacable resentment in after times.

By the arrival of the mail from South Africa we have letters and papers from Capetown to Jan. 4. From the additional details published of the encounter between the men of the 94th Regiment and the Boers, on Dec. 20, it appears that the latter were not guilty of treachery, as is first stated. They sent a message to the Colonel under a flag of truce, informing him that war had been declared three days before, and that he could not be permitted to go any further. He replied that he had received orders to proceed to Pretoria, and should do so. Thereupon the Boers opened fire, and before the troops could get the range, most of the officers had been hit and many of the men killed. Seeing that further resistance was useless, the Colonel then surrendered. The men who remained unhurt were disarmed and sent to Natal.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

SPAIN.

The Cortes were engaged on the 19th inst. in the discussion on the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. During the course of the debate Señor Canovas del Castillo eulogised the conduct of General Pavia in expelling the deputies from the House on Jan. 3, 1874. The Address was ultimately adopted by 209 votes to 65.

Sunday, being King Alfonso's fête-day, was kept as a general holiday. A great reception was held in the Palace, attended by two thousand members of the aristocracy and the official world. In the evening a banquet was given by the King, at which one hundred and twenty covers were laid, and to it the chief members of the Diplomatic Corps were invited.

ITALY.

The King and Queen concluded their visit to Sicily on Thursday week, and after a quarter of an hour's journey by sea, accompanied by a large flotilla, landed at Reggio upon the mainland. Their Majesties reached Cosenza on Sunday evening, and had an enthusiastic reception. On Tuesday morning they left for Potenza.

The Chamber met at Rome on Tuesday.

The Government have, it is announced, decided that the St. Gothard Railway shall be united with the Italian system by the line passing to the left of the Lago Maggiore, this being the shortest and most convenient route.

The Spanish Academy of Fine-Arts was opened at Rome on Sunday, the anniversary of the birth of King Alphonso. The building, handsome in itself and picturesquely situated on the Janiculum, commands the noblest of panoramas, and adds another to the attractions of Rome. Cardinal di Pietro celebrated Pontifical mass, with the aid of Capocci's choir, in the adjoining church, which was richly draped with the Spanish colours and finely illuminated. The Ambassadors of Spain to the Quirinal and the Vatican, with a numerous and distinguished audience of their compatriots, were present. A sumptuous banquet followed, after which the general public were admitted to the studios and galleries to admire the works of the scholars.

GERMANY.

At a Chapter of the High Order of the Black Eagle, held at Berlin last Saturday, Prince Henry of Prussia, the son of the Crown Prince, was created a Knight. The Emperor, being still indisposed, attended the ceremony for only a few minutes. His Majesty continues his daily drives, though, contrary to his wont, in a closed carriage. The Court is now launched on a course of festivities marking the height of the social season at Berlin, which will only close with the wedding of Prince William, towards the end of next month.

The Grand Duke Nicholas, eldest brother of the Czar, arrived at Berlin quite unexpectedly yesterday week from St. Petersburg, on his way to Paris, and alighted at the Russian Embassy, where he was soon visited by the Crown Prince, whose call he subsequently returned. His Highness, too, paid his respects to their Majesties, and, after rendering these hurried courtesies, continued his southward journey at noon.

Owing to a large increase in the German customs duties, the Imperial Budget shows a surplus of 25,000,000 marks.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

Count Taaffe on Tuesday replied in the Lower House of the Reichsrath to an interpellation respecting the backward movement made of late years by the agricultural population of Austria. This statement was received with cheers.

RUSSIA.

One of the oldest and best-known of European statesmen has quitted the scene of active political life. Prince Gortschakoff's retirement has often been prematurely announced. But he has at length withdrawn from political affairs. For about sixty years he has engaged in the work of diplomacy, and for about half that period he has always occupied a prominent position in the eyes of Europe. He has represented his country at the most critical periods of her history, and has determined her policy several times when the issues of peace and war were in the balance. His life is the political history of Russia for half a century.

General Scobeleff has telegraphed to St. Petersburg particulars of several desperate encounters with the Turcomans before Geok Tepe. Although the intrenching operations of the Russians are attended with difficulty, owing to the superior numbers of the Turcomans, the head of the Russian sap had been advanced to within thirty-four yards of the wall.

China's adhesion to the stipulations drawn up at St. Petersburg has been notified to the Imperial Cabinet by the Marquis Tseng. A treaty will therefore be drawn up for final revision and ratification by both Governments. Russia restores all Kuldja to China except a small extent of territory having no strategic value, which is reserved as a place of refuge for the Dungans who may claim to become Russian subjects.

TURKEY AND GREECE.

It is stated in a telegram from Constantinople that the Powers have accepted in principle the proposal of Turkey to enter upon negotiations-theyy, and that the negotiations will begin on the return of Mr. Goschen and Count Hatzfeld.

A Circular, dated the 20th inst., has been issued by the Greek Government appealing to the Powers to take such steps as they may deem opportune in order to cause their decisions on the Hellenic question to be executed, and thus secure peace in the East on a solid basis. A Royal decree was issued at Athens on Saturday, ordering the immediate formation of three new battalions of engineers. The present strength of the Greek army is estimated at 65,000 men.

AMERICA.

Mr. Charles Van Wyck, Republican, has been elected senator for Nebraska.

The obelisk which was presented to the United States by the Egyptian Government was on Saturday last placed in position in the Central Park, New York. Messrs. Evarts and Goff were present at the ceremony.

A train on the Erie Railway caught fire, and the postal and baggage vans were consumed. Five of the officials perished, and eleven passengers were seriously injured.

There was a heavy snow-storm in New York last Saturday. Many of the telegraph posts in the city and its neighbourhood were broken down, and for a whole day not a single wire could be worked. At the same time a severe storm of sleet was raging on the North Atlantic seaboard.

CANADA.

A motion has been adopted in the Senate calling for the presentation of all correspondence respecting Professor Hind's charges in connection with the Halifax Fishery Award. Incredulity was expressed with regard to those charges, but it was generally thought that they ought to be investigated.

In the House of Commons, Sir C. Tupper, the Minister of Railways and Canals, has submitted the proposals of the rival syndicate for the Pacific Railway, who had made the promised deposit of 1,500,000 dols. The debate was then resumed. Sir J. A. Macdonald declared that the Government contract was more favourable than the Allan contract of 1872. He ridiculed the proposal of the rival syndicate as being a huge game of bluff. The Government had closed the bargain in good faith, and it should be ratified or rejected. The debate was again adjourned.

The British Columbian Legislature was opened at Victoria on Monday.

Intelligence from Winnipeg announces that the Indians report a fight as having occurred between the Crees and Sioux in the Cypress Hills. Six half-breds and thirty Crees were killed.

INDIA.

It is stated in a Calcutta telegram that the troops who were sent to Maiwand in consequence of the restlessness among the tribes to the north-west of Candahar reached their destination on the 22nd inst., and found supplies which had been stored there by the local authorities. All was quiet as far as the Helmund river.

A large part of the arsenal at Karlskrona, the principal station of the Swedish navy, has been destroyed by fire.

The Egyptian Minister of Justice has, a Standard telegram says, received £25,000 sterling from the International Tribunals, being the surplus over the expenditure for 1880.

A telegram in the Standard states that the Swiss military authorities have determined to fortify not the whole extent of western frontier, as was proposed, but only the principal roads leading from the west to the north-west. They do not deem it necessary to guard against attack, being content with preventing the passage through their territory of hostile armies.

The live stock shipped from America last year for London comprised 66,815 cattle, 22,236 sheep, and 672 pigs. Of these there were lost in transit 3134 cattle, 868 sheep, and 133 pigs. The shipments to Liverpool in the same period comprised 87,645 cattle, 600,202 sheep, 11,338 pigs, and 233 horses. The losses comprised 3408 cattle, 2136 sheep, 1418 pigs, and 14 horses.

The King and Queen of the Belgians, accompanied by the Princess Stephanie, the Archduke Rudolph of Austria, and the Count and Countess de Flandre, were present at the fête held at the Palais du Midi, Brussels, a few days since, for the benefit of the sufferers from the late floods. The Queen and the Countess de Flandre had presented some of their own paintings to be drawn for in an artistic lottery at the fête.

The first section of the twenty-three miles of railway in the island of Yeso, Japan, ordered to be constructed twelve months ago, has been opened for traffic, and trains are now running daily at a profit. The line extends from Otarunai Harbour, on the West Coast, viâ Sapporo, the capital, to the Parona coal-fields, and has cost 20,000 dols. per mile, including rolling stock and the machinery at the terminal repairing-shops. The new line is the first American railway in Asia, and has been constructed under the direction of a Pennsylvanian engineer and a staff of American assistants.

A great battle between the Chilians and Peruvians has been fought near Lima. It resulted in the defeat of the Peruvians, who were driven from their positions with heavy loss, leaving Chorillos in the hands of the Chilians. It is reported that the Peruvians lost 7000 killed, 2000 prisoners, and 70 guns. The Chilian loss on both occasions was heavy. The Chilians occupied Lima without resistance on the 17th, having previously attacked and completely defeated the Peruvian army at Miraflores. 25,000 Peruvian troops are said to have been engaged in the battle. The Diplomatic body at Lima have urged the conclusion of an armistice. Private telegrams were received in the City on Monday announcing the capitulation of Callao.

THE PLAYHOUSES.

That which the Sultan Mahomet the Conqueror exclaimed when, after the capture of Constantinople, he surveyed the august but desolate mansion of a hundred successors of the good Constantine, cannot happily be said, even metaphorically, of the London theatres during the Great Frost which has afflicted and which continues to afflict us, and which, so our American Cousins calmly tell us, is to endure for five more cruel weeks. "The Spider," remarked the victorious Osmanli, quoting an elegant distich of Persian poetry, "has wove his web in the Imperial Palace; and the owl hath sung her watch song on the towers of Afrasiab." It has not come to quite so desperate a pass as this with the Playhouses; but they have had, nevertheless, shockingly bad times since the sudden and grim importation of Siberia into London, and the setting up (so to speak) of the North Pole in the centre of Leicester-square, W.C. The Alhambra Theatre, indeed, found itself in such inconveniently close proximity to the Arctic Circle that for a few evenings it was fain to close its doors altogether; but the pleasant house with the Moorish name has since been reopened; and the gay and sparkling "Mefistofele II.," with Mr. Alfred Thompson's lively and picturesque ballet of "Hawaia," continue to divide the honours of each brilliant evening. Another favourite London theatre has also for the moment dropped altogether out of the diurnal programme of dramatic entertainments. The cold was too much for that clever and intensely repulsive play, "A New Trial," at the Prince of Wales's. The audiences, which for some days had been growing small by degrees and beautifully less, dwindled down at last to about a score of icicles, which crumbled and were dispersed before the wintry blast. I do not at all regret the disappearance of "A New Trial," which (audaciously puffed by the admirers, quand même, of Mr. Coghlan) was really a very bad play, on which a large amount of admirable acting was entirely thrown away. I hear that Mr. Burnand's new comedy of "The Colonel," which was to have been produced at the Haymarket, has been transferred to the Prince of Wales's; and one of the Society Journals of the current week indicates more than vaguely a rumour that one of the leading characters in the new piece is to be assumed by a beauteous lady who —— well; I do not like giving currency to rumours until I know something of the evidence on which they are based. It would be as well, perhaps, to wait until the beauteous lady makes her appearance on the boards of the Prince of Wales's: or does not make it. In any case, I do hope that Mr. Edgar Bruce, a most intelligent and energetic manager, deserving all possible success, will for the future steadily desist from converting one of the most charming theatres in the metropolis into a House of Gloom. Let him set his face against all "cry-baby" and "damp pocket handkerchief and red eyes" pieces, and especially against dramas with any strychnine, prussic acid, arsenic, or Batley's Solution of Opium in them. The Prince of Wales's Theatre should be a Temple of Momus and not a Cave of Despair.

Meanwhile it is extremely gratifying to read in the Times of Wednesday a list of twenty theatres (and these are exclusive of the great East-End and some of the transpontine places of amusement) remaining open in spite of the mercileess weather. At the Haymarket, the last nights of "School" are still charming brilliant audiences; and not until Saturday, the fifth of February, will be presented the revival of "Masks and Faces," in which both Mr. and Mrs. Bancroft are to appear, and for which new costumes of a most elaborate nature have been prepared from strictly "historical" designs by the Honourable Louis Wingfield. A "running footman" (extinct animal) will in particular, I hear, appear in a guise never before assumed by that now obsolete servitor on the stage. The burlesque of "The Forty Thieves" continues its career of dazzling success at the Gaiety, and at Drury Lane and Covent Garden the pantomimes, respectively, of "Mother Goose" and "Valentine and Orson" are "as well as can be expected." The last reports which have come to hand as to the state of health of the famous Funny Goose at Drury Lane were that he was "blooming;" while, of the talented Vokes Family and the great Little Bear at Covent Garden, so wonderfully well impersonated by that admirable mime Mr. H. Lauri, I rejoice to hear that the bulletin is to the effect that they are all "bobbish." The frost may have scotched the Christmas pantomimes a little: but it has not killed them. At the Vaudeville, the triumphant career of Messrs. David James and Thomas Thorne in the familiar but still unhacknied "Gay'nor" comes to a close on Saturday, the 29th, or, rather, takes a new departure on the evening in question with a new comedy, of which I shall not fail to render an account next week. As for Mr. Toole, he has been doing notable things during the Great Frost. In the first place, like a true and kind-hearted gentleman as he is, he has held out a helping hand to Miss Isabel Bateman by volunteering to make six appearances in his most-admired farce characters at the new Sadler's Wells Theatre, and has been received with much acclamation there in "The Spitalfields Weaver," returning, centre à terre, to his own theatre to play in "The Upper Crust," and "The Light Fantastic;" while at this same Folly, the estimable actor and manager has so warmly appreciated the loyal constancy of his audience in the gallery, that the other night he sent them up brimming cans of hot spiced ale to warm the cockles of their hearts withal. I remember, many years since, in a very severe winter (1854, I think) the late E. T. Smith distributing hot soup and bread to the poor at the stage-door of Drury Lane. Robert Brough, in Diogenes, apostrophised the charitable manager in some such terms as—

> Smith, in whose bounty the glories are seen
> Of Godfrey de Bouillon and Marshal Turenn,

I have seen Mr. Edwin Booth's Othello at the Princess's; but the weather and the sheer dread of my ancient foes, bronchitis and asthma (ah! Louisiana, the beloved; the rennges and the japonicas were growing in the open at New Orleans this time last January), have prevented me from witnessing Mr. Booth's Iago, which the critics pronounce to be a superbly fine performance. I do not wish to say what I think of this accomplished tragedian's impersonation of the Moor before I have seen him in the "demi-devil."

And poor Edward Sothern, since last I addressed my readers in this place, is dead and buried! It was on the first of last March that, arriving at San Francisco, I saw Sothern at the Baldwin House, and found him reading a cablegram from Mr. John Hollingshead about a new comedy by Mr. Gilbert, in which Sothern was to make his appearance at the Gaiety, after the engagement of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Florence had come to a close. He was filling a large theatre in San Francisco every night with enthusiastic audiences; and I saw him play Lord Dundreary for the fourth or fifth thousandth time—I really forget which. He was still chatty, vivacious, and charming; but he looked dreadfully ill, anxious, and worn. Some few days afterwards we met at the pretty hotel opposite the Seal Rock at the Golden Gates of the Bay of San Francisco. We were to have lunched together; but he became in the course of the afternoon so ill that he was fain to lie down on a bed in one of the rooms of the hotel and try to snatch some repose until he went back to town—to work. The last time I saw him was in a private box at the Princess's on the first night of Mr. Booth's performance of Hamlet. Poor Sothern then said that he was better, and spoke hopefully of his speedy reappearance on the stage; but he looked the very Ghost of his former comely self. As the old horses used to say, he looked "marked for Death." Yes; on his prematurely blanched brow there was the fatal sign Thanatos. Of his shining talents and distinct originality as a comedian I may speak again. As the grave closes over him I can only say that a kindlier-hearted and more charitable man, a warmer friend, a more delightful companion, and a more urbane gentleman never lived than Edward Askew Sothern. G. A. S.

MUSIC.

Madame Norman-Néruda reappeared as leading violinist at the Popular Concert of Saturday afternoon, and led—with admirable style and execution—Beethoven's Rasoumowski quartet in C major, her associates having been Mr. L. Ries, Herr Straus, and Signor Piatti. Mdlle. Marie Krebs, who was again the pianist, played, with fine effect, Beethoven's solo sonata in A flat, with the "Funeral March;" and Dr. Goetz's pianoforte quintet in C minor, with the addition to the string quartet party of Mr. Reynolds as contrabassist. Mr. Santley sang, with great success, Signor Piatti's song, "O Swallow, Swallow" (the violoncello obbligato played by the composer) and Gounod's "Maid of Athens," the encore of the latter having been replaced by Mr. Hatton's "To Anthea." At the concert of Monday evening Miss Dora Schirmacher appeared for the first time this season, and played, with great effect, the thirty-two variations of Beethoven in C minor, for pianoforte solo. The remaining features of the programme were too familiar to need specification.

A concert in celebration of the anniversary of Burns's birthday was given at the Royal Albert Hall on Tuesday evening, that announced for the same evening at St. James's Hall having been postponed to Feb. 12, on account of the inclemency of the weather. On the first-named occasion Madame Christine Nilsson appeared, having come expressly from Paris. The prima donna sang, with great effect, "Tacea la notte" (from "Il Trovatore"), Handel's air (with the recitative), "Angels ever bright and fair," and the Scotch ballad, "Auld Robin Gray," having been encored in the last two pieces. A varied and lengthy programme was also contributed to by Miss M. Davies, Mesdames Antoinette Sterling, Edith Wynne, and M. Cummings, Mr. V. Rigby, Mr. J. Maas, Mr. R. Hollins, Mr. H. Pope, Mr. J. Sauvage, and the members of Mr. W. Carter's choir, that gentleman, Mr. E. Bending, and Mr. J. P. Clarke having acted as conductors. The band of the Scots Guards also co-operated in the evening's performances, the encores in which unduly prolonged the concert.

A special service was held at St. Paul's Cathedral on Tuesday evening, in celebration of the Conversion of St. Paul. Portions of Mendelssohn's oratorio, "St. Paul," were performed on the occasion, with the co-operation of a full orchestra and choir. The vocal solos were rendered by Messrs. Ken, Winn, and De Lacy, and two of the principal chorister boys. Dr. Stainer conducted.

This week's concert of the Borough of Hackney Choral Association—at the Shoreditch Townhall—included an effective performance for the first time in London with orchestral accompaniments, of Heinrich Hofmann's cantata, "Melusina," and the co-operation of the Hackney choir, and (as solo vocalists) Misses A. Marriott and M. M'Kenzie, and Messrs. T. Beale and F. Bevan. Mr. Prout conducted.

The concert of the Sacred Harmonic Society, fixed for yesterday (Friday) week, was suddenly postponed, in consequence of the exceptionally severe weather. The selection then announced is reserved for a future opportunity, the next concert taking place on Feb. 11, when Mr. Arthur Sullivan's sacred musical drama, "The Martyr of Antioch," and Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" will be performed.

The adverse influence just adverted to was the cause of a diminished audience and the absence of three of the vocalists at last week's London Ballad Concert—rare events at these performances. This week's programme included several popular novelties and many Irish songs and ballads.

Mr. J. T. Carrodus's concert at St. James's Hall on Thursday week afforded a remarkable display of that violinist's executive excellence and his acquaintance with very different schools of his art. He played with great success pieces by Ernst, Molique, Spohr, Bach, Vieuxtemps, Paganini, Wieniawski, and Tours, and a Scotch Fantasia of his own. Mr. F. Amor and Master J. Carrodus were the accompanists.

Last week's concert of the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society requires but few words of comment, the music performed being familiar from frequent repetition. Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" and Rossini's "Stabat Mater" were very efficiently rendered in all their important orchestral and vocal details; the solo singers having been Misses A. Marriott, Thorndike, and Hope Glenn; Mr. E. Lloyd, and Mr. Hilton. Dr. Stainer presided, as usual, at the organ.

For this (Saturday) evening a repetition of Berlioz's "Faust" music at St. James's Hall—directed by Mr. Charles Hallé—is announced, in consequence of the great success which attended its several previous performances there. The solo singers are to be, as before, Miss M. Davies, Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. Santley, and Mr. Pratt. Four concerts are to be given—also at St. James's Hall—by Mr. Hallé, with his celebrated Manchester band, on the evenings of Feb. 5, 19, and 26, and March 5. The programmes are to include Berlioz's sacred work, "L'Enfance du Christ" (for the first time in London), a repetition of his "Faust," and other interesting items.

Next week the Saturday afternoon concerts at the Crystal Palace will be resumed, with the twelfth performance of the twenty-fifth series.

Unusual attractions are announced at Mr. Frederick Burgess's annual fête, which is to take place in St. James's Great Hall next Tuesday afternoon and evening. Many of the most distinguished artists connected with the West-End theatres will take part in it; and the Hanlon Lees and M. Agoust will also appear in an original pantomime sketch.

George Danson, scenic artist, late of Covent Garden and Drury Lane Theatres, also of the Surrey Gardens and Belle Vue Gardens, Manchester, died on the 23rd inst., aged eighty-two.

The receipts on account of revenue from April 1, 1880, when there was a balance of £3,273,428, to Jan. 22, 1881, were £62,427,434, against £60,573,528 in the corresponding period of the preceding financial year, which began with a balance of £6,915,756. The net expenditure was £65,698,612, against £68,610,352 to the same date in the previous year. The Treasury balances on Jan. 22 amounted to £2,428,091, and at the same date in 1880 to £1,310,528.

THE SILENT MEMBER.

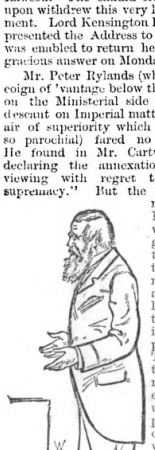
Earl Granville still has cause to blandly shake hands with himself. The continued paucity of business in the House of Lords may naturally be a source of contentment to the noble Lord, who must find plenty of work to do every day at the Foreign Office. It was with an habitually easy turn of the wrist that Earl Granville again disarmed Earl Fortescue on the 21st by showing, for the benefit of his persistent Lordship, that the passage through Parliament of the Irish Coercion or Protection Bills would probably have been retarded rather than quickened by their introduction into the Upper House first. It is easy enough to understand why the calm serenity of a busy Secretary of State should remain unruffled by such slight encounters as this; even by the Duke of Richmond's storm-in-a-teacup on Monday, in regard to the administration of "Burnett's Literary Fund" in Scotland—for did not the Earl of Rosebery with the neatest irony demonstrate the comparative inutility of the bequest of the Aberdeen body? Cannot Earl Granville plume himself also upon the dexterity with which Lord Enfield on Tuesday explained to Lord Inchiquin and Lord Waveney that the Government did not feel bound to coincide with Lord Napier's views in favour of the retention of Candahar; and cannot the noble Earl point complacently to the fact that Earl Spencer is ready, single-handed, to stem the floods, and also to the monument of industry already shown this Session by the passing of the Burial and Registration Acts Bill, the Judicial Committee Bill, and the Augmentation of Benefices Act Amendment Bill? Clearly, their Lordships can give the Commons a timely lesson in the economy of time.

The long-lingering snow has brought about the novel sight of a sledge in Palace-yard; but, within the House of Commons, the carefully maintained warmth of the temperature, Hibernian heat, and another all-night sitting, have combined to suggest we had returned to the sultry August of 1877, when (as I remarked last week) a sitting of twenty-six hours was brought to a close at ten minutes past six on the 1st of that month.

Comment on this latest trial of endurance may be reserved until the incident is referred to in due sequence. Harking back to the unduly protracted debate on the Address, Mr. Thorold Rogers is to be credited with the extinction of Mr. Dawson's amendment. The learned Professor having pointed out on the 20th inst. to the Speaker that it was not in order to ask her Majesty to introduce a bill of any kind, Mr. Dawson was constrained to withdraw his motion in favour of a measure assimilating the Irish with the English borough franchise. Yet the debate on the amendment, merely altered in phrase, continued until Mr. Parnell vouchsafed to let it end. Then it was negatived by a majority of 238—274 to 36. Mr. O'Kelly then stepped into the breach. But his final amendment adverse to the suppression in Ireland of public meetings was in the end rejected by 173 to 34 votes. A cheer of relief went up when the Address was at last agreed to.

Sir Wilfrid Lawson was driven to bring on his amendment when the report of the Address came up later in the evening. The hon. member for Carlisle discarded his Permissive Bill and Local Option style as being inappropriate to a protest against the war between the Cape and the Basutos. His tone was half apologetic. One hand thrust now and again into his pocket, the other holding his notes, the hon. and bearded Baronet assumed the manner of one criticising the Government against his will. Mr. Grant Duff, with his ruthless Scotch logic, had no difficulty in demonstrating the uselessness of the motion from a Ministerial point of view, inasmuch as the Queen's Speech promised the very mediation asked for by Sir Wilfrid Lawson. The candid friend thereupon withdrew this very last amendment. Lord Kensington having duly presented the Address to the Queen, was enabled to return her Majesty's gracious answer on Monday.

Mr. Peter Rylands (who from his coign of 'vantage below the gangway on the Ministerial side is wont to descant on Imperial matters with an air of superiority which might be impressive were it not so parochial) fared no better on the Friday evening. He found in Mr. Cartwright a seconder to his motion declaring the annexation of the Transvaal unjust, and viewing with regret the efforts to enforce "British supremacy." But the House generally evidently found more congenial exponents in Sir John Lubbock and Mr. Alderman Fowler, whose denunciations of the "land-grabbing" and slavery practices of the Boers were quite refreshing after the humanitarian crotchets of the mover and seconder. Mr. Chaplin and Mr. Gladstone indulged in a lively cut and parry, the former twitting the Prime Minister with having in his Midlothian speeches "repudiated" the annexation of the Transvaal, and the right hon. gentleman owning to the soft impeachment, but retorting that a difference existed between repudiation and undoing, and adding that he repudiated Mr. Chaplin's speech, but could not undo it. Whereat there was some laughter at the expense of Mr. Chaplin, who has reason to remember each of his encounters with the Prime Minister. It fell to the lot of Sir Stafford Northcote (sketched in what may be termed his usual ambling manner) to pleasantly "repudiate" Mr. Gladstone as a lexicographer; but the leader of the Opposition firmly supported the present policy of the Government with regard to the Transvaal. Under these circumstances, it will not be wondered at that only 33 members voted for Mr. Rylands' motion, whilst 129 extinguished it.



Mr. Gladstone and his colleagues were on Monday put through the customary competitive examination, so to call the inquisitorial questions put to Ministers, before a thronged House, the Earl of Derby, Earl Spencer, Lords Sherbrooke, Aberdare, and Rowton being among the noble Lords who crowded the small peers' gallery. The cue to the energetic action of the Government this week was given in the Premier's answer to Mr. P. J. Smyth. "We have only reached what used to be the third day of the Session," so far as public business is concerned, explained Mr. Gladstone, to show cause for not enlightening the hon. member concerning the Irish Land Bill of the Government.

Mr. Forster forthwith proceeded to show, eliciting loud cheers from the vast majority of the House, how the Government proposed to muzzle the lawless ringleaders of the agrarian revolt in Ireland. The Secretary for Ireland began well by calling the Ministerial measure "a bill for the better protection of person and property in Ireland." His case was a strong one; and it was strongly put. In one sentence, Mr. Forster's speech (which lasted an hour an forty minutes) may be summed up. Its gist was that, as agrarian outrages in Ireland had increased in 1880 to the alarming number of 1253, excluding threatening letters, the chief character of these outrages being intimidation, with the view to enforce "obedience to certain commands issued, especially commands not to take farms and not to pay rent, by the Land League," the Government proposed to strike terror into the hearts of the old Ribbonmen, and Fenians, and mauvais sujets who terrorise over law-abiding people by giving the Lord Lieutenant power to arrest any person in Ireland known to be guilty of treasonable practices, and to imprison him for eighteen months. Mr. Forster concluded his forcible address by remarking that the three clauses of the Arms Bill will restrict the carrying of firearms to Irishmen holding licenses; and by adding that, after these measures of protection receive the sanction of the House, it will be incumbent on the Government to thoroughly reform the Irish land laws.

The Home-Rule battle against Mr. Forster was begun on Monday by Dr. Lyons, whose amendment insisting on the expediency of giving precedence to "remedial legislation" over "coercive measures" was seconded by Mr. Givan. The discursiveness of the latter hon. member afforded the long-suffering Speaker an opportunity of asserting his power by repeatedly restraining him from straying into a discussion of the Land Act. Mr. Dillon resolutely denied that the Land League was responsible for the outrages complained of; and was succeeded in opposition to the measure by Mr. Bradlaugh, Mr. Justin M'Carthy, and others; whilst Sir Stafford Northcote accorded to the Government the support of the Conservative Party. Monday's debate closed with the Speaker's insisting upon Mr. O'Donnell's withdrawal of an un-Parliamentary observation applied by him to Mr. Gladstone. The firmness of the right hon. Henry Bouverie Brand was put to a fresh test on Tuesday. Mr. Gladstone very briefly moved that Mr. Forster's measures should have precedence of all other matters. Prevented by rule from putting an amendment in Mr. Parnell's name, Mr. T. P. O'Connor ably launched a general debate against the Ministerial proposition. One after the other of the Home-Rule members had to be repeatedly recalled by the Speaker to the question at issue, until one of the most incorrigible of their number, Mr. Biggar, had to be suspended by a vote of the House. The member for Cavan was directed to withdraw by 130 to 30 votes, but re-entered after the division, and was then had to be directly ordered by the Speaker to retire. With an imperturbability which is his strong characteristic, Mr. Biggar left the House for the lobby; but presently reappeared in the Strangers' Gallery, whence he looked down complacently upon the commencement of the long struggle his friends made to secure the adjournment. Against this Mr. Gladstone resolutely set his face; and left Mr. Forster and a few other trusty colleagues to keep the Treasury bench warm throughout the small hours. 'Twere a thrice-told tale to relate the dreary and monotonous episodes of that prolonged sitting. Dr. Lyon Playfair by-and-by relieved the Speaker; the hours of breakfast and luncheon on Wednesday came, and still found the House sitting; Mr. Parnell, no longer a "traverser," was vociferously welcomed on his return from Dublin; and it was not till the afternoon that a division was taken on Mr. Gladstone's motion of precedence. It was carried by a majority of 218—251 to 33 votes—and the House adjourned at five minutes past two, after sitting twenty-two hours. So it will be seen that the problem of how to restrain the exuberant verbosity of Home-Rule members remains unsolved.

AIDS TO THRIFT THROUGH THE POST OFFICE.

Mr. Fawcett's promised pamphlet on "The Post Office and Aids to Thrift" is now procurable, free of cost, at any post office. Many people have followed with interest the efforts of the Postmaster-General to utilise his department as much as possible in encouraging habits of providence and thrift among the poorer classes. The means by which the public can avail itself of the various aids to thrift now afforded by the Post Office are grouped under the five headings of—(1) how money can be saved; (2) how small amounts of Government Stock can be bought; (3) how money can be sent by post; (4) how lives can be insured; (5) how annuities can be bought; and there can be little doubt that the simple and lucid explanation which Mr. Fawcett has contented himself with giving in this form is more likely to be read and understood by the classes which he is most desirous of reaching than a more pretentious document would be.

THE COURT.

Her Majesty gave audience to Lord Kensington last Saturday, when his Lordship presented an Address from the House of Commons. Divine service was performed on Sunday at Osborne by the Rev. Canon Prothero, the Queen, Princess Beatrice, and Prince Leopold being present. The Right Hon. Osborne Morgan (Judge Advocate-General) had an audience of her Majesty on Monday, and, with Lieutenant-General the Right Hon. Sir Henry Ponsonby, dined with the Queen. The Hon. F. R. Plunkett, Secretary of Embassy at St. Petersburg, and Colonel MacGregor (appointed Quartermaster-General to the Army in India) have also been entertained by her Majesty at dinner. Despite the intense frost, the Queen has been out most days either walking or sleighing, the Empress Eugénie sometimes accompanying her. Princess Beatrice frequently skates.

Earl Dalhousie represented her Majesty, and carried a wreath from her, at the funeral of Lord Camoys.

Mr. Porter Rhodes, of Kimberley, South Africa, has submitted to the Queen's inspection the large diamond found by him near there.

The Bishop of London has received from her Majesty £200 for the Metropolitan Visiting and Relief Association.

The Marquis of Huntly is appointed Captain of the Gentlemen-at-Arms, in the room of the Earl of Fife, resigned.

A design made by Colonel Arthur Ellis for the cross to be given to those who took part in the march from Cabul to Candahar, under Sir Frederick Roberts, has been submitted to and sanctioned by the Queen. It will be engraved with the words, "From Cabul to Candahar."

The Prince of Wales will, by command of the Queen, hold a Levée at St. James's Palace, on behalf of her Majesty, on Feb. 21. It is the Queen's pleasure that presentations to his Royal Highness at this Levée shall be considered as equivalent to presentations to her Majesty.

The Queen will hold the first Drawingroom of the season at Buckingham Palace, on Feb. 25. It is not expected that gentlemen will present themselves at Drawingrooms, except in attendance on the ladies of their families.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince of Wales was present at the balls given in London by Mr. Alfred de Rothschild and Mrs. Arthur Sassoon in honour of the marriage of Mr. Leopold de Rothschild and Mdlle. Marie Perugia. His Royal Highness arrived at Windsor yesterday week on a visit to Prince and Princess Christian at Cumberland Lodge. On Saturday the Prince had a skating party at Virginia Water, and went to the Spital Cavalry Barracks, Windsor, where he took up his quarters, as Colonel-in-Chief of the Household Cavalry, and dined with Colonel the Hon. Keith Fraser, commanding, and the officers in their mess-room, the guests including Prince Christian and several officers of the Household Brigade, covers being laid for thirty. On Sunday morning the Prince, wearing the customary uniform, attended the church parade of the 1st Life Guards, being received with a Royal salute, the troopers carrying swords and the band playing the National Anthem. After a summary inspection of the regiment, his Royal Highness presented a medal for good conduct and long service to Musician J. Wright, a similar distinction being conferred upon Corporal-Major Wyatt, who was in hospital. The Prince then, with Colonel Keith Fraser and Colonel Duncombe, took his place at the head of the regiment and marched to Holy Trinity Church, the Spital-road being lined by the residents, and the band playing a quick march, "Dinorah." The band, under Mr. Van den Heuvel, supplemented by stringed instruments, also took part in the musical portions of the service; the sermon being preached by the Rev. Arthur Robins. The Prince, after the service, returned in his place with the regiment to Spital, and then visited the troopers' quarters and the non-commissioned officers' mess, and afterwards lunched at the officers' mess. His Royal Highness attended the five o'clock service at St. George's Chapel, and dined at the usual mess. On Monday morning the Prince went to the riding-school and witnessed a lancer ride by twelve men, and also a troopers' ride, after which he inspected the stables and the married soldiers' quarters. His Royal Highness travelled from Windsor by the one o'clock express to London. The band of the 1st Life Guards, under Mr. Van den Heuvel, proceeded to Sandringham, where they have remained for the week. The Prince returned to Sandringham on Tuesday. His Royal Highness and the Princess, with their daughters, arrive at Marlborough House next Monday for the season.

Princess Christian, during her journey from London in the late snowstorm, was delayed some hours on the Great Western Railway; and, Prince Christian having telegraphed that the roads from Windsor to Cumberland Lodge were impassable, the Princess passed the night, the guest of the Hon. Mrs. Wellesley, at the Deanery. Princess Augusta Victoria of Holstein-Augustenburg and her sister remain the guests of Prince and Princess Christian at Cumberland Lodge. The wedding-dress of Princess Augusta Victoria, which is of white satin brocaded with silver, trimmed with point lace, is being prepared at the establishment of Mr. F. Caley, her Majesty's draper, Windsor.

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught have returned to Bagshot Park.

The Duke and Duchess of Teck, with their family, went to the Botanic Gardens on Tuesday to see the skaters.

The Kyrle Society for bringing beauty home to the people held their first meeting on Thursday in the Kensington Townhall, Prince Leopold, president, in the chair; Princess Louise of Lorne, vice-president, being present.

The Maharajah Dhuleep Singh and the Maharanee have arrived at Claridge's Hotel from Elvedon Hall, Thetford.

The Queen has approved the offer of a Privy Councillorship to Sir Arthur Hobhouse, Q.C., with the view of securing his services on the Judicial Committee.

Mr. Ralph Richardson, secretary of the Midlothian Liberal Association, having written to Mr. Gladstone in reference to reports which have been published that on account of ill health the Premier was about to retire from the House of Commons and accept a peerage, received the following reply from the private secretary to the Prime Minister:—"I beg to assure you that the rumour to which you refer in your note to me is perfectly groundless."

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers on the last day of the third week in January was 96,564, of whom 52,776 were in workhouses and 43,788 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding week in 1879, 1878 and 1877, these figures show an increase of 351, 8173, and 11,960 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 699, of whom 538 were men, 140 women, and 21 children under sixteen.

THE CHURCH.

Mr. Harry S. C. Smithson, of Morris Grange, near Richmond, has contributed £250 towards the restoration and enlargement of the parish church of Shildon, near Darlington.

The reopening of Wood Norton church, Norfolk, after restoration, by Mr. Dolby, architect, took place on Wednesday week, under considerable difficulties, owing to the unusual severity of the weather.

A painted window, the gift of Mr. Crundall, has been placed in St. James's, Dover. The subject, "Christ Blessing Children," which has been executed under the direction of the Rev. W. E. Light, fills the four main openings. The work is from the studio of Mr. W. G. Taylor, of Berners-street.

The apse at the south-eastern angle of Chester Cathedral has been restored, in memory of their father, by the sons of the late Mr. Thomas Brassey, who was born at Aldford, near that city, in 1805. The groined ceiling of the apse is filled with rich gilded fresco-work, the windows are enriched with stained glass, and the space beneath the windows is occupied by a series of very fine mosaics of scriptural subjects. The mosaics are dedicated to the memory of Mrs. Brassey "by her sons, Thomas Henry, Arthur, and Albert." The latest addition is, however, a bust in marble, by M. Wagmuller, of the late Mr. Brassey, the pedestal of which is partially incorporated with the northern wall of the apse. It is considered an excellent likeness. It is proposed to insert additional mosaics in memory of one of Mr. Brassey's children.

Canon Farrar began his third sermon on the Establishment, at Westminster Abbey, on Sunday afternoon, by repudiating the "complete misconception" that he was answering any sermons preached in any other place. He addressed himself to large principles, not to small antagonisms. At a time when voices had been raised, even within the Church, of protest against her national character, it was but befitting that some words of defence should be uttered by one of the humblest of her sons in the grandest of her temples. Had he kept silence, even the stones of the Abbey might have cried out against him. He then proceeded to eulogise the parochial system, and to predict its destruction as the certain result of disestablishment. He denied that the Church was the mere creature of the State, or that she was or ever had been established by the State. She was born with the birth of the nation, and has been the sound mind in the sound body of the English State ever since. He then traced her history through British, Saxon, and mediæval times down to the Reformation, in order to prove that she had never been entirely independent of the State, and had never been entirely under the dominion of Papal Rome.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. Childers presented the prizes, last Saturday, to the successful competitors in the 4th Kent Rifle Volunteer Corps, at Woolwich. He called attention to the voluntary system being the basis of the volunteer organisation and of our entire military system; and expressed his satisfaction that, notwithstanding the depression of the last few years, the Volunteers had steadily become a more efficient force. He advised parents to encourage their sons and young people generally to give more attention to drill.

On the same day the prizes of the 8th (late 19th) Surrey (Borough of Lambeth) Rifles were distributed by the Lord Mayor at the head-quarters, New-street, Kennington-park-road. Lieut.-Colonel Ray, in his opening statement, said the strength of the regiment was 700, and there were 655 efficients. Private Chadwick, of A company, was awarded the badge of rifle and three stars as best shot in the battalion.

A dramatic performance will be given by the Royal Naval Volunteers' Musical and Dramatic Club at St. George's Hall, Langham-place, next Saturday, for the benefit of Instructor W. G. White, who has recently met with a very serious accident, at gun drill, which will entirely incapacitate him from further duty. The performance will begin at eight o'clock, with an original farcical comedy, in three acts, entitled—"Tom Cobb," by W. S. Gilbert. (The committee have much pleasure in announcing that the author has kindly volunteered to superintend the piece.) This will be followed by an original musical eccentric fragment, in one act, entitled—"Love," by Gunner C. F. Fuller; music composed and arranged by Gunner Campbell Williams.

KILLED BY A SHARK.

The Times of Monday announces the death of a boy, Alexey O'Connell Drury, from mutilations received from a shark while bathing in the river at Brisbane.

The Queensland papers give details of this sad occurrence as follows:—On the evening of Nov. 25 last, Victor and Alexey, sons of Mr. Albert V. Drury, clerk to the Executive Council, and nephews of Mr. Justice Pring, were bathing, with three other lads, in the river, close to their father's residence. Alexey Drury, a fine, manly little fellow of about twelve, and, although so young, a first-rate swimmer and diver, was close to the bank, his companions having landed, when he was seized by the foot by a shark, said to be 8 ft. long. The boy screamed and made a brave struggle, not losing his presence of mind for a moment, and as the shark appeared to be dragging him under, he turned and dived at the brute, and, in doing so, got free. The shark then made a second and more determined rush, seizing the poor lad by the other leg with a firmer hold, Alexey all the time keeping hitting at the monster. Victor Drury, a year or two older than Alexey, on hearing the screams, gallantly jumped into the water to his little brother's assistance, followed by the other lads, and after desperate struggles they succeeded in dragging the brave little fellow on to the bank. In the meantime a second shark had appeared, but, happily, did not join in the attack. On assistance being obtained Alexey's feet were found to be so fearfully lacerated that both had to be amputated. For some time the symptoms seemed favourably to the child's life being saved, notwithstanding the great loss of blood and shock to the system, but, unhappily, mortification set in, and the lad was released from his terrible sufferings on the morning of the 27th, clinging to his poor parents to the last.

THE STATE TRIAL IN IRELAND.

The trial of Mr. Parnell and other members of the Irish Land League has been brought to a close without any definite result.

In the Court of Queen's Bench, Dublin, on Monday Mr. Justice Fitzgerald opened his charge to the jury. Mr. Parnell and others of the traversers were in court. The Judge declared that the law of conspiracy was clear, and not, as it had been called, the invention of modern times. It was equally untrue that it was obsolete and set aside. There was no analogy whatever between trades unionism and the Land League's system of agitation. He commented on the rules of the Land League furnished for the organisation and management of local branches, and said he had no hesitation in stating that the organisation from which these proceeded was an illegal one. Mr. Biggar had stated in one of his speeches that the magistrates and Judges in that country were partisan, and that the tenant who sought for a remedy from these sources had no chance. It was also said to be useless for a tenant to expect redress from his landlord, for the Crown counsel misapplied the truth and the juries were packed. Judge Fitzgerald stated that this was untrue, and that the person who uttered it knew it to be so. Continuing his summing-up on Tuesday, Mr. Justice Fitzgerald quoted from their speeches, and said they were not in support of reform, but were the advocacy of revolution and a Communistic Republic. If the allegations and facts made in the indictment were considered to have been proved, the defendants were guilty of a breach of the law.

After deliberating several hours, the jury announced that there was no prospect of their agreeing upon a verdict, and they were accordingly discharged. It was stated that there were two for and ten against a conviction.

THE REPORT OF THE IRISH LAND COMMISSION.

The report of the Royal Commissioners on the Irish land system has been published, filling a Bluebook of nearly seventy pages. The main recommendations of the report are signed by four of the Commissioners, Lord Bessborough, Baron Dowse, The O'Conor Don, and Mr. Shaw, though the two latter publish supplementary observations qualifying their adhesion. The fifth Commissioner, Mr. Kavanagh, publishes a separate report, in which he expresses his dissent from many of the arguments and conclusions of his colleagues, while, practically, he comes nearer to them than was anticipated.

The Commissioners state that the object of the scheme they advocate is "to recognise by legislation the abiding and prevailing traditional sentiment that the cultivator has a property in the soil he cultivates." Starting from this point, the Commissioners have come to the conclusion that the Act of 1870 has "been vainly appealed to for an adequate remedy" by the Irish tenant. No modification or enlargement of that Act, it is urged, will meet the necessity of the case. Nor is the proposed extension of the Ulster tenant-right custom to the rest of Ireland admitted to be a satisfactory settlement. Even in Ulster, it is said, the tenant-right system, legalised and consolidated by the Act of 1870, has broken down.

The Commissioners propose to "give legal recognition to the existing state of things." "Occupiers have, as a general rule, acquired rights to continuous occupancy which, in the interests of the community, it is desirable legally to recognise. We think the farmer should no longer be liable at law to the displacement of his interest in his holding, either directly by ejectment, or indirectly by the raising of his rent, at the discretion of the landlord." The Commissioners propose to carry out this policy by enlarging all ordinary tenancies from year to year "into a new kind of statutory tenure, defeasible only upon decree of the Land Court, for the breach of certain well-ascertained conditions, and held subject to the payment of a rent the amount of which should, in the last resort, be fixed neither by the landlord nor by the tenant, but by constituted authority. The method according to which a fair rent should be fixed is fully discussed in the report, and the Commissioners at the same time recommend that "free sale" should be allowed.

With respect to the scheme for the establishment of a peasant proprietary in Ireland, the Commissioners generally concur in the recommendations of the Committee which investigated the subject in 1877 and 1878. The removal of technical hindrances and the advancement of a larger proportion of capital to purchasing tenants are advocated. The state of the poverty-stricken peasantry in many places, "where, it is said, they are not able, if they had their land gratis, to live by cultivating it," is not regarded as presenting an insoluble problem. Reduction of rent may slightly better the condition of these poor people. Free sale, it is supposed, "will do something also." State-aided emigration is discountenanced. The Commissioners say:—"We should be unwilling to encourage the idea that by pressure from without the Irish people were induced to leave their native land." Another proposal, for the interference of the State and the expenditure of public money, is also dismissed. The project of planting the poorer tenants and labourers on the waste lands is acknowledged to be impracticable:—"Lands which are pure waste will never repay the outlay for reclamation, and those of a better class are held for grazing purposes, and are highly prized by those tenants who have privileges on them."

These are the main points in the report signed by the four Commissioners.

MR. BRYCE, M.P., ON ASIA MINOR.

Last Saturday evening Mr. Bryce, M.P., gave a lecture at the Jewish Working Men's Club and Institute, Hutchison-street, Houndsditch, on the subject of "Asia Minor, its Past and its Future." After dealing with the ancient history of Asia Minor, the lecturer went on to describe the rule of the Turks, a nation without art, without science, and without literature, under whom the land had gradually but surely decayed down to the present day, when the whole of the country scarcely contained as many souls as London. Vast tracts of land, once fertile, were now sterile deserts, and even in the chief city, Smyrna, the "delta" of the river was allowed to "silt" up to such an extent that before long it would be unapproachable except by vessels of the smallest tonnage. Life was so insecure that no man ventured out unarmed. The only remedy for this state of things was the overthrow of the power of the Sultan, which he believed was near at hand. The Arabs, who hated and despised the Moslems, were in a state of revolt; the other nationalities would follow suit; and then, by the establishment of local self-government, those who knew exactly the wants and requirements of the country would administer its affairs. The Greeks would take the seaboard, and there would be a gradual return of the Jews to Palestine. It was the wish of all men that Palestine should come back to the hands of its ancient rulers, the Jews, and to this end the first emigrants must be agriculturists, whose ranks could be recruited from the persecuted Jews of Roumania, Poland, and, he was sorry to say, Germany. The fertile slopes of Palestine would thus be again clad with vines, and her now sterile deserts would become golden corn-fields. The world would look forward to the time when the Jewish race would again possess their ancient home.

At a meeting held in London last Saturday, at which Hanlan, Trickett (who represented Laycock), and Mr. Ireland, the umpire, were present, it was decided to postpone the match for the Sculling Championship and stake of one thousand pounds between Hanlan and Laycock to Monday, Feb. 14.

General Roberts was entertained at a public dinner on Tuesday evening by the leading citizens of Bristol. The Mayor presided, and the High Sheriff of the city, the High Steward (the Duke of Beaufort), and the Lord Lieutenant of the county (Earl Ducie) were among the company.

Mr. John McLaren, Lord Advocate of Scotland, and Mr. Edward Jenkins were on Tuesday nominated as candidates for the representation of the city of Edinburgh, where the polling took place on Thursday—the result not being known at the time our early edition was put to press.

A meeting of the Court of Aldermen was held on Tuesday—the Lord Mayor presiding—when the application of Mr. William Lennon Ashmead-Bartlett, gentleman, 80, Piccadilly, for the freedom and to be recorded in the Vintners' Company was granted.

A petition was before the Master of the Rolls last Saturday for the winding-up of the Edison Telephone Company of London (Limited), which was formed in August, 1879, with a nominal capital of £230,000, in 2000 shares of £100 each. The Master of the Rolls made the order as prayed.

Remissions of rent have recently been made as follows:—The Duke of Cambridge at the rent audit just held of the Combe estates granted a reduction of 15 per cent to his farm tenants; and the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland has again allowed a deduction of 10 per cent to the tenantry on his Hertfordshire estates. A remission of 20 per cent has been granted on the half-year's rent to the tenants on Lord Clifden's estate at Buckingham. Considerable remissions of rent have been made during the last half-year by the late Sir Robert Burdett and his sisters, Baroness Burdett-Coutts and Mrs. Trevanion, to the tenants of the Baronet's estates in Berks and Wilts.

One incident of the snowstorm, the strange adventures of a cheque for £1000, is, perhaps, worth recording. On the evening of the 18th inst., among other letters put up for posting, was one addressed to a house in Glasgow, containing a cheque on the Bank of England for a sum little short of one thousand pounds. The cheque, not reaching its destination in due course, was stopped at the Bank, and nothing more was heard of it until Tuesday morning, when, to the surprise of the merchants who had issued the cheque, it was brought back, with the missing letter, by a police inspector, it having been found adhering to a block of ice floating in the river off Deptford, in front of Messrs. Penn's engineering works. It is presumed that the messenger, in taking the letters to Lombard-street, dropped some, and that this one was carted with the snow into the Thames, and, after a week's immersion, was found frozen to a block of ice, and was taken by the finder to the Deptford police station.

The fatal effects of the cold weather are seen in the Registrar-General's return for last week. The total number of deaths was 2016, and the births numbered 2192. The births were 531 below the average, while the deaths exceeded by 230 the average numbers, in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs, which had been 353, 363, and 371 in the three preceding weeks, rose last week to 617, and showed an excess of 141 upon the corrected average number in the corresponding week of the last ten years: 441 were attributed to bronchitis, and 97 to pneumonia. The deaths of three males, aged 81, 86, and 92 years, in East London, were the subject of inquests, the verdict in each case being "Found dead. Syncope. Exposure to cold." There were 42 deaths from smallpox, 52 from measles, 44 from scarlet fever, 9 from diphtheria, 31 from whooping-cough, 13 from enteric fever, 3 from ill-defined forms of continued fevers, and 12 from diarrhœa. In Greater London 2644 births and 2389 deaths were registered. The mean temperature last week was 23·4 deg. and 15·5 below the average in the corresponding week of the twenty years ending 1868. The coldest day was Thursday, when the mean was only 19·2, showing a deficiency of 19·9. The lowest night temperature was 12·7 on Monday, and the highest day temperature in the shade 31·7 on Saturday.

SECOND NOTICE.

The two early works by Raphael with which we concluded our first notice of this exhibition left us at the threshold of the sixteenth century, and of that development of the Italian school in which art reached the highest point it has ever attained in modern times of imaginative majesty and dramatic power, as also of technical achievement in all but minor, more sensuous, and semi-material qualities. But of this grand climacteric we have here no fully adequate examples. The nearest approach to the lofty standard of the period will, perhaps, be found in three portraits by Andrea del Sarto, which, though damaged by abrasion in cleaning, fairly support his reputation among his contemporaries as a portrait painter. These are No. 150, described as a "Portrait of the Painter," but certainly not a likeness of the artist himself, though it may be of his friend Conti, as suggested by Messrs. Crowe and Cavalcaselle; and two others, simply called, respectively, "Portrait of a Man" (153) and "Portrait of a Lady" (159). In the last a book is introduced (indicating the lady's literary tastes), inscribed "Petrarcha," and, for no other apparent reason, the portrait has been absurdly supposed to represent Petrarch's Laura, who, when this portrait was painted, had been dead about sixty years. All three portraits are remarkable not for their draughtsmanship, which is faulty, nor emphatically for their intense characterisation, but for their noble air and grave colouring, and, above all, their effective light and shade—the shadow of the head being projected with striking effect of relief in more than one instance on to the background. To the treatment in this last respect the heads owe an aspect of almost illusive reality, and it was this which Vasari doubtless had in view when he eulogised Andrea's portraits as hardly distinguishable from the living personages. It is noteworthy, also, as anticipating much that was subsequently done—even by Rembrandt.

Turning to the Venetian school, there is a fine half-length (156) of a typical Venetian bella bionda, large of mould, but with exquisitely pencilled features—ascribed to Giorgione. The face has, however, been so minutely stippled by the restorer, that it is impossible to recognise the touch of the master. A rather large "Holy Family" (149), bearing the name of Titian, is a fine and glowing, but much obscured and woefully cracked picture—at least of the school. An authentic and better-preserved Titian is that of the three little Princesses, daughters of King Ferdinand of Austria (213); but the great Italian has hardly caught the unconscious grace of childhood as our own Reynolds would probably have done. As a master of decorative effect, Paul Veronese is unrivalled here in his grandiose figures of "Geometry and Navigation" (164) and "Astronomy" (166); and still more in the group numbered 146, in which, under the guise of a mass of voluptuous "Venus" and a stately "Mars" (one of each of whose legs a little amorino is binding together with a rosy fillet, while another restrains the charge of Mars with his own sword), we doubtless have the portraits of a Venetian noble and his mistress. The picture is in perfect preservation, and Veronese's colouring is seen at its ripest and best; we can recall, indeed, few examples of the master to compare with this one; the refined colour of the flesh of Venus and the keeping of its lovely grey-toned shadows are worthy of all praise. Two male heads by Moroni (158 and 162)—so perfectly rendering, as usual, the individuality of each, that we might fancy we were acquainted with the originals—should not be passed by, though hung too high for their merit, and though suffering from sinking in of the colours into the dark preparation (frequent in Moroni's works), which gives, to the latter more particularly, a cadaverous aspect.

Of the Spanish School there is an early ultra-realistic Murillo, "The Marriage at Cana" (154), with the customary Sevillian types of common life, and a number of Spanish jars in the foreground. But more interesting to an artist than this and other works of the same long-overrated painter will be the single head, "The Flute Player" (102), a most powerful piece of character and handling, attributed, and rightly, we think, to Velasquez.

We styled Vandyke a Flemish-Italian in our preceding article, and there can be no question that his visit to Italy largely influenced his style, as that of his master Rubens (many whose prolific pencil, by-the-way, there is not a single example here) was influenced before him by the same experience, and also, by that, looking to the South, of sundry of his Flemish contemporaries and immediate predecessors. There are several pieces of Vandyke's portraiture, after he had acquired the stateliness and warmth that distinguished the noble series of his works at Genoa. But we have only space to mention the large group at the head of the Great Room of John, Count of Nassau, his wife, son, and three daughters. Technically, this picture is almost faultless; yet its execution is simple and direct as can be; it has, on the one hand, neither the slightness and thinness of our own Gainsborough, nor, on the other, the factitious impasto and glazings of Reynolds. But it may justly be objected that the composition is formal, the figures too equally ranged, and each too palpably and consciously posed—faults which it was sought to obviate in the family and other groups of a rather later period, called conversation-pieces, in which some incident or common occupation removes the stiffness of a too symmetrical parade.

It is time, however, that we should come to the Dutch pictures—derived mainly from the collection of Mrs. Henry Hope—which form so distinct a feature of this exhibition. We leave finally, then, the glow of the South for the grey of the North; we part company with sumptuously robed Signori and Signore for black-frocked burgomasters and dwarfish boors and vrows; we exchange the palazzo for the drinking-shop and rustic hut; art will be no more inspired by piety or lofty imagination; the gallery fresco or canvas will be replaced by the miniature panel or cabinet frame; for elevating purpose we must often accept an utterly ignoble aim; instead of all that lends charm and grace and beauty to the aspect of life, we must often be content with the ugly, the low, the sordid. Yet, despite all these drawbacks—which, however, should be steadily kept in view in estimating the Dutch school, and were too much lost sight of by the dilettante collectors of the last century, or this country would have been enriched by many more priceless and now unattainable Italian masterpieces—despite, we say, all drawbacks, these Dutch pictures are so sincere, so faithful to the nature they represent; above all, they are wrought with such patient skill and carried to such completeness that their study becomes both instructive and interesting. And among them we shall even find, occasionally at least, a sense of elegance in subject or accessories, derived probably from the French—as in Wouverman's daintily finished equestrian groups, and the silvery little pictures by Metzu, particularly his "Gentleman, in a black dress, Writing" (127), not to speak of Netscher and other painters unrepresented. Terburg, too, though a laborious, phlegmatic painter, was a gentleman, and his models were clearly drawn from the Batavian aristocracy: though his Burgomaster here (80) is scarcely a favourable specimen, and stands awkwardly, owing to the too "sudden" perspective of the floor. Van der Helst, also, has a true sense of dignity in his admirable portrait-works, of which there is a good example in the "Arrest of the De Witts" (87), which is a kind of dramatic "conversation"-piece. And if the subjects of De Hooghe are not elevated, they are, on the other hand, not depraved. But much could be forgiven to such a consummate painter of light—as great almost in this direction as is Rembrandt as a painter of shadow. The Queen's picture, representing "A Card Party" (113), with the light shining through windows and door from the court without, is positively dazzling. We see, however, the means whereby this brilliance is in part obtained; the nearer shadowed portions of the figures next the spectator are, in order by contrast to force the light, rendered densely, almost inkily, black—more so than they would appear in nature. In the other De Hooghe the contrasts are less violent; but although the picture is, in consequence, less striking at first sight, it is more veracious and more subtle in observation. The light within is perhaps too equal in value to the light without, but the graduation of the effect generally, especially through the open doorway, is wonderfully illusive. In two little pictures by Paul Potter there is, again, some exaggeration of light and shade. The brown cloud and sunburst in the "Landscape, with Cattle and Sheep" (82) decidedly oversteps the modesty of nature; and in "The Stable Door" (71), the light falling on the white horse is not accounted for. The popular favourite, Gerard Dow, does not illustrate the best side of the art of Holland. It is almost painful to us to dwell upon or trace the dogged phlegm and mechanical elaboration of this "Girl with Game and Vegetables" (97) at a window, in which you may count the very threads of the carpet slung up on one side, and the meshes of the wicker birdcage on the other. Yet it is impossible to deny that in the smaller picture by Dow, called "Smoking" (70), the effect of candle-light on the faces is rendered with singular fidelity, while the microscopic precision of touch is marvellous. A wide contrast to the last is presented by the sturdy and comparatively impulsive Jan Steen, with his free and descriptive handling. Here (88) is the burly toper in propriâ personâ, painted by himself, clearly without flattery, sitting smoking, with half-closed, musing eyes, his after-dinner pipe, while his still fatter wife has fallen asleep over the remains of their meal, and his children amuse themselves blowing soap-bubbles. Whatever we may think of the man or his ménage, as painting this is good work—fine in colour, true in effect, spirited in handling. His faculty for telling a story, as well as his merits as a painter per se, are further illustrated in "The Christening" (100), and "A Lady offering Wine to a Gentleman" (104), the last being curiously Hogarthian in its apparent intention. For artistic qualities of colouring and effect (almost Italian in their low-toned richness), and for balance of those qualities, none of these painters deserve to rank higher than, if so high as, rare and, till lately, little known Van der Meer of Delft. The "Interior" (193), by him, is a beautiful work of art. To think that his pictures till not long ago could have been bought for a few pounds!

A greater than all these, however, remains to be noticed—one who stands as it were apart in a strange region of weird imagination and witching shadows. Rembrandt was not, as is often supposed, unacquainted with classical remains, nor with the great Italian masters of the Renaissance, for we know this from the catalogue of his effects made on his bankruptcy; yet—though not perhaps, after all, wholly uninfluenced by the latter—how determinedly he preserved his own individuality. We have here a small full-length portrait group of a portly gentleman and his wife, signed and dated, 1633—painted with that studious, searching care which has characterised the early works of every artist that has ever risen to eminence. Next, "Christ and his Disciples in the Storm" (168), signed and dated two years later, but which is hardly worthy of him, though it has always been accepted as his. Then comes a "Portrait of a Man" (161) in the act of taking down his cap from a wall, bearing the date 1644—solid and strong, like all the works of this period, but ugly and ill-conceived in action. Lastly, the equestrian life-size portrait of Marshal Turenne (165), dated 1649, the only portrait of this description painted by Rembrandt—the head fine, but the horse rather wooden, and the landscape background impartially bathed in brown to relieve the head. In short, none of these works are fully representative of the master's genius in its maturity. Rembrandt we all know as the arch-magician of chiaroscuro; but the study of shadow effects was pursued by other of the "brown masters" of Holland. There is a picture of an "Oil Mill" (96) here by Teniers, which, though relieved now and again by sparkling touches on pots, pans, and iron, characteristic of his hand, might have been painted in rivalry with Rembrandt, if the early date, "1633," will not, as indeed it does not, forbid the supposition. Of how true Teniers, in another of his "manners," could be to grey daylight effect we have, however, examples in the "Interior" (69), with the carcase of an ox, and in the open air "Worship of Bacchus" (69)—a large picture illustrating by various groups, the making of wine, with also a crowd of votaries about the shrine of a boy Bacchus, and not omitting the more offensive concomitants of debauchery. Adrian Van Ostade, again, is distinctly conventional in the olive-brown shadow tones of the open-air scene—idyllic shall we call it in virtue of its subject and abject naïveté—"A Cottage Yard" (106). Still more conventional, more obviously forced for a purpose, are the hotter brown shadows that frame round the face of Nicholas Maas's "Old Woman Peeling Apples" (119). But look well at that old woman's face, with its deep furrows of age, and its patient enduring expression, for there is nothing more faithful to nature, and hardly anything so pathetic in the entire exhibition.

Here we must pause, leaving the works of deceased British painters for a concluding notice.

Mr. Alfred Elmore, R.A., died on Monday last. We shall give his portrait next week.

The twentieth annual exhibition of the Glasgow Institute of the Fine Arts, will open to the public on Tuesday next.

Mr. Frank Dicksee, painter, and Mr. William Hamo Thornycroft, sculptor, have been elected Associates of the Royal Academy.

Mr. Alma-Tadema has been appointed by the Emperor of Germany a Foreign Knight of the Order Pour le Mérite of the Arts and Sciences division.

The court of assistants of the Goldsmiths' Company have raised their annual subscription to the City and Guilds of London Institute for the Advancement Technical Education from £2000 to £4000 per annum, exclusive of the capital sum of £10,000 previously voted towards the building fund of the Central Technical Institute at South Kensington.

The Art-Union of Ireland announces its twenty-second annual drawing for next month. The entire sum received from subscribers to the society, less working expenses, is devoted to the purchase of works of art exhibited annually at the Exhibition of the Royal Hibernian Academy, the selection of the work being left to the prize-winner. Last year the committee were enabled to distribute the sum of £440 in prizes, twenty in number, varying in value from £50 to £10.

The January number of the Art Journal is the first of a new series, and comes out quite changed, both in its contents and its outside appearance. This, the oldest of the journals devoted to art, is evidently determined to compete with some of its younger rivals, such as Scribner's Magazine and the American Art-Review; but in the matter of illustrations it has yet a good deal of way to make up. We wish success to this "brush up" of an old friend, who is evidently bent on keeping pace with the times.

The February number of the Magazine of Art is a good one, full of interesting reading and good engravings. "The Homes of our Artists" is the beginning of an interesting series of illustrated papers, which, if as well done as this home of the President of the Royal Academy, will be of great value hereafter as records of the great painters of the Victorian era. There is also in this number a good account of the Roman villa at Brading.

SCENE IN A MENAGERIE.

The large African lion "Wallace," which recently attacked and severely wounded a cage-cleaner at Sanger's menagerie, Bingley Hall, Birmingham, made a ferocious attack last Saturday upon the negro lion-tamer, Alicamousa, himself, who narrowly escaped with his life. The lion, which is still suffering from the wounds on the head which were inflicted on him by Alicamousa at the time he rescued the cage-cleaner, has on several occasions shown signs of resentment lately when the lion-tamer entered the cage, and rather heavy punishment has been found necessary to make him go through his performance. On Saturday, when Alicamousa entered the den he was seized by the lion, which sprang upon him, dashed him on the floor of the cage, and seized his right arm in its mouth. The lion-tamer held a loaded whip in his right hand, which he could not use, but with his left he fired a revolver which contained a blank cartridge. This had no effect. But one of the under-keepers thrusting an iron bar into the cage and probing the lion with it, the animal loosed his hold of the man. Then Alicamousa regained his feet, and with great self-possession, fired another shot at the lion, which sulkily retired. The lion-tamer walked out of the den, and was afterwards treated at the Queen's Hospital for severe scalp wounds and a lacerated wound of the arm. "Wallace" will be sent to the Zoological Society's Gardens, and will not again go through any "lion-taming" performances.

TEENS that YOUNG LADIES are in no hurry to get out of—

"LOUIS" VELVET-TEENS.

ASSUMING a mere fancy name for Velveteen, and stamping it on the back, adds nothing to the genuineness or value of the article. When, however, you see

THE LOUIS VELVETEEN

"LOUIS." stamped on every yard of the fabric, you have a guarantee of PROVED SUPERIORITY and EXCELLENCE.

Be careful therefore to observe that you find the words on every yard, without which you will not obtain the genuine Louis Velveteen, notwithstanding all representations to the contrary.

Wholesale London Agent, J. H. FULLER, 92, Watling-street, who will send on inquiry, post-free, the names of the nearest Drapers from whom the genuine LOUIS VELVETEEN can be obtained.

LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL.
THE PUREST. THE MOST EFFICACIOUS.
THE MOST PALATABLE. THE MOST DIGESTIBLE.
Proved by thirty years' medical experience to be
THE ONLY COD-LIVER OIL
which produces the full curative effects in
CONSUMPTION AND DISEASES OF THE CHEST, THROAT AFFECTIONS, GENERAL DEBILITY, AND WASTING DISEASES OF CHILDREN.

SELECT MEDICAL OPINIONS.

SIR G. DUNCAN GIBB, Bart., M.D., Physician to the Westminster Hospital.

"The value of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL as a therapeutic agent in a number of diseases, chiefly of an exhaustive character, has been admitted by the world of medicine; but, in addition, I have found it a remedy of great power in the treatment of many Affections of the Throat and Larynx, especially in Consumption of the latter, where it will sustain life when everything else fails."

DR. SINCLAIR COGHILL,
Physician Royal National Hospital for Consumption, Ventnor.

"I have convinced myself that in Tubercular and the various forms of Strumous Disease, Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL possesses greater therapeutic efficacy than any other Cod-Liver Oil with which I am acquainted. It was especially noted, in a large number of cases in which the patients professed they had never been able to retain or digest other Cod-Liver Oil, but Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL was not only tolerated, but taken readily, and with marked benefit."

DR. HUNTER SEMPLE,
Physician Hospital for Diseases of the Throat and Chest.

"I have long been aware of the great reputation enjoyed by the LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL introduced into medical practice by Dr. DE JONGH, and have recommended it with the utmost confidence. I have no hesitation in stating my opinion, that it possesses all the qualities of a good and efficient medicine. Its taste is by no means disagreeable, and might even be called pleasant. I have found Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL very useful in cases of Chronic Cough, and especially in Laryngeal Disease complicated with Consumption."

JOSEPH J. POPE, Esq., M.R.C.S.,
Late Staff Surg., Army, Prof. of Hygiene, Birkbeck Institution.

"I found during my Indian experience that the worth and character of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL remained unchanged by tropical heat or foreign climate, and it was, from its uniformity of character, particularly adapted for long-continued administration. The value of 'hydro-carbons' in all debilitated states of the system is now becoming thoroughly recognised: and it is, without doubt, from the animal oils and fats, rather than from their vegetable substitutes, that we may hope to derive the surest benefit. The Oil of Dr. DE JONGH places in everyone's reach a reliable and valuable remedy, one that cannot be too widely recognised."

DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL is sold ONLY in capsuled IMPERIAL Half-Pints, 2s. 6d.; Pints, 4s. 9d.; Quarts, 9s.; by all respectable Chemists and Druggists throughout the World.

WINTRY WEATHER ON THE THAMES: THE RIVER AT PUTNEY.

THE GREAT SNOWSTORM.

Not for many years past has the southern part of Great Britain felt a wintry storm to be compared in violence and long continuance with that of Tuesday in last week. Its effects in London and the Home Counties were beyond example within the recollection of middle-aged persons; though in the North of England, especially at Manchester in a memorable January nearly thirty years ago, the obstruction of railway traffic and of postal communication, during three whole days, was far more remarkable. We devote the larger number of our Illustrations, this week, to the subject which has chiefly occupied the attention of society in and around the metropolis, during the past ten days, notwithstanding the urgent importance of Irish political discussions. The great storm of Tuesday, Jan. 18, will long be held memorable, attended as it was, both in town and country, and on the river Thames, and on the south-eastern seacoast, with incidental disasters, floods in South London, distressing or troublesome snow-drifts, destruction of piers and wharves, and the wreck of vessels along the shore, which coming all at once excited feelings almost of dismay.

Exceedingly boisterous and unsettled weather, on Tuesday morning last week, suddenly spread over these islands. The chart at eight a.m. showed that a large and important atmospheric depression had advanced from the Bay of Biscay to our south-western and southern coasts. Its centre lay near Jersey, where the barometer had fallen nearly an inch to 28·8 in.; while, in the opposite quarter, to the north-east, an area of high pressure had been formed over Scandinavia, and very steep gradients were shown over these islands. The wind had, consequently, risen quickly, and easterly gales were reported over the whole of England and Ireland. The gales were particularly severe and gusty in the south and south-east of England, and were accompanied by continuous and heavy snow, which, together, made the weather in these districts inclement in the extreme. Temperature had fallen in the south-west, but had risen fast in the east and south-east. The frost, however, though much less intense than during a few days before, still held generally, and readings ranged from 34 deg. in the south-west to 12 deg. at Aberdeen. During the whole of that day the depression travelled on in a north-easterly direction. Pressure was increasing over France and our south-western stations, while it remained steadily high in the north, and gradients on the barometric scale were very steep over England. The wind was west-south-westerly at Hurst Castle and Jersey, but easterly to north-easterly winds continued in all other places, and blew strongly or with the force of a gale, except in Scotland.

All over London, all through the Monday night, the wind blew a perfect hurricane, and continued all next day. Soon after nine a.m. on Tuesday, fine snow began to fall, and was driven before the wind with great force. It seemed to possess extraordinary penetrative power, as passengers by omnibuses, cabs, and other vehicles found to their discomfort, and so did the residents even in well-built houses. As the day wore on, the snow continuing to fall, it was driven by the easterly wind which prevailed into drifts and wreaths, especially in the suburbs, where in places it lay to the depth of three or four feet. The lowest temperature during the Monday night was 27 deg., or 5 deg. of frost. At nine o'clock next morning the thermometer stood at 28, and there was little variation throughout the day. By noon a good deal of snow had fallen, and the effect of the high wind, which was then pretty steady from the N.E., was to deposit the drift three feet in depth on one side of many streets, while the other side was free from snow. No instance can better describe the force of the wind and the density of the snow-falls than that furnished by stations on the Metropolitan and Metropolitan District Railways, which are 500 and 600 yards long, well roofed, but open at the ends. They had their platforms and permanent way as covered with snow as if they stood in the open air, unsheltered by capacious roofs. The carriage ways of the streets became so encumbered that during the afternoon all railway waggons and other weighty traffic was suspended. When it was carried on additional horses were yoked as leaders to the vehicles. Cabmen and the drivers of omnibuses wore veils over their faces, as without them the blinding snow would have rendered them incapable of driving without danger. In the course of the afternoon, in many usually busy streets, shopkeepers closed their premises for two reasons—first, because there was no one to buy their goods; and, secondly, to prevent their shop windows being blown in. In the New Cut, Lambeth (the market place for the poor of Lambeth), scarcely a shop was open during the afternoon. All tramway traffic, north and south of the Thames, ceased at eleven in the forenoon, and the river steam-boats could not run on account both of the snow-storm and the large masses of drift ice with which the river was covered from side to side. On all the lines of railway, main-line trains were sent out on their journeys to the country with two engines. Many trains which arrived in London during the afternoon and evening were similarly provided with two locomotives. The streets were comparatively deserted, for most of the cab-masters called in their horses and vehicles, and on many of the omnibus routes, especially in South London, the order was given to the conductors at two o'clock to make the current journey the last one for the day.

From three o'clock to half-past four in the afternoon there was a partial cessation of wind and snow, but at five it again blew a gale from the S.E., driving the snow before it with great violence. In the Strand clouds of snow came from the streets abutting on its southern side. Scarcely a cab was to be seen in the streets, but there were some four-wheelers having two, and in a few cases three, horses yoked to them. A guinea or more was in some cases demanded by cabmen. At the doors of the West-End club-houses commissionaires and porters during the night were constantly blowing their whistles for cabs, but without response; and such "cabbies" as were about, after having put down a fare, turned a deaf ear to any one who hailed them. The evening found some of the liveliest streets in town comparatively deserted, theatres and other places of amusement being half empty—to judge from the fact that at the entrances, where hundreds are frequently to be counted waiting admission, there were only a few who braved the discomfort. There were other dangers in the shape of tiles, slates, and chimney-pots from the house-tops, and at least sixty persons were admitted to the London hospitals; which had more cases of broken limbs, dislocations, and wounds of various kinds than has been known for a long time.

The scene on the river, for some days past so choked up by ice as to necessitate a partial suspension of navigation, was remarkable, especially in the Pool, where hundreds of vessels of various kinds are always moored, besides numerous small craft. The morning tide, which, owing to the force of the gale, ran up very swiftly, brought immense masses of the drift ice to bear so strongly on the numerous tiers of coal-laden barges that in some cases they broke from their moorings and drifted up stream; others were swamped and capsized by the accumulation of water forced over them, while many small boats sank.

It was not until one o'clock that the hurricane caused the flood tide to flow with a velocity which foreboded danger, but soon after that fears were entertained that the water would overtop the wharves fronting along Bankside and Upper Ground-street, Blackfriars-road. At that time the tide had only reached 2 ft. below Trinity high-water mark at London Bridge. It was then running up at the rate of five knots an hour, and, owing to the frozen state of the water, the river was much swollen, especially at a quarter to three, when it rose at the rate of 4 ft. 8 in. per hour. At five minutes to three o'clock the frontage of the river at Bankside was inundated, and shortly after a lamentable scene was witnessed in Princes-square, Commercial-road, Stamford-street. At this spot, some hundreds of people reside in and near the square, which is very low. The water, carrying large blocks of ice, was seen rushing down from Messrs. Davey and Co.'s wharf, as well as from Rosher's Wharf. The tide, which was still running strongly, forced the water into the main thoroughfares, inundating the dwellings of the poorer classes. One of the sketches we have engraved shows the interior of two rooms, front and back, of a house in Princes-square, half-filled with dirty snow after the water had retired. At half-past three o'clock the tide had reached four feet above Trinity high-water mark at Blackfriars Bridge. Fortunately the landing-pier belonging to the Thames Conservancy had been removed. At four o'clock the flood had reached several of the main sewers in Waterloo-road. The destruction of property will amount to several thousand pounds sterling. The afternoon's tide was the highest ever recorded in the River Thames, reaching 4 ft. 10 in. above Trinity high-water mark.

The Woolwich Pier, lately erected, was much damaged by the force of the flood. The water rose in the dockyard eight inches higher than the highest records, and parts of the mast-houses were nearly three feet under water, the waves breaking against the doors and windows with threatening violence. The yard was inundated for a considerable distance inland. In the docks at North Woolwich and at the entrance from the river twenty-six barges were sunk, and two men were drowned. The Arsenal Pier was covered with water; and the town pier was submerged in like manner, the brow being nearly two feet under water. This pier, resting on three massive floating hulks, almost went adrift; the pier-head and waiting-rooms were carried away. Charlton pier was also rendered useless, and several passenger-steamers, unable to find a landing-place, had to put back to Blackwall. Many houses near the river in Lower Charlton were inundated, some of them to the depth of three or four feet. Woolwich Dockyard and Woolwich Arsenal were flooded to a great extent. The Government powder-magazines on Plumstead Marshes were also invaded by the overflowing tide, which swept in cataracts over the new wall. Two men were blown into the water from the Albert Docks and drowned.

The railways, on several of the lines south of London, were blocked up during the afternoon. On the Brighton and South Coast Railway, the 11.40 a.m. train for Portsmouth and the twelve o'clock main for Brighton were dispatched, but immediately afterwards the main line became blocked, and remained so all through the evening. During the afternoon a telegram was received from Horley, near Reigate, stating that between that place and the Three Bridges the snow on the line was four feet deep. It was found practicable to continue the local traffic at intervals, and season and return ticket holders were allowed to travel between Croydon, the Crystal Palace, and Victoria at their own risk. During the greater part of the day traffic between Redhill and Brighton was entirely stopped. Between London and Croydon, the trains took two or three hours to run, in spite of extra engine power. At Streatham the last train dispatched for Victoria, at seven o'clock in the evening, very soon got snowed up, and had to be dug out. The issue of tickets beyond Dorking was entirely suspended soon after five o'clock. In the South-Eastern Railway service there was a total stoppage in the afternoon of traffic on the main lines, with the exception of that to Greenwich, which continued for some hours. The night mail to Dover was dispatched viâ Redhill, but there were very few passengers. The mail from Dover, which was due at half-past five o'clock, did not get into Cannon-street Station until eleven o'clock. The Hastings train, which left there at 2.20 p.m., did not arrive in Cannon-street until 10.30 p.m. Owing to the telegraph wires having been broken, nothing was known of the state of the permanent way beyond Chiselhurst. The greatest blocks to the local service after leaving Cannon-street occurred at Chelsea and New-cross, and there was likewise a serious stoppage between Woolwich and Deptford. The Maidstone Assizes should have been opened that day; but the Judges, Mr. Justice Hawkins and Mr. Justice Lindley, with most of the Bar, were snowed up at Shoreham, half-way from London.

Storms and floods have occurred in Portugal, and great destruction of property is reported.

THE STORM ON THE COAST.

The great tempest of east wind and snow, on Tuesday last week, visited both shores of the Thames estuary, about Southend and Sheerness, with extreme violence; and it was felt equally at Yarmouth, Harwich, and Dover, and on the Channel coast and in the Solent, as far as Ryde. Some Illustrations of its effects in those places are therefore added to the Sketches taken by our Artists the same day in London and the metropolitan suburbs, which occupy a large part of our Journal.

At Dover, before noon, the wind had risen to a hurricane, and, coming from the south-east, blew right into the harbour, doing great damage to the fishing craft. Three Dover luggers were smashed to atoms against the quays, their fragments blocking up the public street. At high water, a few minutes before one o'clock, the waves opposite the Esplanade were as high as the clock tower. The residence of the Mayor, Mr. Dickeson, fared badly, being near to an opening on the crescent, through which the sea rolled, carrying fences, asphalte, and large stones before it through to the Wellington Dock. The roof of the Mayor's house was partially stripped, and all the houses were flooded. The Marine Telegraph Company's stores were much damaged, and about fifty tons of coals, from Mr. Mowll's coal dépôt, on the quayside, were swept into the harbour. Mr. Swanston, of the Lord Warden Hotel, profiting from past experience, had his doors and windows well guarded, and so escaped serious damage, but the space around the hotel presented an extraordinary aspect, the paving-stones being torn up and strewn in all directions. The Continental mail-steamers had stopped, the morning and noon boats being unable to start. The mail-boat from Calais arrived at the Admiralty Pier before daylight, and landed mails and passengers, but, being unable to get into the harbour, she ran back for Calais, where she arrived safely. The noon mail-boat from Calais left for Dover, but, finding the gale too much for her, ran for Boulogne, which she reached safely in the afternoon.

The injury done to the Admiralty Pier at Dover is very extensive. All the substantial iron gates at the entrance to the pier have been carried away, while not a vestige remains of the gate-house and telegraph-box. A great deal of damage has been done to the promenade of the pier, where huge masses of flag-stones, weighing not less than a ton, have been displaced and carried away by the sea.

In the harbour at Folkestone a large amount of damage was done to the shipping, especially the smaller craft. The stone parapet at the corner of the old pier was washed completely away, leaving a very large breach, and the water washed through into the harbour. The planking on the pier and railings were nearly all carried away.

Ryde suffered a serious loss. Two large colliers, the Havelock and the John Ward, were blown against the iron railway pier, quite recently erected, and carried away about 200 ft. of the structure. Telegraph posts were blown down, and there was little or no communication with other places in the Isle of Wight. In the roadstead at Weymouth, there was an American barque, which ran into one of the Weymouth and Channel Islands steamers, the Aquila, started her adrift, and she in turn carried away the entire length of a landing jetty, and made havoc with the quay wall. The Aquila sustained considerable injury. The South of Ireland steamer was compelled to put back into the harbour in a disabled state, after attempting to go to Cherbourg for safety.

At Yarmouth, four or five vessels were driven ashore, one a French vessel, the crew of which were lost; and the others, whose crews were saved by the life-boat, the steam-tugs, the shore boatmen, and the rocket apparatus. But there was some loss of life on that coast. When the storm was at its worst on Tuesday the Springwell life-boat attempted to go to the assistance of a wreck, the mast-head of which was alone visible, and to which, it was believed, sailors were clinging, but the heavy sea on the beach rendered it impossible to get the boat off. After several attempts it was resolved to take the life-boat to the Great Eastern Railway Pier and launch it, and proceed alone to the wreck, no steam-tug being available. Soon after starting, and whilst trying, under sail, to make headway against the heavy gale and tremendous sea, she was suddenly overwhelmed and capsized. Five of the Yarmouth life-boat men were drowned; their bodies were washed ashore, and they had a public funeral, attended by the Mayor and Corporation of Yarmouth. At Harwich, the same day, a gallant rescue was effected by a man named Stuart, at the height of the gale, by jumping overboard from the quay after a lad who had been blown into the water, and saving him.

At Gorleston, a brig, supposed to be the Rapid, of Whitby, was at anchor in the Ham all day. Towards the afternoon she drifted, and the crew were seen in the rigging. Rocket apparatus was set to work, but the crew seemed unable to avail themselves of the lines. The life-boat then made several efforts to reach her, but the sea at the bar was so heavy she could not get out. About five o'clock all hopes of saving the crew were abandoned, and there is no doubt they were lost.

A proof of the valuable work performed by the life-boats around our coasts is furnished by a list we have received from the Royal National Life-Boat Institution, showing that in the storms of last week no less than 143 lives were saved by the gallantry of the life-boat crews.

The gale was hardly less to be dreaded on the Essex and Kentish shores approaching the Nore. At Southend, a barge snapped her cable and drifted on to the breakwater, which it snapped down, and then drove on to the landing-pier, which had been already considerably damaged by two barges that were alongside driving underneath it. During the afternoon, a fourth barge broke away from her moorings and drifted on to the Promenade Pier, carrying away about forty feet of the planking. Two of these craft have since sunk, but the crews were safely landed. The damage is estimated at £2000. The wife and three children of the man at the pier-head, a mile and a quarter from land, were brought ashore in a small boat, which put off in a heavy sea, the boatmen being loudly cheered as they landed on the beach.

At Sheerness, the fury of the storm was greatly felt, and one of our Sketches shows what a scene it was there. At Gravesend thirty fishing-smacks were sunk, and ten or twelve barges lost, as well as the Customs' steam-launch, and that of the Surrey Dock Company. The Town Pier and the Terrace Pier were damaged. The swell of the tide was so great when the wind was at its highest that a large portion of the garden frontage of the Clarendon Hotel, with the trees and fences, was washed away. Mr. Neale, the proprietor, loses heavily, and his case is that of hundreds of others occupying exposed sites on the same side of the river, whose losses, in the form of landing-stages, embankments, boats, boat-houses, summer-houses, conservatories, trees, fences, and other descriptions of property, will make a total extremely great. There were a few collisions in the river, but the early suspension of traffic reduced the damages under this head. The movement of large vessels would have been unsafe to the last degree. It was deemed necessary to stop traffic across the stream. The Tilbury steamers ceased running at ten o'clock, and from that time communication with the opposite shore was practically at an end.

THE ICE AND SKATING.

Ice, in large quantities, has not unfrequently been seen on the Thames in London during winters of ordinary severity; but the intense frost which set in last week froze the water within a couple of days to an extent that rendered navigation difficult, and before the close of the week locomotion by water was impossible, so rapidly did the floes accumulate. From Westminster Bridge, as far as the tidal action reaches, the Thames has been almost covered with ice, gradually blocking the narrow arches of Vauxhall, Battersea, and Putney bridges, and threatening in some cases to stop the tide way. On Monday week, at the flood tide, the river at Chiswick was completely covered from the Middlesex to the Surrey shore' and although a similar occurrence had taken place in the two past winters, the rapidity with which the ice had accumulated was remarkable.

Covered in many parts with about two feet and a half of snow, the metropolitan parks were comparatively deserted on the day of the great storm, but there were enthusiastic skaters who braved the elements in Hyde Park, to enjoy their favourite sport. It was freezing more or less all the day. Skaters slid along before the wind without any personal exertion, but to get back to their starting-point was a feat of no little difficulty. Several men used pieces of canvas as sails, and these enabled them to scud rapidly before the wind. The remarks respecting the Serpentine apply to the Long Water, Kensington Gardens, except that the latter is much more protected from the wind, and of this many ladies took advantage, and skated in the midst of the snowstorm. The Round Pond, which, though close to Kensington Palace, is in a very bleak position—made more so by the wholesale cutting down of old trees—was little used by the public. On all these waters the icemen of the Royal Humane Society and the police-constables suffered much from the cold winds and the pelting snow. In St. James's Park, also, the men employed to clear away the snow from the ice of the ornamental water sometimes found themselves, with their barrows and other appliances, fairly blown away. Nevertheless, a great deal of good skating was enjoyed by Londoners, over these and other suitable pieces of water, throughout the past week. The scene at night on the Serpentine, with "Follow My Leader" by torchlight, was repeated with complete success, and is the present subject of one of our Illustrations.

On Saturday, the Prince of Wales had a skating party at Virginia Water. His Royal Highness, accompanied by Prince Christian, Count Jaraczewski, and other gentlemen, quitted Cumberland Lodge, Windsor Park, about half-past twelve, the Prince of Wales driving Prince Christian in the Queen's sleigh, which had been sent from Windsor Castle with a pair of horses, while the remainder of the party occupied a light omnibus. With an outrider to pilot the route, the Prince drove at a brisk pace over the crisp snow. Although there was an absence of wind, the atmosphere was very cold. A group of ladies and gentlemen had assembled at Black Nest-gate, near the end of Virginia Water, where the party stopped, the Prince of Wales and Prince Christian, with the visitors, walking at once to the lake, the ice upon which was mostly hidden by deep snow. A broad, winding rink, extending nearly a mile in length, from Black Nest to the Wheatsheaf Hotel, had been cleared for skating by a party of labourers. A few rough wooden forms and some Windsor chairs were all the preparations that had been made for the Prince's party, which now included Sir Reginald Cathcart, Count Jaraczewski, Colonel Teesdale, Lord and Lady Coke, Lord and Lady Claud Hamilton, Mr. and Lady Hilda Higgins, Mrs. F. Sloane Stanley, Mr. C. Hall, and Colonel Stanley Clarke. It was nearly one o'clock when his Royal Highness reached Virginia Water. Throwing rugs and overcoats upon the forms and chairs, the Prince and the ladies and gentlemen with him availed themselves of the services of the labourers at hand, who adjusted their skates, and in a few moments his Royal Highness and the rest of the company were gliding swiftly backwards and forwards upon the ice. Occasionally the Prince and the gentlemen took out the ladies, whose evolutions were watched with much interest. Some Eton masters and students and several visitors mingled for a time with the skaters, but gradually the rink was cleared, and left to the enjoyment of the Prince and his friends. Then a game of hockey was arranged, in which the ladies took part, four chairs being utilised as goals. In this a great deal of skill was displayed by the skaters, the accidents being few and unimportant, only one lady coming momentarily to grief upon the ice. Hockey was continued till shortly after two o'clock, when the Prince of Wales and the rest of the party drove to Titness Park, and lunched with Sir Reginald and Lady Cathcart. His Royal Highness afterwards returned to Virginia Water, skating and hockey being resumed and continued till evening, when the Prince drove back to Cumberland Lodge.

There was an agreeable public skating party at Twickenham, on the backwater of the Middlesex side by Eelpie Island, on Saturday, and a sheep was roasted whole upon the ice.

At the London Amateur Championship Meeting, on Saturday, Mr. Charles Crute won the gold medal, and the title of Amateur Champion of the London District, Mr. Goodliffe securing the silver medal as second. The distance was a mile on the Elstree Reservoir. The open race was, of course, won by the champion, who failed to win a silver medal offered him to skate the mile, with three turns, in 3 min. 10 sec., only doing 3 min. 17 3-5th sec. Mr. H. Carter got the second prize.

At Birmingham, on Monday last, the National Skating Association brought off a one-mile match. Fourteen of the best Fen skaters, together with two Birmingham men, competed, and in the deciding course G. Fish Smart beat his brother Jarman very easily. The fastest time during the day was made by the champion—3 min. 21 1-5th sec.

At Norwich, on Tuesday, the Association skating-match previously appointed took place; the distance was one mile, with one turn. Fifteen competed. "Fish" Smart again won, beating Harrison very easily. Smart did the fastest time—namely, 3 min. 26 1-5 sec.—in his heat with Bone. Messrs. Stanley and Chamberlin were judges, Dr. Moxon was starter, and Mr. Digby official timekeeper.

Curling, another form of sport on the ice, has not been neglected. On Tuesday the annual match between the Crystal Palace and the London Scottish Clubs was played at Wimbledon, when the former was successful by nine shots. The winning rink, skipped by Mr. M'Culloch, Gatton Park, Reigate, made the highest score and won the medal.

The annual dinner of the Association of Chambers of Commerce of the United Kingdom will be held at the Westminster Palace Hotel next Wednesday, Feb. 2.

In support of an institution for the benefit of the neighbouring colliers, the Duke and Duchess of St. Albans gave last week a concert at Bestwood Hall. Those who took part in it were Lady Agnetta Montagu, Mrs. Montcrieff, Miss Wakefield, the Misses Starey, Mr. Bret-Harte, the Hon. F. Lawless, the Hon. Alec Yorke, Mr. Lionel Benson, Mr. William Fullerton, Mr. Underdown, and Mr. F. Schuster.

MR. LEOPOLD DE ROTHSCHILD'S MARRIAGE.

An impressive and beautiful ceremonial, at which the Prince of Wales was present, marked the celebration, on Wednesday last week, of the wedding between Mr. Leopold de Rothschild and Mdlle. Marie Perugia. It took place at the Central Synagogue, in Great Portland-street, which was thronged with spectators waiting to see the arrival and departure of the wedding party. The foundation-stone of the Synagogue was laid about ten years ago by the late Baron Lionel de Rothschild, the father of the bridegroom. It is a lofty building in Moresque style, and offered a remarkably fine coup d'œil; its walls ornamented in gold and neutral tints, the reading-desk of carved oak, and, farthest east, the rounded sanctuary with a carved oaken cabinet or ark. Here are deposited the scrolls of the Law, before which a red perpetual lamp swings by a brazen chain. Choice flowers decorated the entrance to the Synagogue; and the steps leading up to the ark were lined with palms and ferns, among which were set white azaleas, camellias, arum lilies, and the bright red bracts of Poinsettia pulcherrima. Messrs. Veitch had supplied no one else for a week in order to have flowers for the Rothschild marriage. The area, as well as the galleries, was occupied with ladies in bright costumes. Between the ark and the reading-desk stood the bridal canopy, or chupa, supported by four poles, and it was beneath this that the ceremony was solemnised. It represents the chamber of the bridegroom; and the word chupa, by which it is still known among the modern Jews, is that used by the Psalmist in speaking of the chamber of the bridegroom in the beautiful simile of the Sun, "which is as a bridegroom coming out of his chamber, and rejoiceth as a strong man to run a race." The Talmud mentions a usage of planting at the birth of a child a tree, from which, when the boy grew up and was married, the staves of the chupa were made.

The religious service, upon this occasion, was conducted by the Rev. A. L. Green, assisted by the Rev. S. Lyons, A. Hast, and M. Keizer. The choir, selected from the choirs of the Central, the Great, and the New Synagogue, was conducted by Mr. J. Oppenheimer, choir-master of the Central Synagogue.

The nuptial ceremony began with the ordinary afternoon service, intoned by the Rev. M. Hast, the responses sung by the boyish voices of the choir. The Psalms were chanted in Hebrew; the prayer for the Royal family was said in English. At half-past two the bridal processions entered the synagogue, the bride's advancing by the right aisle, the bridegroom's by the left. As the bride passed into the Synagogue the ladies in the front rows cast in front of her basketfuls of white flowers. The bride and bridegroom advanced to the canopy, the bride still on the bridegroom's right.

Mdlle. Perugia wore white satin trimmed with Mechlin lace, which made a charming nœud of lace in front. The train was of white satin and Mechlin point. Her veil was of white tulle, her bouquet small, and of rare white flowers. Her dress in front was set with little sprigs of orange-blossoms, sent from the south of France; and she wore the same sweet-scented blossom in her hair. Although the parure of jewels for the hair from the bridegroom was most admired among the presents of the bride, Mdlle. Perugia wore no jewels in her hair or in her dress, and the whole wedding party was conspicuous by the absence of jewellery. The two young daughters of Sir Charles Forbes stood behind the bride; the two other bridesmaids, Mdlle. Beatrice de Rothschild and Miss Luna Sassoon, placed themselves on the right. Their dresses were of the lightest shade of delicate blue, which sometimes looked a pale green by the artificial light. Their bouquets were of white azaleas and eucharis with red roses; they wore the bracelets given by the bridegroom, which are separately described. Two of the bridesmaids had white skirts trimmed with lace, the others were all in blue. They wore pretty hats of the Gainsborough type. The bridegroom had on his shoulders a silken scarf, in the border of which was woven a thread of blue. It was marked in his initials in gold, united by a true lover's knot, and had been presented to him by his bride. This Talith, or scarf of prayer, is always given by the bride to her bridegroom, and is accompanied, among the most orthodox, by the gift of a shroud, to serve the same purpose of a solemn reminder as the coffin at the Egyptian feast.

The bridegroom's "best man" was his only unmarried brother, Mr. Alfred de Rothschild. Baron Arthur and Baron E. de Rothschild, M. Perugia, and M. Lambert placed themselves at the four corners of the canopy. Madame Perugia, the bride's mother, and M. G. Landauer, of Trieste, were supporters of the bride; and the supporters of the bridegroom were Baroness Alphonse and Sir N. M. de Rothschild, M.P.

The Prince of Wales, who was attended by Colonel Teesdale, occupied a seat just abreast of the canopy on the side of the bride and her supporters, sitting between Lord Rosebery and Lady de Rothschild, and opposite Mr. Arthur Sassoon and Mrs. Arthur Sassoon (sister of the bride).

The Rev. A. L. Green, the celebrant of the marriage, took up his position beneath the canopy, and as the bridal processions advanced the choir burst out into "Blessed is he who cometh in the name of the Lord; we bless you from the house of the Lord."

Then began the first part of the marriage ceremony, which represents the ancient betrothal. An initiatory prayer was said by the Rev. S. Lyons, after which the Rev. A. L. Green addressed in English the two who had come before him to be united, his words taking the form of a prayer. The minister gave the bridegroom and then the bride the wine of the sanctification to drink, and the choir sang, invoking blessings on the fortunate pair, and praising God "who sanctifieth his people Israel, by the ceremony of the nuptial canopy and the rite of wedlock." The bridegroom placed the ring upon his bride's finger, and said, in a loud voice, in Hebrew and English, "Behold, thou art consecrated to me with this ring, according to the law of Moses and Israel."

Then the second part of the ceremony, the formal marriage began. The marriage contract was read in Chaldaic, and the following abstract in English of the contract was also recited by Mr. Green:—

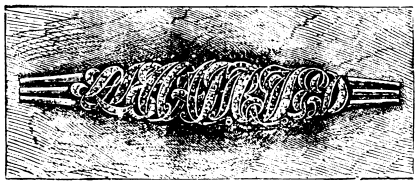
"On the fourth day of the week, the 19th day of the month Shevat, in the year 5641, A.M., corresponding to the 19th of January, 1881, the holy covenant of marriage was entered into, in London, between the bridegroom, Leopold de Rothschild, and his bride, Marie Perugia. The said bridegroom made the following declaration to his bride:—'Be thou my wife according to the law of Moses and Israel. I faithfully promise that I will be a true husband unto thee. I will honour and cherish thee; I will work for thee; I will protect and support thee, and will provide all that is necessary for thy due sustenance, even as it becometh a Jewish husband to do. I also take upon myself all such further obligations for thy maintenance, during thy life-time, as are prescribed by our religious statute.' And the said bride has lighted her troth unto him, in affection and in sincerity, and has thus taken upon herself the fulfilment of all the duties incumbent upon a Jewish wife. This covenant of marriage was duly executed and witnessed this day, according to the usage of Israel."

The seven blessings were said, and a prayer was offered up that in Jerusalem and in the cities of Judah there might speedily be heard again "the voice of joy and the voice of song; the voice of the bridegroom and of the bride."

And now the priest placed upon the floor a wine-glass, which the bridegroom, setting his heel firmly upon it, splintered into fragments. Different interpretations of this symbolical act have been suggested by learned men. The Hallelujah Chorus was sung, a little altered by Mr. Oppenheimer, by whom the music throughout was tastefully arranged (Mr. Ascher playing the harmonium), and the ceremony was over.

The bride and bridegroom ascended the steps of the reading-desk to sign the marriage register, the witnesses to which were the Prince of Wales and Baron Alphonse de Rothschild. Before leaving the temple, the Prince of Wales inspected the scrolls of the law, manuscripts written on parchment with the greatest care, every letter being counted according to the Masoretic rules, which have kept the text of the Pentateuch uncorrupted for so many centuries. The scrolls are covered in mantles of costly material (a mantle presented by the Baroness de Rothschild, on the opening of the synagogue, in 1870, is one of its most precious possessions), and on the horns by which they opened are placed jewelled and ivory reading-pointers and large silver ornaments with little bells, which tinkle as the scrolls are carried out to be read or held up to the congregation while the priest proclaims that this is the authentic Law.

The wedding breakfast was given at 2, Albert-gate, the residence of Mr. Arthur Sassoon, brother-in-law of the bride. Music played as the guests assembled, and here again were charming decorations of exotic flowers. The bride-cake weighed 180 lbs., and was adorned with orange-blossoms and maidenhair ferns. The Prince of Wales, rising amid applause, gave "The Health of the Bride and Bridegroom" in a few cordial and friendly words. Mr. Leopold de Rothschild replied, and began by thanking, with much emotion, his Royal Highness for his kindness and condescension. Mr. de Rothschild added:—"I believe it is unusual to talk of oneself. But on an occasion like this one may be permitted to say a few words. I have enjoyed till now a happy life. I have had the kindest of fathers, the best of mothers, the dearest brothers and sisters. I will only hope that I shall make my dear wife as happy as I have been. I am sure, Sir, you will excuse me if I do not say more. Every word I have said was from my heart."



THE BRIDESMAIDS' BRACELET.

The bride-cake having been duly cut and sent round, Lord Beaconsfield proposed the health of the Prince of Wales, and his Royal Highness briefly returned thanks, speaking of his own long acquaintance with the Rothschild family, and his personal regard for them.

After a brief interval, the bride and bridegroom reappeared, the bride in a travelling dress of blue velvet and sleeves in blue velvet with white flowers, and with hat and muff to match. They entered their carriage amid a shower of rice, slippers, and good wishes. The honeymoon is passed at Ascot, where they will be near enough to participate in the festivities celebrated by Sir Nathaniel de Rothschild on his eldest son's attainment of his religious majority (thirteen years).

Among those present at the ceremony were the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador, the Brazilian Chargé-d'Affaires, M. Hengelmüller, the Marquis de Sauturce, Countess Howe, Countess Granville, Count Jaraczewski, Viscount Newport, M.P., Lord Dorchester, Lord Houghton, Lady Campbell, Lord Rowton, the Ladies Howard, Baron Ferdinand de Rothschild, Baron James de Rothschild, Lady Jessel, the Hon. Henry and Mrs. Bourke, Colonel the Hon. William Carington, M.P., and Mrs. Carington, the Hon. Frederick Cadogan and the Misses Cadogan (2), the Right Hon. Charles Pelham Villiers, M.P., Captain the Hon. A. and Lady Violet Greville, Sir Henry Meysey-Thompson, Sir Rivers Wilson, Sir Henry Wolff, M.P., Sir Charles and the Hon. Lady Du Cane, Sir Barrow Ellis, Sir Charles and Lady Forbes and Miss Forbes, Sir Albert Sassoon, Colonel Mackenzie Fraser, Major-General and Lady Blanche Morris, Colonel Keith Fraser, Major Snell, Captain Candy, Captain and Mrs. Harris, Mr. Percy Mitford, Mr. Alfred Montgomery, Mr. and Mrs. Reuben Sassoon, Mrs. G. Cavendish Bentinck, Mr. Tennant, Mr. Lambert, and Mr. M. A. Goldsmid.

The wedding was celebrated by other festivities in London and Buckinghamshire. The Hon. Robert Grimston presided over one entertainment that evening, and Mr. Louis Davidson at another, held at the Langham and the Criterion respectively. Many telegrams of congratulation came from abroad. Gifts have been made to the poor in London, Trieste, and elsewhere.

THE BRIDESMAIDS' BRACELET.

At the wedding of Mr. Leopold de Rothschild with Mdlle. Marie de Perugia the bridegroom presented each of the bridesmaids, therein named, with a gold portebonheur bracelet, of special and novel design. Its upper or outer part was formed of bands of rubies and diamonds, interlaced with each other; these gems were set in the shape of perforated French ciphers, one set making the name "Marie," and the other making "Leopold." The inside of the bracelet was inscribed with the names of the bride and bridegroom, and the date of the wedding. Mr. Leopold de Rothschild himself designed the bracelets, which were made, with many of the other wedding gifts, by Messrs. London and Ryder, of New Bond-street.

The annual meeting in connection with the London Baptist Association was held on Tuesday evening in the Metropolitan Tabernacle, under the presidency of the Rev. T. V. Tymes, president. The chairman explained the working of the association, and addresses were also given by Dr. A. Landells and the Rev. W. G. Lewis.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

PHENOMENA OF THE ELECTRIC DISCHARGE FROM A VERY POWERFUL BATTERY.

Mr. Warren De La Rue, D.C.L., F.R.S., the honorary secretary, at the opening evening meeting of the season, on the 21st inst., exhibited and commented on some of the principal results of a series of experiments on the electric discharge, in which he had been engaged for the last six years with his friend, Dr. Hugo Müller. The source of electricity was a constant voltaic battery devised by themselves, in principle resembling that of Daniell, except that a solid electrolyte (insoluble in water or in a weak saline solution)—namely, chloride of silver, replaced the soluble sulphate of copper, so that no porous cell was needed. The metallic elements are a zinc rod and silver wire. The cells, 14,400 in number, are grouped in trays, and possess a potential considerably greater than any hitherto united in series. No action takes place till the circuit is closed, and the acting power of one battery has continued six years. To show the enormous power of this battery, Mr. De La Rue, by means of a condenser (equal to 6485 great Leyden jars) accumulated the electricity of 3240 cells, and by the discharge deflagrated 2½ inches of platinum wire one eightieth of an inch thick; the metal being scattered into a dust of metallic globules. He then sent the discharge through some vacuum tubes, and demonstrated that, like a jet of water which is not continuous, but composed of a series of drops, the electric discharge also is intermittent; the molecules of the luminous strata being held together by the balance of electric forces as the globules of water are by cohesive attraction. Photographs were exhibited showing that in the electric arc, at ordinary pressures, there is a resemblance to the discharge in vacuum tubes. A lightning flash a mile long could be produced from 243 batteries (or 3,500,000 cells), such as Mr. De La Rue's. Faraday proved that the quantity of electricity necessary to produce a powerful flash of lightning would result from the decomposition of a single grain of water. To illustrate the lightning discharge, experiments were made with a cascade, formed by a series of condensers and Gaston Planté's rheostat, and a spark an inch long was produced from only 1200 cells. The law of discharge between flat discs, spherical surfaces, and concentric cylinders was considered, and it was proved that air in any degree of attenuation is not a conductor; the discharge is always disruptive. By calculations based on experiments Mr. De La Rue demonstrated that the height of the maximum effect of the aurora borealis was probably about thirty-seven miles, and that at the height of eighty-one miles the light would be considerably less brilliant. He also demonstrated that the discharge from the electric terminals is longer from those of a paraboloid form than from points, and that the nature of the metal makes no difference, aluminium excepted. Photographs of the "streamer discharge," in a variety of beautiful spiral forms, were exhibited. The electric discharge in vacuum tubes, although apparently quite steady, is really pulsating; and the sudden expansion of gas in a bell jar, when connected with the electric battery, is followed by immediate contraction, when the connection is broken. The expansion was attributed to the scattering of the molecules by electrification, and not to heat. The entire change of colour in the strata in vacuum tubes, due to variation in the amount of electric current, was shown—thus, blue was changed to pink. The resemblance of the strata to the records of sound pulsation, and the complete change in the aspect of the strata produced by change in the amount of the current, were commented on, together with various other interesting points. Finally, vacuum tubes were shown with various gases, through which no currents could pass, except on making and breaking contact, in order that the audience might see the strata in all their beauty and witness the changes spoken of.

CONSTITUENTS OF THE BLOOD.

Professor E. A. Schäfer, F.R.S., gave the first of a course of eleven lectures on the blood last Tuesday, the 25th inst. After commenting on the great interest of the subject, and referring to the statements that "the blood is the life" and "blood has life," he considered its condition in the living body as a fluid, and its changes when removed from it. In the fluid state it contains floating particles, which make it opaque, and which, under the microscope, appear like a network of threads. When received into a basin the blood becomes viscous, and gradually solid; and eventually clots are formed. The scarlet colour of blood is due to oxidation; thus, arterial blood is a bright red, from its having recently absorbed oxygen; while venous blood is a dark purple, from its loss of the gas. The Professor showed by experiments that the reaction of blood is alkaline, stating also that its odour differs in different animals, and that its peculiar taste is due to the presence of various salts, including common salt. Blood was shown to be heavier than water, and descriptions were given of methods adopted to separate the red and white corpuscles of the blood from the fluid termed plasma, which contains them; and the further separation of this plasma into the threadlike substance termed fibrin, and the liquid serum. The solidification of serum-albumin by heat was shown, as well as other properties of this interesting substance. The process for obtaining fibrin and serum by whipping blood was described and illustrated, and the changes in the blood by inflammation were described, together with other interesting facts.

PENSIONS FROM THE CIVIL LIST.

On the recommendation of the Prime Minister, the Queen has approved of the following pensions being granted from the Civil List:—

To Mr. Alfred Russell Wallace, £200 a year, in recognition of his eminence as a naturalist.

Mrs. Rodgers, £75 a year, in recognition of the services of her late husband, the Rev. John Rodgers, in the cause of public elementary education.

Lady Duffus Hardy, £55 a year, in addition to the pension of £100 a year granted in 1879, in recognition of the historical, literary, and public services of her late husband, Sir Thomas Duffus Hardy.

Dr. Schmitz, £50 a year, in recognition of his services to classical education and literature.

Mr. Burt, M.P., and Mr. Broadhurst, M.P., were the principal speakers at the annual dinner of the council of the Amalgamated Society of Engineers, held at the Bridge House Hotel last Saturday evening. The latter, with regard to the position of labour in Parliament, said that, although he had always been in favour of the representation of labour in the House of Commons, now that he was a member of the House he was more strongly of the same opinion.

OBITUARY.

THE EARL OF COTTENHAM.

The Right Honourable William John, Third Earl of Cottenham, Viscount Crowhurst, Baron Cottenham, and a Baronet, died on the 20th inst., at his residence, at St. Leonard's-on-Sea. He was born Aug. 15, 1825, the second son of the distinguished Lord Chancellor, Charles Christopher, First Earl of Cottenham, by Caroline Elizabeth, his wife, daughter of Mr. William Wingfield-Baker; and succeeded to the family honours at the decease of his brother, Charles Edward, second Earl, Feb. 18, 1863. He was educated at Eton, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, and was a Magistrate and Deputy-Lieutenant for Surrey. He married, Oct. 11, 1870, Theodosia-Selina, only daughter of Sir Robert Charles Dallas, Bart., and leaves two sons and one daughter. The elder son, Kenelm Charles Edward, Viscount Crowhurst, now fourth Earl of Cottenham, was born May 18, 1874.

LORD CAMOYS.

The Right Hon. Thomas, Lord Camoys, in the Peerage of England, died at the family seat, Stonor Park, near Henley-on-Thames, on the 18th inst. He was born Oct. 22, 1797, the eldest son of Mr. Thomas Stonor, of Stonor, by Catherine, his wife, sister and coheir of Charles Robert Blundell, Esq., of Ince Blundell, in the county of Lancaster; and was summoned to Parliament in the barony of Camoys, Sept. 14, 1839, her Majesty having been pleased to determine the abeyance of that ancient dignity in his favour. Camoys is one of the baronies by writ, which are heritable in the female as well as in the male line, and had been in abeyance from the time of Henry VI. The nobleman whose death we record was for a brief period (until unseated on petition) M.P. for Oxford, and held office for many years as a Lord in Waiting. He retired finally in 1874. He married, July 25, 1821, Frances, daughter of Mr. Peregrine Edward Towneley, of Towneley, Lancashire, and had three sons and nine daughters. Of the former, one only survives, the Hon. and Very Rev. Monsignor Edmund Stonor, Canon of St. John Lateran, at Rome. The title devolves on his Lordship's grandson, Francis-Robert, now Lord Camoys, born Dec. 9, 1856, the eldest son of the late Hon. Francis Stonor (whose death occurred so recently as the 10th of this month), by Eliza, his wife, youngest daughter of the Prime Minister Sir Robert Peel, Bart.

MR. MURRAY-GRAHAM.

John Murray-Graham, of Murrayshall, county Perth, J.P. and D.L., M.A., died suddenly on the 17th inst. He was born Oct. 15, 1809, the eldest son of Mr. Andrew Murray, of Murrayshall, whose grandfather, Patrick Graeme (grandnuncle of the famous Peninsular Commander, Thomas, Lord Lynedoch), married Janet, eldest daughter and heiress of Andrew Murray, of Murrayshall (of the Stormont family). Mr. Murray-Graham having succeeded in 1859, under provisions of Lord Lynedoch's settlement, to a portion of the Balgowan estate, assumed his additional surname. He married, Nov. 22, 1853, Robina, daughter of Mr. Thomas Hamilton, but leaves no issue. He attained distinction by his review of English Literature and by his "Life of Lord Stair."

THE REV. DR. LLOYD.

The Rev. Humphrey Lloyd, D.D., Provost of Trinity College, Dublin, died at the Provost's House on the 17th inst. He was born April 16, 1800, the eldest son of the Rev. Bartholomew Lloyd, D.D. (also Provost from 1831 to 1837), by Eleanor, his wife, daughter of Patrick M'Loughlin, Esq., of Dunshaughlin, and was in direct descent from the Rev. Humphrey Lloyd, who went from Wales to Ireland about the year 1680, and settled at New Ross, in the county of Wexford. He was educated at the celebrated school of the Rev. William White, and at Trinity College, Dublin. In 1819 he obtained a scholarship, and a fellowship in 1824. In 1831 he was Professor of Natural Philosophy; in 1862 Vice-Provost, and Provost in 1867. In 1846 he was elected President of the Royal Irish Academy, and in 1857 was President of the British Association. He published several scientific works, and his labours in the study of the magnetism of the earth, of meteorology, and of optics, contributed largely to the present advanced position of those sciences. The Provost married, July 14, 1840, Dorothea, daughter of the Rev. James Bulwer, Rector of Hungworth, Norfolk, but leaves no issue.

We have also to record the deaths of—

Marcia, Lady Ouseley, widow of Sir William Gore Ousely, formerly H.M. Minister Plenipotentiary in Central America, and daughter of Governor Van Ness, of Vermont, on the 18th inst., at The Lawn, near Ealing.

Mr. Edward Askew Sothern, the popular actor, so celebrated for his famous character, Lord Dundreary, on the 20th inst., at his residence, 1, Vere-street, Cavendish-square. He was born at Liverpool, April 1, 1830.

Catherine Mary, Lady Melvill, wife of Major-General Sir Peter Melvill Melvill, K.C.B., and daughter of the late John Robertson, Esq., of Tweedmouth, Berwick-on-Tweed, on the 11th inst., aged sixty-six, at Grove Hill, the residence of her sister-in-law, Mrs. Kemble.

Thomas Molyneux-Seel, Esq., of Huyton Hey, in the county of Lancaster, J.P. and D.L., late Major 2nd Royal Lancashire Militia, on the 16th inst., at his seat near Liverpool, in his eighty-ninth year. He was eldest son of Mr. Thomas Unsworth, of Maghall Hall, in the county of Lancaster, by Frances, his wife, eldest daughter and coheir of Mr. Thomas Seel, of New Hall, and assumed by Royal license, July 12, 1815, the surnames and arms of Molyneux-Seel, in compliance with the will of his maternal grandfather. Mr. H. H. Molyneux-Seel, Major Molyneux-Seel's youngest son, is Richmond Herald.

A mine at Redruth, Cornwall, was on the 20th flooded, and eight persons were drowned.

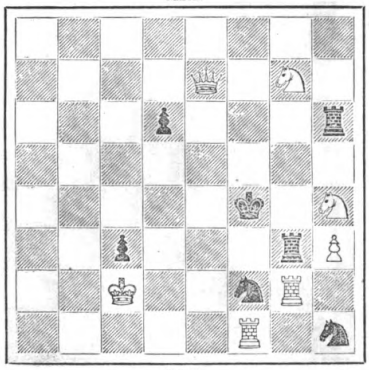
PROBLEM No. 1928.

By JAMES PIERCE, M.A.

BLACK.



WHITE.

White to play, and mate in two moves.

It is only a few months since we announced the commencement of the Match by telegraph between Liverpool and Calcutta, and already one of the two games has been scored by the Liverpudlians. When a game of chess in which each side is given forty-eight hours for the consideration of every move is brought to an end on the sixteenth move, it might reasonably be inferred either that the defeated players have committed some gross blunder or that they are very much less skilful than their adversaries. It will be seen from the Game appended that Calcutta does not owe its defeat to any misadventure of an alarming kind, and it would obviously be unfair to pronounce judgment upon the skill of its representatives upon the evidence of a solitary game. So we shall content ourselves with noting that they wasted much valuable time in the acquisition of a Pawn, and seem throughout to have been intent upon their own designs, without giving much thought to the schemes of their adversaries. For the proposed continuation supplementary to the game we are indebted to Mr. Wright, the honorary secretary of the Liverpool Chess Club.

(Irregular Opening.)

| WHITE (Liverpool). | BLACK (Calcutta). |
|---|---|
| 1. P to Q B 4th | P to K 3rd |
| 2. P to K 3rd | P to Q B 4th |
| 3. P to Q Kt 3rd | P to Q 4th |
| 4. Kt to K B 3rd | P to Q 5th |
| 5. B to Kt 2nd | Kt to Q B 3rd |
| 6. P to Q Kt 4th | Q P takes P |

Although this line of play gains a Pawn, it results in immediate advantage of position to Liverpool.

|---|---|
| 7. B P takes P | Kt takes P |
| 8. P to Q 4th | Kt to K B 3rd |
| 9. P to Q R 3rd | Kt to R 3rd |
| 10. B to Q 3rd | P to Q Kt 3rd |
| 11. Castles | P takes P |
| 12. P takes P | B to Kt 2nd |
| 13. Kt to Q B 3rd | Kt to B 2nd |
| 14. B to B 2nd | Kt to Q 2nd |
| 15. B to R 4th | P to K B 3rd |
| 16. Kt to K 5th | |

At this point, Calcutta resigned, discerning, no doubt, that their game was past surgery. The following continuation was contemplated by the Liverpool players if Calcutta had taken the Knight.

| WHITE (Liverpool). | BLACK (Calcutta). |
|---|---|
| Suppose— | |
| 17. | P takes Kt |
| 17. Q to R 5th (ch) | P to Kt 3rd |
| 18. Q takes B P | P to Q Kt 4th (best) |
| 19. Kt takes P | Kt takes Q |
| 20. Kt to Q 6th (double ch) | K to K 2nd |
| 21. P takes Kt | |

Black has now the choice of three moves to avert the threatened mate—viz., Q to Q B sq; Q takes Kt and Q to K square. In the first place—

|---|---|
| 21. | Q to Q B sq |
| 22. R to B 7th (ch) | R to Q sq |
| 23. R to Q sq | B to Q 4th |
| 24. Kt takes Q | K takes Kt, |

White has a won game.

In the second place—

|---|---|
| 21. | Q takes Kt |
| 22. P takes Q (ch) | K takes P |
| 23. K R to Q sq (ch) | K to Q B 4th, |

White wins easily.

In the third place—

|---|---|
| 21. | Q to K sq |
| 22. B takes Q | Kt takes B (best) |
| 23. R to B 7th (ch) | K to Q sq |
| 24. Kt takes B (ch) | K to Q sq |
| 25. Q R to Q sq, | |

and White mates in a few moves.

Black mates in two moves.

A match between the Alexandra and the North London Chess Clubs was played on the 18th inst., eight players on each side. The North London won with a score of five games to the adversaries' three.

The French National Tournament for two prizes, presented by M. Grévy, the President of the Republic, was brought to a conclusion last week, and resulted in M. Rosenthal securing the first place and M. Clere the second. M. A. de Rivière, who emerged from his retirement to enter this competition, followed the prizeholders in the score list.

The arrivals of live stock landed at Liverpool from the United States and Canada last week show a large increase on the previous week; and as regards fresh meat there was a slight decrease, but quite up to the average of recent weeks.

The Lord Mayor presided at the Triennial Festival of the Royal General Dispensary, celebrated by a dinner last week at the Albion Tavern. Mr. J. Faulkner, the hon. secretary, announced subscriptions amounting to £300. The subscriptions included twenty guineas from the Clothworkers' Company, ten guineas from the Merchant Taylors' Company, ten guineas from Messrs. Baring Brothers and Co., and five guineas each from Mr. Sheriff Fowler, M.P., Mr. Sheriff Waterlow, and Canon Liddon.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated July 21, 1880) of Mr. James Henry Deakin, late of Moseley Park, Cheadle, Chester, who died on Sept. 23 last, has been proved at the Chester district registry by Mrs. Martha Deakin, the widow, James Henry Deakin, John Deakin, and Edward Deakin, the sons, and Samuel Goodwin, the executors, the personal estate, including leaseholds, being sworn under £250,000. The testator leaves to his wife an immediate legacy of £500 and the wines and consumable stores at his residence, and, during life or widowhood, the use of his household furniture, plate, effects, horses and carriage, such pictures as she shall select, his residence Moseley Hall, and £1000 per annum; upon trust for his daughter, Ethel Newton Deakin, £40,000; to his executor, Mr. Goodwin, £300 per annum during the continuance of the trust; and an annuity to his brother John. Provision is made for the carrying on of his businesses of a spirit dealer and brewer by some of his sons for fifteen years after his decease for the benefit of his estate; and the residue of his real and personal property he gives to his six sons, James Henry, John, Edward, George William, Charles Frederick, and Ernest Newton. The deceased was Hon. Colonel of the 33rd Lancashire Rifle Volunteers and a magistrate for the counties palatine of Chester and Lancaster. He was returned to Parliament in 1874 for Launceston, in the Conservative interest, but was unseated on petition, and was succeeded in the representation by his eldest son.

The will (dated Oct. 27, 1880) of Mr. Isaac Horton, late of Edgbaston, Warwickshire, provision merchant, who died on Nov. 15 last, was proved on the 13th ult. at the Birmingham district registry by William Horton, Joseph Horton, and Benjamin Horton, the sons, the executors, the personal estate, including leaseholds, being sworn under £200,000. The testator bequeaths to his wife, Mrs. Sarah Horton, the wines, consumable stores, furniture, plate, pictures, effects, horses and carriages at his residence, and £250, and for life, or widowhood, an annuity of £1000; upon trust for each of his daughters, £10,000; and for his son John and his children, £5000. The residue of his real and personal estate he leaves to all his sons (except John) in equal shares.

The will (dated Nov. 13, 1880) of Mr. Henry Bateman, late of No. 13, Canonbury-lane, Islington, who died on Nov. 21 last, was proved on the 21st ult. by Mrs. Elizabeth Helen Bateman, the widow, and Alfred George Bateman, the son, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £50,000. The testator bequeaths £100 each to his daughter, Mrs. Emily Jane Macpherson, and his son, Henry William Bateman; and he does not further provide for them, as they are already amply provided for by settlement; a communion service and box to the New Church Society, Devonshire-street, Islington; and his household furniture and effects to his wife. The residue of his real and personal estate is to be held upon trust for his wife for life or widowhood, and then for all his children by her.

The will (dated July 27, 1878) with a codicil (dated June 12, 1879) of Mr. John Simmonds, late of Godalming, Surrey, who died on Sept. 5 last, was proved on the 13th ult. by John Whately Simmonds, the son, Frederick Boyce Morton, the nephew, and Hugh Framingham Day, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £45,000. The testator bequeaths to his wife, Mrs. Hannah Maria Simmonds, £300; and legacies to his executors and servants; upon trust for his daughters, Maria and Mrs. Anne Mary Day, £5000, and £5000 each additional on the death or second marriage of his wife; upon trust for his son-in-law, the Rev. Edward Bartram, and his children, £5000; and a further £5000 on the death or second marriage of his wife; to his son Arthur, £5000, and £10,000 on the death or second marriage of his wife; and he leaves to his son, John Whately, his lord-ship or manor of Pulborough, and land and hereditaments at Rudgwick, charged with £500 per annum to his wife for life. The residue of his property is left upon trust for his wife for life or widowhood, and then for his son, John Whately.

The will (dated June 16, 1876) of Major-General Charles James Dalton, Colonel Commandment of Royal Artillery, who died on Nov. 7 last at Percy House, Twickenham Park, was proved on the 10th ult. by James Charles Cleghorn and William Charles Trevor, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £35,000. The testator leaves a legacy to his daughter, Maria, also legacies to relatives and friends, and the residue of his property to his three children, James Cecil, Charles, and Maria in equal shares.

The will (dated May 16, 1863) of Mr. John Gardiner, formerly of Southampton-street, Hanover-square, wine merchant, but late of No. 8, Cambridge-gardens, Richmond, who died on Nov. 11 last, was proved on the 11th ult. by William Dundas Gardiner, the acting executor, the personal estate being sworn under £35,000. The testator gives to his wife, Mrs. Anna Curtis Gardiner, his household furniture and effects; to his brother Charles William, £500; to his sister Emma, £200; to his executor, nineteen guineas; and the residue of his property upon trust for his wife for life or widowhood, and then for all his children. In default of children, the residue is to go to his next of kin.

The will (dated Aug. 12, 1875) of the Rev. John Power, D.D., Master of Pembroke College, Cambridge, who died on Nov. 18 last, was proved on the 11th inst. by William Power and Robert Power, the brothers, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £8,000. The testator bequeaths to his niece and goddaughter, Sarah Ellen Fowler, £100; and the residue of his estate between his said brothers and his sisters, Mrs. Fanny Fowler and Miss Ellen Power.

The will (dated Nov. 14, 1861) with a codicil (dated Nov. 6, 1880) of Miss Elizabeth Strean Coulson, formerly of Park-street, Grosvenor-square, but late of the Hotel de Rivoli, Paris, who died on Nov. 9 last, was proved in London on the 21st ult. by William Day and James Ward, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £6000. The testatrix desires to be buried in the Cemetery of Père Lachaise with her parents, and directs her executors to expend £4000 in the erection of a handsome marble monument over their remains. She bequeaths £600 to the Society for the Protection of Animals, Paris; £800 to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, London; and an annuity for taking care of her two favourite horses (which are not to be used after her decease), and her two pet dogs. Looking at the date of the will in which this latter bequest occurs, it is probable that it has lapsed, as, doubtless, the animals named are long since dead. There are other legacies, and the residue of her real and personal estate she leaves upon trust to found an Academy of Music in Dublin, where the sons and daughters of respectable Irish parents possessing natural musical talent may be taught instrumental music, particularly the pianoforte.

[With reference to the will of Mr. J. F. Franks, reported last week, we understand that the Misterton Hall Estate, in which the deceased had only a life interest, has devolved, under the will of his father, the late Mr. Jacob Henry Franks, to Mr. Henry Franks Waring, the last-named testator's grandson.]

THE RISING IN THE TRANSVAAL.

TO

OFFICERS,

NON-COMMISSIONED and OTHERS,

VISITING OR RESIDING IN HOT CLIMATES.

From the "European Mail" of Nov. 5, 1880.

"Of all the trials that man almost recklessly places upon his constitution, none perhaps is so severe and pregnant with danger as that which accompanies a sudden and extreme change from a hot to a mild and cool climate, or in the reverse direction. At such times it is of the most vital importance that the body should be kept cool, and free from the most minute germs of disease. To effect this object, the judicious use of a saline is unquestionably the best safeguard that can be called into requisition, and of such preparations ENO'S FRUIT SALT may be said to be one of the best-conceived compounds. To residents in tropical climates the use of a medicinal comfort of this kind is indispensable, while its value in preventing prickly heat, boils, and whitlows is simply incalculable.

"Whatever may be the climatic conditions, the human body stands at all times, and under all circumstances, in need of some agent that will as thoroughly disinfect all its pores and arteries against the liability to epidemic diseases as the disinfectants of sanitation purge the sewers of a populous town. At the same time, such are the special therapeutical properties of the FRUIT SALT that a tone is given to the system, the strength is fortified, and the spirits exhilarated.

"With the temperature upwards of 100 deg. in the shade, and the system consequently unstrung through fatiguing occupation, exercise, or study, a saline of the character like that prepared by Mr. Eno is a boon the value of which is scarcely to be estimated by those who have never lived under similar climatic conditions. In cases where the liability to attack from jungle, marsh, and yellow fever exists to an alarming degree, the daily use of the FRUIT SALT will be found a thoroughly effective preventive.

"Speaking more generally, it may be said that the use of the preparation has a marked effect in improving the general health of persons of scorbutic habit, as well as of those who are liable to epileptic affections. In the latter case attacks may be warded off by the patient taking a full dose of the saline in a tumbler of cold water immediately upon feeling unwell, while persons suffering from nervous and dyspeptic headaches should take a spoonful in about half the quantity of water. Mention has been made of the mode of applying the remedy prepared by Mr. Eno for use in regard to these two classes of disorders with the view of showing the extreme simplicity of the mode of action, no less than that of the agent employed.

"In cases of irritability of the stomach, nausea, vomiting, sea-sickness, rheumatism, gout, and many other of the ills which human flesh is heir to, ENO'S FRUIT SALT not only claims, but has been proved again and again to possess remedial properties of a marvellously high order, and no household that wisely consults the comfort and safety of its members—whether located under the sun of England or India, or Southern Africa, the West Indies, or Australasia—will neglect to provide itself with a safeguard to health at once so pure, simple, and effective as the preparation which has caused the patentee's name to be a household word from one end of the earth to the other."

SUCCESS IN LIFE.

"A new invention is brought before the public and commands success. A score of abominable imitations are immediately introduced by the unscrupulous, who, in copying the original closely enough to deceive the public, and yet not so exactly as to infringe legal rights, exercise an ingenuity that, employed in an original channel, could not fail to secure reputation and profit."—Adams.

FLORIMEL OF PALM.

A white and delicate hand is the first attribute of beauty and cvvilisation. "The hand," says Sir Charles Bell in the "Bridgewater Treatise," "distinguishes man from the brute; be careful of it, for in polite society it is an index not only of the body but of the mind."

The Florimel of Palm being rubbed over the skin is to be removed with a little water, then dried with a soft towel. Once using will convince the most sceptical that, if daily applied, too much cannot be said in favour of Florimel of Palm for rendering the skin or hands white, delicate, soft, and fair.

Sold in Jars, 3s. 6d. each.

PIESSE and LUBIN, 2, New Bond-street, London.
May be obtained of any Chemist or Perfumer in the world.

TURKISH PASTILS.

"Through all my travels few things astonished me more than seeing the beauties of the harem smoking Narghiles at Stamboul. After smoking a sweet aromatic lozenge or pastil is used by them, which is said to impart an odour of flowers to the breath. I have never seen these breath lozenges but once in Europe, and that was at PIESSE and LUBIN'S shop in Bond-street."—Lady W. Montagu.

In Boxes, 2s.; by post, 2s. 2d.

SWEET SACHETS.

PIESSE and LUBIN compose every variety of Sachet Powder the same colours as their many perfumes for the handkerchief. The red in a drawer, or travelling-bag, they impart a grateful and piquant perfume without being too piquante. Piesse and Lubin also have on demand, Dried Odorous Flowers, spices, and Odoriferous Gums. Per ounce, 1s. 6d.; per lb., 21s.
2, NEW BOND-STREET, LONDON.

THE SKIN.—The glory of woman, the pride of man. It contains the delicate lines of beauty and constitutes all that we term "Loveliness"—yet how many thousands have their skins tabooed by the use of the irritant soaps. Carbolic Coal Tar, Glycerine, and the coarse coloured soaps, caustic with alkali and made of putrid fats. The more delicate the skin the quicker its ruin. The ALBION MILK AND SULPHUR SOAP is the purest, the whitest, and most purifying of all soaps by its purifying action taking away and preventing all pimples, blotches, and roughness. It is recommended by the entire Medical Profession as the most elegant preparation for the skin that is known. Hyrtl Chemists, in London, and in THE ALBION SANATORY SOAP COMPANY, 532, Oxford-street, London.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1881.

The repulse of Sir George Colley at Laing's Neck, on the Transvaal Frontier, the lamentable loss of life which occurred there and the possible danger to which his small force, although intrenched and defended by artillery, is exposed, have raised in this country some questions of deep interest, to which, at the beginning of the week, Mr. Childers, the War Secretary, gave, on the part of the Government, as satisfactory a reply as can be looked for at present. Before, however, adverting to the political problems arising out of the contest, it is certainly due to the Authorities at the War Office to recognise with warm approval the promptitude with which they have taken steps to give ample efficiency to the British military forces in that part of South Africa. The struggle between the Transvaal Boers and the Queen's Government is, at best, a wretched business. The annexation which has proved the occasion of it has been found to have been brought about by means which reflect no credit upon our South African policy. Sir Theophilus Shepstone, carrying out the intentions of Lord Carnarvon in a precipitate and imperious spirit, fell into a blunder which he should vigilantly have guarded against, and that blunder has since been persistently upheld. It is quite clear now that the Dutch population of the Transvaal never did assent to the transfer of their allegiance from the Republic under which they lived to the Government of her Majesty. It is equally clear that they are passionately attached to their national independence, and that they have with them the sympathy of almost all Dutch-speaking people in the Colony, as well as out of it. Their strength has been underrated; their cohesiveness has been taken no account of. Their declarations both of sentiment and of determination have been met by overweening incredulity, and now we are reaping the harvest of folly which, some time since, we sowed for ourselves. We cannot decently retreat from our false position, and we cannot go forward without further tarnishing the fair name and fame of the United Kingdom. Under such circumstances, it became a very important question whether, in the course of re-establishing the position we had lost, we were bound to treat the Boers as rebels, or as belligerents entitled to the courtesies and usages of war. We are glad to find that the Cabinet have, in substance, adopted the latter alternative. Sir George Colley, from the beginning of his advance, has followed the example of the Boers, who have released most of the prisoners taken by them, and have acted with courtesy and humanity in the matter of our wounded.

What we are to do with the Transvaal when we have again placed it (as there is no doubt we shall shortly do) under the restraint of conquest, must be left for consideration when the time shall have arrived that our policy will be the object of our own free choice. This country, we believe, takes no interest in the perpetuation of a connection between itself and what was formerly the "South African Republic." There are no ties of national honour needing to be severed in order to the practical renunciation of a mistaken method for the pacification of our Colonial Dominions. It is quite possible to make arrangements with the Boers which will guarantee the proper treatment of the Native populations, and the quiet of contiguous colonies, without refusing the restitution of national independence to the Boers. Indeed, it has been intimated, upon what seems to be sufficient authority, that they are quite ready, on the assumption that their independence will be restored, to agree to any reasonable modus vivendi we can propose to them for the purpose of ensuring the practical advantages we sought to gain, whether for ourselves or for others, for commerce or for the protection of natives, by merging the authority of the Republic in that of her Most Gracious Majesty. The time has not arrived, although we trust it is not very remote, when the settlement of the South African problem upon an equitable and durable basis can be effected. Meanwhile, however, public opinion at home is but little inclined to sanction high-handed proceedings, in the conduct of a dispute which, even if it can be rationally accounted for, must be unequivocally condemned.

There is a continuance, we may almost say an increase, of embarrassment in South-Eastern Europe. Mr. Goschen goes back to Constantinople to resume the mission with which he was originally intrusted. The Porte has not come to the end of its dilatory and evasive tactics. Her Majesty's Government, we are told by the Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, in reply to a question regarding the relations of Turkey and Greece, "are not engaged on any isolated action, and they trust that the negotiations at present going on may lead to such united action being taken by the Powers as will bring about a peaceable solution of the Frontier question." That such may be the case is probably the wish of nineteen twentieths of the educated people in Europe. But experience does not lend much strength to the hope entertained by her Majesty's Government. Neither Turkey nor Greece exhibits a temper favourable to any permanent compromise of their claims. The Ottoman Empire, financially at least, is in extremis, and Greece has reached a point from which it is more difficult to go back towards prudence than to go forward to ruin. They resemble ships at sea which are swayed hither and thither by a resistless current, which can be steered by no rudder, and which are in visible danger of coming into collision one with one another. What the upshot will be cannot be foreseen. Turkey has reason to dread insurrection in the European Provinces yet remaining to her. Greece is not unnaturally impatient to make some use of the army she has raised and equipped. The Concert of Powers remains unbroken, but seems to be so weakly held together as to be incapable of any direct action one way or another. It is unsafe, therefore, to assume that war on the Eastern Question is impossible. But it would be so utterly contrary to the interests and policy of all the great Powers at the present time that some way will probably be found of preventing a conflagration which, once kindled, would probably involve the ruin of more than one great European State.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

The annual soirée and distribution of prizes of No. 1 (Chelsea) company of the South Middlesex took place on Thursday week at the Vestry-Hall, King's-road Chelsea, when a large and fashionable assembly were present. After a few remarks as to the satisfactory state of the company from Captain Bird, the Countess of Cadogan presented the prizes to the successful competitors. After the ceremony Sir Charles Dilke and the Earl of Cadogan made short speeches.

The winter inspection and presentation of prizes of the London Scottish corps were made last Saturday evening in Westminster Hall by General Sir Frederick Roberts. The muster amounted to nearly 500, the effective strength of the regiment at the end of 1880 being 685. The presentations included Lord Elcho's Challenge Cup, value £100, D company being the winner; Lady Elcho's Challenge Cup, value £50, gained by Private G. Wright, Lieut.-Colonel Lumsden's Challenge Cup, value £100, the winning team belonging to D company; and the Matheson Challenge Cup, value 50 guineas, won by Private G. Wright. The commanding officer (Lieut.-Colonel Lumsden) was in command, the honorary Colonel, Lord Elcho, M.P., being present, and most of the officers on duty. The public attendance included a large number of ladies. After the inspection Colonel Lumsden congratulated the regiment on the presence of such a distinguished general officer, which he attributed to Sir Frederick's "fancy for Highlanders." The ceremony of actually handing the prizes to the winners was performed by Mrs. Lumsden, Sir F. Roberts standing during its progress on her right. The gallant General, who was received with hearty cheers, addressing the regiment, said it had always been a great pleasure to him to be associated in any way with the Volunteers, or to assist in the smallest degree in the volunteer movement. He could not, he said, pay the London Scottish a greater compliment than to tell them that from their well set up and soldier-like appearance he considered that they were well worthy of being associated even with those two grand Scotch regiments, the 72nd and 92nd, which for nearly two years he had had the honour to have under his command.

Private Salter and Lieut.-Colonel Farrell were the winners of the winter series of Subscription Prizes competed for by members of the 4th Kent Rifles Regimental Club, at Plumstead, on the 29th ult.; conditions same as 1st Stage Queen's, 1880, but with Snider rifles.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

On Thursday afternoon, the twenty-seventh ultimo, being the first day of the beneficent Thaw, I sped on a (to me) very agreeable errand, to the new, spacious, and handsomely decorated Vestry-Hall in High-street, Kensington. At three o'clock on the afternoon in question was to be held the first annual meeting of the Kyrle Society, with, as president of that Society, his Royal Highness Prince Leopold, K.G., in the chair. H.R.H. Princess Louise, Marchioness of Lorne, who is vice-president of the Kyrle Society, was to accompany her illustrious brother. I felt in the highest of spirits—yes, quite elated—as I was being rapidly driven to Kensington. I think that I could have embraced my cheerful Jehu and shaken hands with the policeman who received me at the door of the Vestry-Hall. How beautifully diminishing were the hillocks of dirty snow, piled up breast-high by a careful municipality; or rather by the parochial bodies tinkering and blundering in the absence of any central municipality at all. How sweet was the look of the streams of mud and slush which made the roadways all but impassable to foot passengers. Ah! happy afternoon! Ah, "Lovely London." "You are to hear something more about "Lovely London" anon. The halcyon time had come, and I rejoiced, "all on account"—not of "Eliza;" I do not know the party—but of the Kyrle Society, and of the blessed Thaw which permitted me to reach the Society's place of meeting.

The Kensington Vestry-Hall was thronged by a brilliant assemblage, in which, I think, ladies predominated. The eloquent and sagacious address of Prince Leopold has been so fully reported in all the newspapers that there is no need for me to say anything more about a speech which so exhaustively explained the meaning and object of the Kyrle Society, than that it was listened to with the greatest attention, and was greeted at its close with the greatest enthusiasm.

It happened, however, that, in addition to Prince Leopold's well-weighed and, in parts, pathetic profusion, some very excellent speeches were delivered by distinguished persons on the platform; but these speeches the gentlemen of the press present only very briefly reported, or failed to report at all. For example, Dr. Allchin, of Charing-cross Hospital, spoke long and graphically on the pleasure which had been derived by hospital patients from the artistic decoration of certain wards under the auspices of the Society. Dr. Allchin incidentally mentioned an absurd objection which had been taken to these embellishments, on the ground that the contemplation of arabesques, and scrolls, and pictured flower-work might distract the minds of cerebrally affected patients and superinduce delirium. In this connection I remember, nearly a score of years ago, the late Sir Charles (then Dr.) Hood, Chief Physician to Bethlehem Hospital, telling me that most pleasantly soothing effects on the minds of his unhappy patients had been produced by the exhibition of the beautiful steel engravings which Mr. Henry Graves, the publisher, of Pall Mall, had generously presented to the Governors to beautify withal the hitherto desolate walls of Bedlam. Thus Mr. Henry Graves, although he knew it not, was unconsciously one of the precursors of the Kyrle Society.

Mr. William Morris also, poet, artist, and arbiter of Art Furniture and Decoration, spoke at length, and with genuine eloquence. "If," said the author of "The Earthly Paradise" in the course of his speech, "it should seem impossible to change this London of the Nineteenth Century into what it was called in the old ballad, 'Lovely London,' it would be only because people would not set themselves to this work with determination."

The Poet was born in Roseate and Golden times, and he is not to be shackled by the fetters of Fact. Respected Mr. William Morris, there was never such a place as "Lovely London." The British metropolis during the Middle Ages was a chaotic maze of narrow and tortuous streets, full of inexpressibly filthy hovels, dominated by some very splendid examples of Gothic architecture. The thoroughfares were unpaved, unlit, and undrained, destitute of a water supply, destitute of any proper appliances of sanitation. Read Ben Jonson's comedies bearing on London life, written at a period, even, when mediævalism had passed away. Read Dr. Guy on "Public Health." The quaintness of the architecture, and the picturesqueness of the costumes of the people in the London of the Middle Ages, I frankly admit; otherwise respected Mr. Morris, "Lovely London" was as unlovely as old Paris:—

> Un amas confus de maisons;
> Des crottes dans toutes les rues;
> Ponts et portes, palais, prisons;
> Boutiques bien ou mal pourvues.

Finally, "Lovely London" was periodically decimated by the Plague, the Sweating Sickness, and the Black Death.

Mem.: There is no "lovelier" city in the picturesque sense than New Orleans. The villas in the outskirts of the Crescent City, with their gardens glowing in mid-winter with orange-trees in full fruit, bananas and japonicas, remind one of those Pompeian street scenes which the French painters during the Second Empire loved so well to paint. But the Angel of Death annually stalks through these beauteous avenues; and the capital of Louisiana is a city full of mothers trembling lest the Yellow Fever should start up on the threshold and snatch their babes from them.

So I came away from the first annual meeting of the Kyrle Society much edified (not "edifying," as my good friends the printers made me say last week with reference to the Rothschild-Perugia marriage) by what I had heard. It is a vast pity that besides the speeches at which I have glanced those of Sir Frederick Leighton, P.R.A., Dr. Andrew Clark, and Mr. Kegan Paul were left wholly unreported, or nearly so.

Since last Thursday I have been importuned—I will not say pestered—by a large number of estimable ladies and gentlemen, both by letter and by word of mouth, to tell them "all about" the Kyrle Society: what it has done, what it means to do, and how it intends to do it. In reply, I beg to refer my catechists, first, to the poems of Mr. Alexander Pope, and to the well-known passage,

> From the dry rock who bade the waters flow!
> Not to the skies in useless columns tost,
> Or in proud falls magnificently lost;
> But clear and artless, pouring through the plain
> Health to the sick and solace to the swain.

Having refreshed their memories as to what Mr. Pope has to say touching John Kyrle, let them turn to "Chambers's Book of Days," Vol. II. p. 556-7, and they will find an excellently digestive biography of "the Man of Ross," the beneficent esquire of Herefordshire, who succeeded in doing, during his long life of eighty-four years, on an annual income of a few hundred pounds, an immensity of social good. I fancy that the Kyrle Society are anxious to do, collectively, that which John Kyrle, with such signal success, did individually. The Society, it strikes me, might help the object which they have in view if in their prospectus they printed a short summarised biography of the Man of Ross. It is irritating to read would-be jocose paragraphs about the "Kyrle your Hair Society;" or inquiries as to whether the Society has anything to do with the Scottish game of "curling."

In a recent sale of rare books and MSS. at Messrs. Sotheby's I find that the original manuscript of Sir Walter Scott's "Guy Mannering" sold for £390. The purchaser of this and his other choice lots was an American gentleman; and indeed our Transatlantic cousins seem to be taking from us all the bibliographical rarities on which, for love or money, they can possibly lay hold. Still, I do not envy the purchaser of the original manuscript of "Guy Mannering," for which I think a greatly excessive price was paid. After all, the MS. of an entire book is not much more interesting than a sucked orange. I would much rather have an inedited letter of Sir Walter's writing. There is not much (to me) more interesting in the multiplied Scott autograph in "Guy Mannering" than in the manuscript of the "Bride of Lammermoor," which was written by John Ballantyne and "Willie" Laidlaw from Sir Walter's dictation. Although there is a facsimile page of the original MS. of "Ivanhoe" opposite Scott's portrait in Lockhart's "Life," nearly the whole of that superb romance, so the Magician's biographer tells us, was dictated. So was the "Legend of Montrose."

On the other hand, there was also sold a few days since at Sotheby's a copy of the "Histrio-mastix, The Player's Scourge; or Actors' Tragedie," by William Prynne; London, 1633. I am astonished to find that this extremely rare and curious book should have fetched no more than seven pounds fifteen shillings. It is rare for the reason that the edition was seized by the law officers of the Crown, and, as much of it as could be got together, burned by the hands of the Common Hangman. It is curious for the reason that in many hundred pages of very small type Prynne has brought to bear an immense amount of learning, sacred and profane, against not only plays and players, music and dancing, but also against hunting, "Christmas keeping," bonfires, Maypoles and dressing up houses with green ivy. "Histrio-mastix" is, in short, a "Whole Body of Puritanism." It explains the raison d'être of "Hudibras."

The proceedings against Prynne, his printer and publisher, for libel in the Court of Star Chamber, are strange reading. You shall find them, at large, in Hargreave's "State Trials," two portly tomes of which are serving me as a desk as I write these "Echoes." The Lords Justices of the Camera Stellata successively passed sentence on the convicted defendant; and there would be something almost comic, were there not much more that is revolting, in the ferocity of the Earl of Dorset in apostrophising the author of "Histrio-mastix." Here is a fragment of the "screed":—

> Mr. Prynne, I do declare you to be a Schism-maker in the Church, a Sedition-Sower in the Commonwealth, a Wolf in Sheep's Clothing: in a word, omnium malorum nequissimus. I shall fine him Ten Thousand pounds, which is more than he is worth, yet less than he deserveth. I will set him at liberty no more than a Plagued Man or a Mad Dog, who, tho' he cannot Bite, he will Foam; he is so far from being a Sociable Soul that he is not a Rational Soul; he is fit to live in Dens with such Beasts of Prey as Wolves and Tygers like himself. . . . Now for Corporal Punishment, my Lords, whether I should burn him in the Forehead or slit him in the Nose; for I find that it is Confessed of all that Dr. Leighton's offence was less than Mr. Prynne's, then why should Mr. Prynne have a less punishment. . . . I should be loth that he should escape with his ears, for he might get a Periwigg, which he now so much inveighs against, and so hide them, or force his Conscience to make use of his unlovely Love Locks on each side. Therefore I would have him branded in the Forehead, slit in the Nose, and his Ears cropt too.

Prodigious Earl of Dorset! Excellent was the service done by this considerate and merciful nobleman to the cause of the Liberty of the English Press.

A "Commander R.N." makes the following truly sensible suggestion anent exorbitant cab-fares under great stress of weather. "In our seaports," writes my correspondent, "where the charges for boat hire are established by law, as cab-fares are in London, when the weather is rough the Harbour Master hoists a certain signal, which indicates that during the time of the signal's flying the boatman shall be entitled to charge an additional half fare. When the weather is very bad indeed, another signal is hoisted providing that for the nonce double fares for boat-hire may be charged. Would it be possible," my correspondent proceeds to ask, "to institute something of a similar nature in London," with reference to cabs and omnibuses, during exceptionally rigorous weather? Unfortunately, the metropolitan cab-fares are fixed by Act of Parliament; and I doubt whether the police authorities would be legally justified in temporarily suspending during a frost of Siberian severity the rules of a hard-and-fast and, on the whole, very stupid tariff.

There is something the matter—not structurally, but "institutionally"—with the Temple Bar Memorial. I do not intend to break my pledge to abstain in future from speaking ill of the Dragon, which some people persist in calling a Griffin, and which Mr. Henry Labouchere, M.P., in a question put in the Commons, styled an "heraldic beast." But, somehow or another, the First Commissioner of Works, appears to have arrived at the conclusion (rather tardily) that the Memorial which stops the way between the Temple and the New Law Courts is not handsome, that it is an obstruction, that a great mistake was made in erecting it at all, and that it might be conveniently carted away and re-erected (but without the Dragon) somewhere else. All this would seem to mean that the voice of Public Opinion, which in this matter of the Obstructive Memorial first found expression in this Journal, and in this page, is worth listening to.

More than this, there are dark, but not distant, rumours current that the Civic authorities themselves are inclined to give up the Memorial on its present site as a bad job, and are not indisposed to admit that the Dragon has not a leg to stand upon. It is true that I read that a delegation from the Court of Common Council is about to wait on the First Commissioner of Works, and beg him not to press for the removal of the obstruction until the New Law Courts have been completed. I look upon this as a mere device for gaining time. Perhaps the Common Council are vaguely hoping with Mr. Micawber that "something will turn up." The public have a very short memory, and it may be that the City Fathers shrewdly surmise that it the Memorial be left alone for the present its Obstructiveness, in the hurry-scurry of events, may be forgotten. Somebody asked the French philosopher Fontenelle, when he was nearly ninety, how old he was. "Hush!" he replied, putting one forefinger to his lip, while with the other he pointed skywards, "Don't put them in mind of it." The Parcæ, however, remembered him one fine morning and duly snipped his thread. The Memorial will not be forgotten; and down it will come.

Nor is it at all beyond the range of probability that some of these days, when Mr. Street's superb new Palace of Justice is finished and the area before it is structurally "revised and settled," the very ugly and obstructive Church of St. Clement Danes will be demolished and removed to some other site. I am fully aware that, although St. Clement's Church was not actually built by Sir Christopher Wren, the work of its erection was superintended by that illustrious architect, who gave his services gratuitously. But the tower and steeple belong to the reign of George the First, and they were cobbled and patched as recently as 1839. I have heard, too, that the organ is one of Father Schmidt's manufacture; and I know that in the north gallery there yet remains the pew in which Samuel Johnson used to worship. Both these interesting relics might be conveniently removed to a new site. The existing fabric is architecturally ugly and locally obstructive.

Malton, in his "Picturesque Tour through London," in 1792, roundly says of St. Clement's Church that it is "a disgusting fabric, and so obtruded on the street as to be the cause of much inconvenience and danger to the public." There was a talk at the time (see Ireland's "Inns of Court") of pulling down Temple Bar and re-erecting it on the river-bank in the Temple Garden; "and," adds crusty old Malton, "whilst an extensive improvement is carrying into execution, this unsightly church is to remain and Temple Bar is to be taken away. The church so conspicuously placed, and which will then be more conspicuous, is a disgrace to architecture; while Temple Bar, on the contrary, has some merit as a building, and deserves to be retained as marking the entrance into the capital of the British Empire." For the credit of Sir Christopher, let it be noted that the name of the architect who, in 1686, designed the body of the ugly church was Edward Pearce.

In a very amusing, and, in the main, trustworthy olla podrida of theatrical reminiscences and anecdotes, just published, and called "Old Drury Lane: Fifty Years' Recollections of Author, Actor, and Manager," by Edward Stirling (Chatto and Windus), there is a story told about my dear Mother which I cannot allow to pass unnoticed, since Mr. Stirling has curiously mis-related it.

The author of "Old Drury" states that my mother, who was a teacher of Italian singing, had been engaged to teach "the Ladies Pierrepont," nieces of the Great Duke of Wellington. "A long lesson, given on a hot July day, exhausted Madame so much that she was compelled to hurry into a tavern in Brook-street, on her way home, to have a glass of ale. Leaving the house hastily, she ran against Wellington, who was passing. Dreadfully alarmed, she said, "Your Grace, I know you saw me come out; but I could not help it, upon my word; I was so thirsty." The Duke replied, smiling, 'My dear Madame, if I had been in your position I should have done the same: quite right. Good morning, Madame.'"

If Mr. Edward Stirling (whom I have known ever since I was a boy) had written to me before he put this anecdote in print, I would have told him accurately what the Hero of Waterloo did say, and what my mother did not say, on the occasion in question. She was coming, on a broiling summer's day, from giving a lesson, not to "the Ladies Pierrepont," but at Grosvenor House. Overcome by heat and thirst, she did enter a public-house and order and drink, not a glass of ale, but half a pint of porter from a pewter measure (which beer she declared to be more delicious than any champagne she had ever tasted); and on emerging from the tavern she did stumble upon Arthur, Duke of Wellington and Prince of Waterloo. But she did not proffer (nor would have any well-bred gentlewoman have proffered) any kind of explanation or exculpation under the circumstances; nor had she any time to do so, for the Duke, whom she had the honour, from long intercourse with society, to know very well, merely passed by with a good-natured nod and a chuckling exclamation of "Aha! Madame S—; that's the way you do it." The Old Campaigner knew the world, and what is needful to be done in dire emergencies.

SKETCHES AT THE LYCEUM.

No greater proof could be found, perhaps, of the firm hold obtained by the existing programme at the Lyceum on the public favour than the fact that the audiences at the theatre under the management of Mr. Henry Irving showed, even at the acutest period of the recent Great Frost, fewer signs of diminution than were visible at any other place of entertainment in the metropolis. This may, of course, be partially accounted for by the circumstance that, owing to the great popularity of "The Cup" and "The Corsican Brothers," the booking of private boxes, stalls, and seats in the dress circle had been for many nights in advance, and that these being chiefly taken by what are termed "carriage people," those felicitous ones, when the first scare of the Arctic calamity (which kept everybody at home) was over, did not find much difficulty in going to the theatre and coming home. There remained, however, a very considerable residuum in the shape of patrons of the pit and gallery, who not only were not carriage people, but were wholly omnibus-less and cabless, and must have had to undergo the most dolorous of pilgrimages in tramping back to their dwellings through the piercing cold and the snow-beleaguered streets after the play was over. The constancy with which these courageous playgoers night after night supported Mr. Henry Irving and Miss Ellen Terry approached the marvellous.

Mr. Tennyson's "Cup," apart from its high poetic merits, and the splendid dramatic action displayed in the acting, is so exceptionally and originally sumptuous as a spectacle that, as a graphic and pictorial presentment alone, it would have commanded brilliant success. As it is, its spectacular side forms only one part of a thoroughly efficient and harmonious whole. In a journal like the Illustrated London News, in which, every week, so large an amount of matter, literary and artistic, has to be compressed into so comparatively small a space, it is manifestly impossible to give more than "sketches" of one of the most remarkable examples of theatrical pageantry that has been witnessed on the English stage since the memorable revival of Byron's "Sardanapalus" at the Princess's, under the management of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kean. Our Artist has, nevertheless, availed himself to the fullest of the limited scope afforded him. The Illustration of the interior of the Temple of Artemis furnishes an adequate idea of the grim catastrophe to "The Cup," when the profligate Galatian Tetrarch Synorix, so powerfully impersonated by Mr. Henry Irving, lies prostrate and writhing in the agonies of death by poison at the foot of the altar of the goddess, where, in his luxurious pride, he vainly hoped that his nuptials with the beauteous relict of the murdered Sinnatus would be celebrated. The Roman General Antonius would raise the gasping, struggling wretch from the ground; but it is too late, and in his robes of kingly splendour the assassin of Sinnatus grouns his wretched life out on the marble pavement, and lies there, at last, dead, like the carrion that he is. Camma, who "Slew the Slayer and shall Herself be Slain," but by her own hand and in the same cup by which she has dealt death to Sylorix, looks down, half in exultation, half in horror, at the victim of her vengeance; and the picturesquely robed figures of the moribund Tetrarch, and of the vengeful High Priestess of Artemis, stand out in lurid relief against the dark background of the Temple, with its massive columns, its cornices and plinths, relieved by solidly modelled basreliefs, its mysteriously veiled Sanctuary of the goddess, and its groups of priests and priestesses and Roman legionaries. Scenic and dramatic art have rarely produced so magnificent an ensemble as has been achieved in the concluding tableau of "The Cup."

In further illustration of the leading characters in Mr. Tennyson's drama, the artist gives us full-length portrait-studies of Mr. Irving as Synorix, in his mantle of leopard-skin and the strangely barbaric yet tasteful panoply of an Asiatic chieftain in antique times—a costume evolved from the essentially artistic mind of the actor-manager at the Lyceum—and of the irresistibly fascinating Miss Ellen Terry as Camma. The abounding grace and delicacy of this gifted young lady in the gauzy robes, which, so to speak, undulate and swim like clouds around her form, have been aptly seized by the draughtsman; but no artist, I fancy, could with perfect adequacy portray the astonishing mobility of Miss Terry's gestures and expression, both in facial variety and the continuous change of play in the action of her lithe limbs. Garrick, when he chose, could baffle all the portrait-painters, and by the rapidity of his gesticulations completely elude the pursuit of the most dexterous pencil; and the modern artist may deem himself fortunate if he can catch successfully even one of the moods of Miss Ellen Terry as Camma—moods as eloquent and as artistic as they are changeful.

Our artist has also done graphic justice to Mr. Terriss, in his appearance as the uxorious and unfortunate Tetrarch Sinnatus, who is shown at the moment when, in the first act of "The Cup," he traverses the rocky scenery in the pursuit of his beloved chase, javelin in hand, and followed by a meute of baying staghounds. Mr. Terriss's interpretation of Sinnatus is a very manly and dignified one; and his costume, although at first sight somewhat bizarre, is as strikingly picturesque as that of one of the Dacian kings in "Hope's Costumes of the Ancients."

Another of our "Sketches at the Lyceum," the first "Ghost Scene" in "The Corsican Brothers," with Mr. Irving as Fabien de' Franchi, needs literally no explanation. It may be fairly said to speak for itself; and, like a Corporation Address to Royalty, may be "taken as read." So, likewise, that of Fabien effecting the reconciliation between the hostile peasant families. Everybody has seen "The Corsican Brothers" at the Lyceum, and most people will see it again and again in eager relays until, in the fulness of time, Mr. Irving substitutes for it some other attractive feature in his programme.

THE TRANSVAAL WAR.

A repulse, and temporary check, to the British military force in South Africa, with a serious loss of men and officers to the 58th Regiment, attended the actual advance of General Sir George Pomeroy Colley, yesterday week (Friday) against the Dutch position on the Transvaal frontier. The Boers had fixed the site of their Thermopylæ at a place called Laing's Neck, six miles north of Hatley's Hotel, on the road that proceeds almost due north from Newcastle, in Natal, to a point where several different roads branch off into the Transvaal, leading respectively to Standerton, Heidelberg, and Pretoria, to Lydenburg, and to the Wakkerstroom district. Laing's Neck is only twenty-four miles distant from the town of Newcastle. It is named from a deserted farm, on the heights above the upper stream of the Buffalo, which descends here from the Drakenberg mountain range, the natural boundary separating Natal and all the seacoast territories from the inland and upland plain of the Orange Free State and the Transvaal.

Sir George Colley advanced that day with 870 infantry, being 400 of the 58th Regiment, a battalion of the 60th Rifles, and the Naval Brigade from H.M.S. Boadicea; also with 170 mounted troops, part dragoons, part mounted infantry, and Natal Mounted Police; and with three guns, a rocket battery, and a Gatling gun. He was met, three or four miles on his day's march, upon a steep and winding road, by about twice his number of Boers, occupying covered positions behind the huge rocks and boulders, to right and left of the road. The artillery was sent to the front, and dislodged them at first, but they took up new positions which were still better sheltered. They drove back the mounted British troops, and when the 58th Regiment advanced it was received with such a quick and well-directed fire by the Dutch riflemen, on both flanks, that in a very short time 169 men, with several officers, were killed or wounded. Colonel Bonar Millett Deane, formerly of the 19th Regiment, who led the attack, and who was Deputy Adjutant and Quartermaster-General, was killed; also Major Ruscombe Poole, R.A.; Lieutenant R. H. Elwes, Aide-de-Camp; Major Hingeston and Lieutenants Dolphin and Baillie, of the 58th; and Lieutenant Inman, of the 60th Rifles. The King's Dragoon Guards lost two or three men killed, the Naval Brigade two, and there are five or six more. Sir George Colley was compelled to retire to his camp, near Hatley's Hotel, where he has fortified his position against attack, and will await reinforcements. The 20th inst. is considered the earliest possible day for a renewed advance. He states that the Boers allowed the British dead to be buried on the ground, and that they have behaved with courtesy to himself, and have shown all due consideration for the wounded on our side.

It is reckoned that Sir George Colley will have been reinforced, this week or next week, by the arrival in Natal of the 2nd battalion of the 60th Rifles, the 83rd Regiment, the 92nd Regiment, the 97th Regiment, the 15th Hussars, and a battery of artillery. Other troops should arrive about the 14th inst., the 6th Dragoons (Inniskilling), a battery, and a company of mounted infantry; which will make a total of 4000 men, in addition to his present force of 1000. These regular troops, with the Naval Brigade, must almost equal the whole number of adult men, capable of fighting, in the entire Dutch population of the Transvaal. There cannot, therefore, be any doubt of the military power of the British Empire to crush that small community; and we are quite sure that no glory is to be gained by such an achievement. It will, however, be found much more costly than is generally supposed, if the Boers, instead of fighting a decisive battle, withdraw far into the interior, and oblige their conquerors to march hundreds of miles from the seaport of Natal. The capture of Pretoria would by no means secure the submission of the Transvaal.

Our Illustrations of this subject, in the present Number, comprise one that shows the peculiar method of fighting used by the Boers of South Africa. They are, to a man, bold and expert horsemen, as well as good marksmen with the rifle: and it is their practice in war, just as in hunting lions or any other fierce wild beasts, to ride up within shooting distance, quickly dismount, fire deliberately at the approaching foe, then at once remount and gallop off, but only far enough to gain time for re-loading—as few of them possess breech-loaders—after which they return to the charge, and deliver a second shot. But in the defence of a position which affords some cover, like the one shown in our Illustration, they will lie down or crouch behind the shelter, and take a most careful aim; still keeping their horses, "knee-haltered" by a thong attached to the reins, close at hand, in readiness to ride away from pursuit. There have never been any regularly drilled troops in the service of either of the Dutch South African Republics; and they are equally unskilled in the formation of a line or column of infantry, and in the use of artillery, not a single piece of which is known to exist in the Boers' possession.

We also present a view of the Market Square at Potchefstroom, where the actual revolt began, on Dec. 16, by a Dutchman hauling down the British flag, upon which Captain Lambart shot him, and wounded him. The Provisional Government, for the restoration of the independent Republic, had been proclaimed at Heidelberg two or three days before. The portraits of two of its members, Mr. Krüger and Mr. Joubert, appear in this Number of our Journal.

THE TRANSVAAL REPUBLICAN LEADERS.

We present, this week, the Portraits of two of the three leading Dutch citizens of the Transvaal selected by their fellow-countrymen on Dec. 15 to form a Provisional Government during the struggle for national independence which has just begun. They are Mr. Martinus Wessel Pretorius, Mr. S. J. Paul Krüger, and Mr. Petrus Jacobus Joubert, each one of whom, before the British annexation of the Transvaal, in April, 1877, had held high office in what was then styled the South African Republic.

Mr. M. W. Pretorius is the son of Andries Pretorius, originally a farmer of Graaf Reinet, in the Cape Colony, who was the most eminent leader of the Dutch exodus from the British dominion in 1834. It was he who became the real founder, successively, both of the Orange Free State and of the Transvaal Republic. He was also the valiant and skilful commander who defeated the Zulu King Dingaan, after the massacre of the Dutch in 1838, and won Natal for European colonisation. This Andries Pretorius, after the battle of Boomplaats in 1848, was outlawed by the British Government as a rebel, and fled from the Orange Territory into the Transvaal; but three years afterwards received a free pardon, and early in the next year, 1852, crowned his patriotic efforts by negotiating the Sand River Convention for the independence of the Transvaal Republic. He died a year or two after this achievement, and his name was given to the capital of the new free Commonwealth, the town of Pretoria. His son, M.W. Pretorius, was elected, in 1859, the second President of the Orange Free State, and resided at Bloemfontein during his five years' term of office. He endeavoured to bring about a political union of the two Dutch Republics, but this was forbidden by the jealousy of the British Government. Returning to the Transvaal, Martin Pretorius was sometime President of the South African Republic established there, but had to resign in 1872 because he had exceeded his constitutional authority, as the Volksraad held, in agreeing with the British Government to the "Keate arbitration," concerning the south-western districts on the frontier approaching West Griqualand. This disputed award was the occasion of a bitter controversy, in 1874, between Sir Henry Barkly and President Burgers, which had much to do with the subsequent hostility of our Colonial Office to the Transvaal Government. During the absence of Mr. Burgers in Europe, in 1875, Mr. M. W. Pretorius was Acting State President; and he seems to have a personal and hereditary title to be the champion of his country's independence. He was chairman of the Convention, or aggregate meeting of District Committees, that assembled on April 4, 1878, at Doornfontein, after the return of the first Deputation sent the year before to the Earl of Carnarvon, with the Protest of the Republican Government against the annexation.

Mr. Paul Krüger, as he is commonly called, is a leading citizen at Rustenburg, and a man of considerable natural ability, though not highly educated. He was a member of the Executive Council of the Republic under President Burgers till April 12, 1877. He was then deputed by his colleagues, with Dr. E. P. Jorissen, the Attorney-General (who also acted as Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs), to go to England, and to lay their protest, with that of President Burgers, against the annexation before her Majesty's Government. Messrs. Krüger and Jorissen left Pretoria on May 10, had an interview with Sir Bartle Frere at Capetown on June 4, and were in London on July 12, when they saw Lord Carnarvon; but were summarily apprised by him "that it was altogether impossible for her Majesty's Government to entertain the idea of reversing" the action of Sir T. Shepstone on April 12. His Lordship, indeed, refused to discuss the question at all with these delegates, who had been sent from South Africa on purpose. He told them he had certain information that the act of Sir T. Shepstone had occurred "by the great wish of the majority of the people of the country." Messrs. Krüger and Jorissen could not, in that interview at the Colonial Office, positively contradict his Lordship, because he might possibly have got some information of a date later than their departure from Pretoria. They might have been, as they said, "an inexplicable change in the feelings of the people." Mr. Krüger, silenced though not convinced, as he stated at the time, asked for a plébiscite, which Lord Carnarvon declined to grant, and sent the Transvaal delegates away. On their return to South Africa, about the end of that year, they found all their Dutch fellow-countrymen in a state of great indignation. Sir T. Shepstone, the Administrator, had been going about to receive a number of addresses, welcoming the British rule, which were got up by his agents, and by English traders, office-seekers, or other foreign partisans, to support the annexation. It was by this artificial demonstration on the part of a small number of inhabitants of the towns, but scarcely any of the Boers, that Lord Carnarvon had been so grossly deceived. The hostile agitation, however, grew so formidable that Sir T. Shepstone had to issue a severe proclamation, threatening the condign punishment of its promoters; notwithstanding which, Independence Committees were soon formed at Pretoria, Potchefstroom, and other centres, and 125 memorials against the annexation were circulated throughout the whole country. These were signed by 6591 adult free citizens, while the counter-memorials, sent round at the same time, in favour of British rule, obtained only 587 signatures. At the combined meeting of April 4, 1878, all the chief places and districts were represented—Pretoria, Potchefstroom, Middelburg, Heidelberg, Wakkerstroom, Utrecht, Lydenburg, Rustenburg, and Marico. It was resolved, after three days' deliberation, to send a second deputation to England, consisting of Mr. Krüger, as before, and Mr. P. J. Joubert.

The last-named gentleman, who is one of an old French Huguenot family, long settled in South Africa, had also been Vice-President and Acting State President. He is not the same Mr. Joubert who commanded the Boers in the recent conflict of Dec. 20 with the detachment of the 94th Regiment, but we believe he is a near relation. He and Mr. Krüger, forming the second Transvaal Delegation, set out on May 10, 1878, saw Sir Bartle Frere at Capetown on their way hither, and begged his friendly co-operation, and came to London about July 10. They wrote to Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, then Secretary of State for the Colonies, and had an interview and some further correspondence with him. This has now been reprinted, from the Bluebooks of that year, by the "Transvaal Independence Committee," and may be had of them, at 6, Drapers'-gardens, Throgmorton-street, by anyone who desires to study the question.

Our Portraits of Mr. Paul Krüger and Mr. Joubert are from photographs taken by Mr. J. E. Bruton, of Capetown.

THE LATE PROVOST OF TRINITY COLLEGE, DUBLIN.

The Rev. Humphrey Lloyd, D.D., F.R.S., who died, in his eighty-second year, at Dublin, on the 17th ult., had been Provost of Trinity College since 1865. He was Vice-Provost from 1862, and a Senior Fellow since 1843, having obtained his Junior Fellowship in 1824. He held the Professorship of Natural Philosophy from 1831 to 1843. His chief contributions to physical science were in the investigation of the laws of light and magnetism. At his suggestion, and under his direction, the Board of Trinity College established the Magnetic Observatory of Dublin. He was chosen in 1838, with Sir John Herschel, Mr. Whewell, and Mr. Peacock, by the British Association, to form the committee for promoting Government observations of terrestrial magnetism in the southern hemisphere, in the Colonies, and in India. For this object, with Colonel Sabine, he visited Germany, to obtain the assistance of the German Governments and scientific men; and he prepared the practical instructions for those observations. He was president of the British Association at its Dublin meeting in 1857. He was author of a "Treatise on Light and Vision," of "Elements of Optics," a "Treatise on Magnetism," one on "The Climate of Ireland," and many valuable papers, essays, and reports, furnished to the Royal Irish Academy and other scientific societies, of which he was an esteemed member. He also wrote several pamphlets upon Irish University education, with reference to the different religious communions. He was an enlightened Liberal Reformer, consistently advocating the relief of Roman Catholics and Dissenters from unjust legal disabilities; and he ruled Trinity College with great benefit to all its members.

Our Portrait of the Rev. Dr. Lloyd is from a photograph by Messrs. Chancellor and Son, of Dublin.

MR. ALFRED ELMORE, R.A.

An artist of very considerable ability—a most worthy, amiable man—is lost to us by the death, on the 24th inst., of Mr. Alfred Elmore, R.A., in the sixty-sixth year of his age, after a long and painful illness, caused by an accident which brought on disease of the hip-joint. He was the son of a retired surgeon of the 5th Dragoon Guards, and was born on the day of the battle of Waterloo, at Clonakilty, in the county of Cork. His family removed to London when he was about twelve, and, conceiving a love of art, young Elmore commenced his studies by drawing from the antique statues in the British Museum. In 1832, he became a student of the Royal Academy, and two years later contributed a picture to the exhibition of that body entitled "A Subject from an Old Play." But after this, unlike many artists who consider their professional training complete so soon as they succeed in getting a picture hung in a public exhibition, Mr. Elmore continued his studies in the Louvre and in a private atelier; and, subsequently to an interval spent in England, returned to the Continent in 1840, staying for some time at Munich, visiting Venice, Florence, Bologna, and remaining finally two years at Rome. Meanwhile he had painted several religious subjects, including "The Martyrdom of Thomas à Becket," which was commissioned by Daniel O'Connell, exhibited at the Academy in 1840, and is now in a church in Dublin. Thenceforward the artist's works, exhibited at the Academy or the British Institution, are numerous, and mostly in the walk of historical-genre, or illustrations of poetry and romance. The first that proved very attractive was "Rienzi in the Forum" (1844), illustrating Lord Lytton's novel, which procured the painter's election as an Associate of the Academy, and has since been engraved. In 1847 was produced "The Invention of the Stocking-Loom," also widely known through the print after it published by the Art-Union of London. Then followed "A Scene from Tristram Shandy," "Religious Controversy in the time of Louis XIV.," "Lady Macbeth," "The Queen of the Day," and a subject from the "Decameron" (1850), "Hotspur and the Fop" (1851), a "Scene from Pepys' Diary" (1852), "Queen Blanche separating Louis IX. from his Wife" (1853), and "The Emperor Charles V. at St. Yuste" (1856), which obtained his election in the following year as full R.A. Perhaps his best work in vigour of conception and power of colour is "Marie Antoinette facing the Mob at the Tuileries" (1860). Among his more important succeeding works are "Marie Antoinette in the Temple" (1861), "The Invention of the Combing Machine" (1862), "Lucrezia Borgia" (1863), "Within the Convent Walls" (1864), "Ishmael" (1868), "Louis XIII. and Louis XIV." (1870), "After the Expulsion" (1873), one of his largest and highest efforts; "Mistress Hetty Lambert," from "The Virginians" (1874), "Ophelia" (1875), "Mary Queen of Scots and Darnley at Jedburgh" (1877), "Pompeii, A.D. '79," and "John Olden and Priscilla" (1878).

THE LATE LORD CAMOYS.

Our last week's "Obituary" contained a notice of this deceased nobleman, who died, on the 18th ult., in the eighty-fourth year of his age, at Stonor, Henley-on-Thames, the family seat. His Lordship's son, the Hon. Francis Stonor, second but surviving son and heir, who was son-in-law to the late Sir Robert Peel, and a clerk to the House of Lords, died about a week before his father, at the age of fifty-one. The title descends to a grandson. The late Lord Camoys was Thomas Stonor, son of a gentleman of that name by Catherine, daughter of Mr. Henry Blundell, of Ince Blundell, Lancashire. The ancient peerage of Camoys, a Barony, dating from 1383, had been in abeyance since it became extinct in the reign of Henry IV. It was revived in 1839, in favour of the late Lord Camoys, who was, in the maternal line, descended from the second Baron. He was married to a daughter of Mr. Peregrine Towneley, of Towneley Hall, Lancashire. He twice contested the city of Oxford, and once the county, but without success. He four times held the office of a Lord in Waiting, in the Queen's Household, under Conservative Administrations.

LIEUTENANT E. E. BRADFORD, R.N.

The First Lord of the Admiralty, as was stated by Mr. G. O. Trevelyan, in the House of Commons, a few days ago, has promoted Sub-Lieutenant Edward Eden Bradford to the rank of Lieutenant, upon the special recommendation of Commodore Wilson, commanding her Majesty's naval force in the Australasian seas. This step is to denote the strong approbation by Government of Sub-Lieutenant Bradford's gallant conduct upon the occasion of the massacre of Lieutenant Bower and five seamen of H.M.S. Sandfly, a schooner employed in the Admiralty surveying work, who had landed on Nogu, one of the Florida Islands, in the Western Pacific Ocean, about the middle of last October. One man only of Lieutenant Bower's party escaped, and got back to the vessel; but Sub-Lieutenant Bradford, left to act upon his own responsibility, with the few men under him, had the courage to stay and make successful efforts to recover the bodies of the slain. He also obtained full information leading to the punishment of their murderers, which was afterwards carried into execution by H.M.S. Emerald, under the command of Captain Maxwell. Lieutenant E. E. Bradford, who is a second son of Mr. Edward Bradford, F.R.C.S., of Harrow, entered the Royal Navy in January, 1872, as a naval cadet, became Midshipman in June, 1874, and Sub-Lieutenant in June, 1878. He obtained a certificate of proficiency in seamanship at the Royal Naval College.

The Portrait is from a photograph by Messrs. Hills and Saunders, of Harrow.

THE LATE MR. VERBOECKHOVEN.

The eminent Belgian artist, Eugène Verboeckhoven, animal-painter, died at Brussels on the 19th inst., at the age of eighty-two. He was the son of a sculptor, Bartholomew Verboeckhoven, and studied that branch of art in early life. His pictures have long been celebrated throughout Europe. Among those best known are "Le Convoi des Chevaux Attaqué par les Loups," "L'Etalon Arabe," "Souvenir d'Ecosse," "Campagne de Rome," and "Moutons Surpris par l'Orage," in the Musée Royale of Brussels. His studio, which contained hundreds of oil-paintings and an immense number of drawings, was a wonderful display of talent and diligence, and was constantly visited by admiring connoisseurs. He was elected honorary member of the Russian and Austrian and other foreign Academies of Art, and was graced with several orders of knighthood. In his own country, M. Verboeckhoven was highly esteemed, not only as a great artist, but as a patriotic citizen, having taken a leading part in the Revolution of 1830, which won independence for the kingdom of Belgium. His funeral was attended with military honours and with the presence of a large number of distinguished persons.

MR. DIXON-HARTLAND, M.P.

The new member of Parliament for the borough of Evesham, who has obtained the seat after a petition to set aside the election of Mr. Lehmann last year, is Mr. Frederick Dixon-Hartland, of The Oaklands, Charlton-Kings, Gloucestershire. He was born in 1832, eldest son of the late Mr. Nathaniel Hartland, of that place, who died in 1866. His mother was Eliza, daughter and coheiress of Dr. Thomas Dixon, M.D., of King's Lynn. Mr. Dixon-Hartland is a magistrate for the county of Gloucester, an Almoner of Christ's Hospital, London, a Fellow of the Geographical Society, and of the Society of Antiquaries. He is a member of the old banking firms of Lacy, Hartland, and Co., of London, and Hull, Smith, and Co., of Uxbridge. In politics he is a Conservative, and now enters Parliament for the first time. He is married to Grace, youngest daughter of the late Colonel Wilson, K.H., and has several children.

THE MAYOR'S JUVENILE BALL AT MANCHESTER.

The grand new Gothic Townhall of Manchester, on Monday evening, the 17th ult., received a very gay and pretty company of six hundred girls and boys, invited by the Mayor and Mayoress to a juvenile ball. The last year's Mayor, Alderman Patterson, set the example of this entertainment for the young people a twelvemonth ago. Mr. Alderman Baker and Mrs. Baker, who now rule over the social festivities of the municipal palace, have repeated the same pleasing condescension to the natural wishes of youth. The prescribed limit, in the case of boys, was between ten and fifteen years of age; but for girls, we believe, it was extended to all below seventeen who had not yet been "brought out." A complete list of the names of the children invited appears in the local papers; and it is charming to reckon up all the Mauds and Marians, the Evas, Ediths, and Ethels, the Adas, Annies, Alices, and Amys, the Constances, the Florences, the Gertrudes, the Blanches, and Berthas, "mostly in pale blue or pink, in the Princess style, with trimmings of lace and satin and grenadine." The young gentlemen, for the most part, wore the ordinary evening dress, with coat-tails, but a few had sailor's uniform. About sixty elders, amongst whom were the Mayor and Mayoress of Salford, and the members of Parliament for Manchester and South-East Lancashire, with their wives, were invited to see the children dancing. The company began to arrive about half past five o'clock. Up the magnificent staircase they were ushered, and were at once conducted into the banqueting-hall, where refreshments were offered them; after which they passed into the great hall, and joined in dancing, to the music of Mr. J. L. Goodwin's band. Mr. Webster, assisted by his son and daughter, officiated as master of the ceremonies. The whole of the youthful company, before their first dance, passed in front of the Mayor and Mayoress to exchange greetings. The programme, on a decorated card of beautiful design by Messrs. H. Blacklock and Co., comprised sixteen dances, which were got through soon after eleven o'clock. A diverting exhibition of marionettes, and one of Punch and Judy, both supplied by Mr. Whaite, of Bridge-street, Manchester, varied the evening's amusement, in two separate chambers. The Mayor's state rooms and the corridors made a promenade for the rest of the company.

The Lady Mayoress of the City of London, Mrs. Alexander M'Arthur, gave a juvenile party at the Mansion House on Thursday last week.

At the Bristol Mansion House on Wednesday (last week) the Mayor presented Sir Frederick Roberts with a massive silver salver, elaborately ornamented épergne, &c., purchased at a cost of nearly £400. The Guild of the Merchant Vintners gave a ball in honour of Sir Frederick and Lady Roberts.—Yesterday week Sir Frederick Roberts was received at the Council Chamber of the Cardiff Townhall, by the Mayor (Mr. Rees Jones) and the members of the Corporation, and he was presented with an address on behalf of the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses. He was subsequently entertained by the members of the Corporation to luncheon; and in the evening Sir Frederick and Lady Roberts distributed prizes to the first Glamorganshire Volunteer Artillery, of which Colonel Hill is commandant. General Roberts attended the distribution of prizes and inspection of the London Scottish Rifle Volunteers last Saturday evening.

PARISIAN SAYINGS AND DOINGS.

Paris, Tuesday, Feb. 1.

The past week has been so barren of events that the chroniqueur is almost justified in talking of le pluie et le beau temps, and especially of the beau temps, for the frost and snow have entirely disappeared, and we are now enjoying fine and sunny weather, as mild and spring-like as could be desired. The only fault to be found with the elements at present is that the thaw has produced a rise on the Seine and its affluents, and damaging floods are expected.

We are now in high Carnival time, and, until Lent, some thirty or forty masked balls will take place in Paris every Saturday night, at the various casinos and dancing places. Here and there, especially in the popular quarters, you see a shop-window all ablaze with the gay-coloured costumes of the personages of the Italian comedy, pierrot, pierrette, pasillane, pantaleone, polichinelle, scaramouche, colombina, &c. But, nowadays, Paris qui s'amuse does not willingly disguise itself. In all the bals masqués of any importance the maskers are paid by the administration. The young Frenchmen content themselves with a false nose at the utmost, and generally they dispense even with that. And yet, although the gaiety and fun of the Carnival has passed away, the Carnival still lives, and prospers, too, for that matter. The first masked ball at the Grand Opera, which took place on Saturday last, produced 54,200f. receipts, some 10,000f. more than last year. There were two orchestras, one in the theatre and one in the foyer—the former conducted by Arban, and latter by Joseph Gung'l, who has made his first visit to Paris in this the seventieth year of his age. Nevertheless the visitors did not appear to amuse themselves very much. Perhaps, after all, it is fashionable to be bored at these festivities; if such be the case, the majority of the people who spent the night of Saturday-Sunday at the Opera had all the appearance of being in the very height of the fashion. The Carnival, indeed, is like a rebus, the solution of which has been lost en route; if it still has a reason to exist, nobody knows what that reason is. Still there is no firm foundation for the belief that the Carnival was gayer fifty years ago than it is now. Ever since the times of the Directory the public bal masqué appears to have been in the agony of death, and yet it does not die. The famous Musard and Nestor Roquephan galvanised it into life for a time, but the renascence did not last long. The proof that the bal masqué is practically dead is that the types remain the same year after year. The eighteenth century handed down to us Arlequin, and all the charming types of the Italian comedy, and of Watteau's shepherds and shepherdesses; the Directory created its own types and costumes; Gavarni immortalised Chicard, the débardeur and the titi. But for the past thirty years not a single new type has been invented, and since 1827 the Opera ball has not been honoured by the presence of a single femme du monde. All that remains of the Opera ball is a brilliant spectacle, to see which requires the sacrifice of a night's rest.

Two great events have taken place in the theatrical world, a new piece by M. Zola at the Ambigu, and a new comedy by the younger Dumas at the Comédie-Française. M. Zola's piece is an adaptation of his famous and infamous novel "Nana" made, nominally, by M. William Busnach, but I have every reason to believe that the piece from beginning to end was written by M. Zola himself. If this be the case, we have a right to protest and to accuse M. Zola of cowardice. My readers are probably aware that M. Zola has written largely on the subject of "naturalism," not only in fiction but also on the stage. He has proclaimed himself loudly a reformer; we are therefore justified in expecting to see him put his reforms into action when an opportunity is presented. M. Zola has disappointed both his friends and his enemies. "Nana" is nothing but an ordinary melodrama, constructed with much less skill than the pieces of the veteran dramaturge Adolphe D'Ennery, and in it, far from attempting anything new and audacious, M. Zola has made every concession to the conventions of the stage. The piece was originally in ten tableaux; but after the second performances the author and manager determined to suppress three. Now the piece is of reasonable length, and the action moves on with rapidity and increasing interest to the dénouement. Nevertheless, I may remark that in a perfect work of art it is impossible either to add or to take away. But "Nana" is not a work of art; it is a commercial speculation, and a tolerably safe one, so great is the curiosity that M. Zola's name and talent have excited. Now, the reader may ask what is the subject of the piece. If he has read the novel "Nana" he will know who the heroine is. It sufficed to say that in the piece all the characters have been thoroughly expurgated and purified, at least outwardly and in language, and yet in every tableau the two points on which the whole action pivots are money and fleshly appetites, l'argent and les sens. There is nothing ideal or elevated in the whole piece. As for "naturalism," that doctrine has manifested itself in a few scenic effects, which were not particularly successful; for instance, in one tableau there is a brook with real water running in it, but it is only an intermittent brook. The fact is that the water makes so much noise that it has to be turned off while the actors speak, in order to enable the audience to hear what they say; then, when the conversation ceases, the brook runs once more. There is also an artificial nightingale in the coulisse, whose liquid notes excited much hilarity on the first night. Finally, Nana dies of smallpox in a hotel, and appears in the agony of death with her face and shoulders covered with smallpox pustules, made of red clay and ochre. This sight is about as agreeable as the Morgue in November, when the slabs are well filled.

A propos of "Nana," I have just seen a Greek translation of the novel. It is published at Athens, at 33, Sophocles-street. This translation, by Mr. J. Cambouroglo, began to appear in the Athenian journal Rabagas, but the publication was interrupted in presence of the complaints of the scandalised subscribers.

M. Alexandre Dumas's new comedy "La Princesse de Bagdad" was produced at the Comédie-Française last night, and succeeded in provoking a part of the audience to decided signs of disapproval. The piece, in fact, was hissed. Without entering into any description of the plot, I may state that the hisses were caused by the excessive brutality of some of the situations and the gratuitous harshness and crudity of the language. Nevertheless, the "Princesse de Bagdad" remains a literary comedy, as clever and audacious as anything that Dumas has written.

French politics are calm, and are likely to remain so until about the 20th, when M. Gambetta will continue the electoral campaign by a grand speech at Belleville. The Chamber of Deputies is still occupied with the discussion of the voluminous and almost unintelligible press law. The present bill is the forty-third that has been brought before a French Parliament, and it contains no less than seventy-five articles. The object of this bill is ostensibly to secure the liberty of the press; the number of articles will allow no one to be deceived as to its real object.

THE PLAYHOUSES.

Messrs. David James and Thomas Thorne are two such highly gifted and thoroughly conscientious comedians, they have gathered around them at the Vaudeville Theatre a company in every department so compact and so efficient; they "mount" their pieces so well, and produce them with such entire artistic harmony and fitness, that it is far from pleasant to have to speak in terms of almost unmingled dispraise of a new "farcical comedy," in three acts, called "Divorce," an adaptation, by Mr. Robert Reece, of a French piece called "Le Père de l'Avocat," which was brought out at the Vaudeville on Saturday last. It would be a task equally stale, flat, and unprofitable to attempt to recapitulate in detail the plot of "Divorce," as the process of analysis has been carried to exhaustion in all the daily and some of the Sunday papers. It is quite enough to say that the main-spring of the play is the almost fatuous affection of an amiable but senile old retired manufacturer, Mr. Samuel Buckham (Mr. Thomas Thorne), for his son Justinian Cato Buckham, who has been educated by his fond father for the Bar, and has been duly "called," but who as yet has been unable to secure any briefs. He has been made by his papa—who is fully persuaded in his own mind that Justinian Cato will become Lord High Chancellor of England—to promise that he will not marry until he has "taken silk;" which is in itself an absurdity, seeing that the average age at which a stuff gownsman may be called upon to "take silk" is rather over than under five and forty; and many barristers are in the receipt of very handsome incomes without becoming Queen's Counsel at all. Throughout the piece, in fact, there is a laboured but ineffectual attempt to find English equivalents for purely French manners and usages. Old Mr. Samuel Buckham, regarding him in the most charitable light, is a kind of forensic monomaniac. He is suffering from "Bar on the brain;" and, in his morbid ambition to procure practice for his son, he becomes an intolerable old busybody, mischief-maker, tale-bearer, and spoil-sport. He is guilty about once in every ten minutes of the misdemeanours defined by Blackstone as "Common Barratry," "Champerty," and "Maintenance." He stirs up strife between husbands and wives. His ridiculous prohibition of matrimony to his son of course incites that dutiful young gentleman to unite himself in secret wedlock with Alma Day (Miss Marie Illington). He personates solicitors; he offers, at a moment's notice, to transfer his services from plaintiff to respondent in a Divorce suit; he unwarrantably cross-examines witnesses in chambers; he delivers impassioned addresses to imaginary juries; and, on the whole, he is a supernumerated bore and nuisance, who adopts, perhaps, the very best way of getting his son disbarred and himself kicked down the stairs of any house into which he intrudes himself.

The intrigue of this objectionable piece is further carried on by Mr. Popplejohn (Mr. John Maclean), vaguely described in the programme as "a sportsman," who makes his appearance on the stage with an enormous game-bag at his hip, and who proposes to go out of town for a week's shooting, but who does not go (thereby deceiving his wife), and who "shoots his game with a silver bullet"—that is to say, he purchases it ready killed at Tucker's, in the Strand. English "sportsmen," who not do this kind of thing. French sportsmen, if one may trust the Parisian caricatures of the last twenty years, frequently purchase the hares and partridges which they profess to have shot. But, in the way of even remote adherence to real English life and manners, the rest of "Divorce" is of a piece. One of the principal complications of the piece arises from Mrs. Popplejohn, the thoroughly blameless wife of the fraudulent "sportsman," having been belated at Richmond, where she has accidentally met the younger Buckham, and being obliged to sleep at one hotel while Cato Justinian puts up at another. Richmond is neither Fontainebleau nor Versailles; it is only eight miles from London; and are there no flys to be had at a late period of the evening?

It is as well to leave the rest of the equivoque alone. Fully related, it would leave a very unsavoury taste in the mouth. I hear that prior to the production of "Divorce" it was extensively expurgated by the Examiner of Plays; but that too good-natured functionary (who licensed "The Eviction" at the Olympic just as the Land League outrages were beginning in Ireland) would have done far better in declining to license "Divorce" altogether. There are some sufficiently droll situations in the play, and much of the dialogue is very funny. Thus it was received on Saturday with much uproarious merriment; and I do not for one moment undertake to say that the talent and industry of Mr. Thomas Thorne as old Mr. Buckham may not be sufficient to "carry it through," and to procure for "Divorce" a tolerably lengthened run, such as "Forbidden Fruit" had at the Adelphi. Still I cannot but regard this appearance of this bald and thin adaptation of an obviously risqué French piece as little short of a calamity at a theatre where such comedies as "The Two Roses" and "Our Boys" achieved a well-earned triumph. It is much to be regretted that "Divorce" is deprived of the invaluable services of Mr. David James, for whom among the uninteresting dramatis personæ no part could be found; but it was slightly consolatory, in one scene, at least, to find Mr. Thorne's desperately uphill work lightened by the bright talent of Miss Lydia Cowell, who with astonishing truth and aplomb, not lacking even a tender thread of pathos, acted the part of "Bunch," a street flower-girl. She has nothing to do with the action of the piece, and the brief episode in which she is introduced is ridiculous even for puerility; but Miss Lydia Cowell's "little bit of realism" is, from first to last, simply superb.

At Sadlers' Wells, Miss Isabel Bateman has successfully reproduced the revival of "Othello," with Mr. Charles Warner as the Moor, Mr. Hermann Vezin as Iago, Miss Bateman herself as Desdemona, and Mrs. Crowe as Emilia—the last a well-known and splendid impersonation. The audiences at this popular house have been excellent, even during the bitterness of the frost. On the withdrawal of "Othello," a week or so hence, Mr. Hermann Vezin and Mr. Charles Warner will alternate the parts of Macbeth and Macduff, Mrs. Crowe playing Lady Macbeth.

Several streets on both banks of the Thames have again been flooded, in consequence of high tides.

The twenty-first annual meeting of the Associated Chambers of Commerce of the United Kingdom was opened on Tuesday at the Westminster Palace Hotel. Mr. Monk, M.P., the senior vice-president of the Association, presided. The report of executive council was adopted. Mr. Monk, M.P., was elected president, in place of the late Mr. Whitewell, and Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., was elected vice-president, in the room of Mr. Monk, M.P. Motions were submitted, and some of them carried, in reference to the questions of the Bankruptcy Law, Local Courts, Bills of Sale, the Law of Partnership, County Courts Jurisdiction, County Courts Procedure, Bills of Exchange, Customs Overtime, and the Load Line.

"MIND AND MATTER."

"'What is mind?'—'No matter.' 'What is matter?' 'Never mind,'" said that illustrious authority Mr. Punch. And yet the great problem with the metaphysicians and scientists of all ages as to the nature of either; as to whether they are indeed separable, and not varied manifestations of the conditions and forces of a Something, or Entity, which we call Nature—is still unsettled! They all end no nearer than when they started to the real goal of their ingenious inquiries. All they learn is to know more surely that what they seek is unknowable.

The old gentleman in the picture we have engraved is, we take it, absorbed in the folio of some older speculator on the nature of "mind" or "matter," or both—and what study so fascinating? His absorption is so complete that he forgets the meal he has commenced, neglecting even the potato which the cat has left him after purloining his meat. And have we not all become similarly oblivious when poring over the marvels of science, the mysteries of metaphysics, or even a fresh novel? The artist—Mr. Wuckes—is, however, we fear, a little epicurean in the moral that it seems he would have us draw. Are we to shut up the book and eat and drink, for to-morrow we die? Would not this be, as it were, exchanging our birthright for a mess of pottage?

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

ITALY.

The King and Queen arrived at Naples on Thursday week. On their passage through Potenza and Salerno they were greeted with enthusiastic ovations, and on their arrival at Naples they were welcomed with immense cheering from a large crowd assembled at the railway station. King Humbert and Queen Margherita arrived at Rome yesterday week, early in the morning, and were received at the railway station by the Ministers, the Presidents of the Senate and Chamber of Deputies, several members of both Houses, and the civil and military authorities. An enormous crowd cheered their Majesties on their way to the palace.

Signor Cairoli stated on Tuesday, in the Chamber of Deputies, that Italy had agreed to take part in the fresh negotiations upon the Turco-Hellenic question. A Divorce Bill has been introduced in the Chamber.

SPAIN.

After a speech from Signor Canovas del Castillo, the Senate on Monday adopted the Address in reply to the Royal Speech by 144 votes to 48.

Severe floods have again occurred, and much damage has been done in several provinces.

GERMANY.

Prince Bismarck opened the new Economic Council at Berlin on Thursday week, and explained the purpose which it is proposed to carry out by means of this organisation.

The Lower House of the Prussian Diet rejected on Thursday week, on the second reading, by 254 votes to 115, Herr Windthorst's bill excluding the celebration of mass and the administration of the sacraments from the penalties imposed by the ecclesiastical laws. Last Saturday the Lower House continued the discussion of Herr Richter's motion to make the proposed remission of taxation permanent. Clause 1 of the bill proposed by the Budget Committee was adopted by 243 votes to 106, and the remainder of the clauses were then passed, with some additions to which the Government assented. On Monday the House resumed consideration of the Budget, approving, among other things, on a third reading, the bill for abating some direct taxes.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

The Upper House of the Austrian Reichsrath last Saturday passed the bill for the construction of the Bosna Valley Railway.

On the same day the Lower House of the Diet at Pesth concluded the general debate on the bill for taxing articles of consumption, such as beer, coffee, sugar, &c., the Government majority in favour of the bill being 207 votes against 186.

The Poor-Law Treaty with Belgium has been adopted in the Lower House of the Reichsrath.

Cardinal Kutscher, the Archbishop of Vienna, died on Thursday week from the results of an attack of apoplexy. He was seventy years of age. On Monday the Cardinal Archbishop was buried, with great ecclesiastical and military pomp, at the Cathedral of Saint Stephen at Vienna, the Emperor of Austria, the Archdukes, and a large number of Church dignitaries and Court officials attending the service.

In preparation for the Great International Exhibition of Art Products, which is to be held in Vienna in 1882, several meetings have been held, and the progress made is satisfactory.

The population of Agram has again been thrown into consternation by the renewal of the earthquakes.

RUSSIA.

A despatch from General Scobeleff dated on Monday announces that after nine hours' fighting that day he had stormed all the positions at Geok Tepe, pursued the enemy for a considerable distance, and captured a quantity of munitions of war and provisions. In celebration of General Scobeleff's victory a thanksgiving service took place in St. Petersburg on Thursday week, the Emperor held a reception of Notables, and the city was decorated.

GREECE.

The Chamber of Deputies reassembled on Monday, and the proceedings were characterised by warlike speeches from the Prime Minister and the leader of the Opposition. M. Coumoundouros made a statement concerning the position of affairs. He said that the Conference proposed by the Porte would have results more injurious to the interests of Greece than the rejected arbitration proposal; but the Hellenic Government had up to the present time received no information, directly or indirectly, from the foreign Ministers in Athens respecting the proposed Conference. M. Tricoupis, the leader of the Opposition, agreed with the Premier in the view he took of the projected Conference, the object of which, he considered, was to deprive Greece of the rights she had derived from the decisions of the Berlin Conference. But the House wished to know what the Government had done and what they intended to do, should Europe decide to deprive Greece of some of her rights—what number of troops could be concentrated at a given moment on the frontier, and what measures had been taken for fortifying the kingdom in the event of a defensive war? The Chamber afterwards passed the first reading of a bill providing for the compulsory contribution of draught animals and vehicles for the use of the Government while the mobilisation is proceeding.

AMERICA.

Mr. Blaine, in the Senate yesterday week, made an elaborate speech in opposition to a resolution for permitting the purchase and American registration of foreign-built ships, and declared that the resolution indorsed a policy which would lead to the permanent dependence of the United States upon England for ships. Mr. Blaine's bill provides for a system of subsidies for American ocean mail-steamers. A bill was introduced in the Senate last Saturday appropriating 100,000 dols. for the purpose of fitting out a ship in the United States Navy to go in search of the Arctic exploring-vessel Jeanette.

The Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate have reported in favour of the ratification of the treaties recently concluded with China.

The House of Representatives has adopted a resolution which was recently presented asking Mr. Evarts, the Secretary of State, for information relative to the Halifax Fishery Commission and Professor Hind's charges.

At a joint meeting of the Board of Trade and Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, it has been resolved to request the Californian Legislature to urge Congress to grant a charter to the Nicaragua Canal Company.

In his message to the Legislature, the Governor of New York State urges the necessity of immediate action being taken to suppress the cattle disease. A bill has been introduced in the New York Senate to incorporate the Mexican Southern Railroad Company, with General Grant, General Porfirio Diaz, ex-President of Mexico, and several leading American railway capitalists, as incorporators.

Murders and outrages on the whites continue to be committed by the Apache Indians.

CANADA.

The Dominion House of Commons had an "all-night sitting" simultaneously with that in our own Parliament last week. The result was the rejection by 140 votes to 54 of Mr. Blake's amendment asking the House not to ratify the Pacific Railway contract. The House yesterday week passed the second reading of the resolutions ratifying the Government contract for the construction of the Pacific Railway by 108 against 46 votes. The Premier, Sir John A. Macdonald, subsequently introduced a bill, based upon the resolutions, for giving the contract the force of law. The bill was read a first time. On Monday the House passed the second reading of the bill, which was afterwards considered in a Committee of the whole House and reported; and on Tuesday the bill was passed by 128 votes against 49, all the amendments being rejected.

The Canadian Trade and Navigation Returns for the past fiscal year show that the value of the exports exceeded that of any year since 1874. They also show an excess of exports over imports to the amount of 1,421,711 dols. The increase in the trade with Great Britain over that of 1879 was 13,000,000 dols., and the decrease of the trade with the United States was 8,000,000 dols.

Professor Hind has written another letter to the Marquis of Lorne, in which he says that he gave information of the falsification of the fishery statistics to the British officials before the Halifax Commission met.

The Quebec Legislative Assembly has been prorogued until March 21. An Ottawa telegram announces the death of M. Letellier Saint Just, late Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec.

INDIA.

Lord Ripon's health, the Times correspondent at Calcutta states, continues to improve steadily.

The same correspondent telegraphs several other items of Indian news. The Santhals have risen and attacked Mr. Cossérat, deputy magistrate in the Damin tract, in his camp and rescued the prisoners in charge of his guard. He is said to have subsequently succeeded in reasserting his authority, and troops were being dispatched to the disturbed districts. "Scares" are also reported from Cachar and Buxa on the Bhotan frontier. The Kolapore trial the correspondent still makes light of, and he asserts that "every day makes it more plain that the whole thing is utterly contemptible." It is now finally settled that the formal transfer of Mysore to the Government of the Maharajah will take place early in March. The Governor of Madras will preside at the ceremony. An official investigation has taken place into the alleged disappearance of valuable jewels from the Mysore State Treasury, and the report of the committee is that "the whole of the Palace jewellery has been completely and satisfactorily accounted for, and that the arrangements for its custody are efficient."

As regards Afghanistan, it is stated that the latest authentic news from Cabul, dated about the 17th ult., shows that all is quiet in the city, but the provinces are in a very disturbed state.

Mr. Sorabjee Shapoorjee, the Sheriff of Bombay, a Parsee, has contributed £5000 towards the education of girls of the Parsee community.

The Government of India have offered a prize of £100 for the best manual of hygiene for the use of British soldiers in India.

A telegram has been received from New Zealand stating that the first party of settlers to Mr. G. Vesey Stewart's third special settlement at Te Puke, Bay of Plenty, was received at Tauranga with great enthusiasm, and that the first drawing for land took place on the 26th ult.

A new cruiser for the Chinese squadron at Hong-Kong, called the Loo-Oai, has been launched at Kowloon Docks. She is 108 ft. long and 18 ft. beam, and will be fitted by the company with machinery which will enable her to travel at the rate of thirteen miles per hour.

King Kalakaua, of the Sandwich Islands, arrived at San Francisco on Sunday last, en route to visit the different Asiatic and European nations, with a view to ascertaining the most feasible means of attracting a desirable class of immigrants to Hawaii, in order to take the place of the natives, who seem doomed to extinction within a comparatively short time.

The shock of an earthquake was felt at five p.m. on the the 24th ult. at Bologna, Florence, Venice, Padua, and Ferrara. At Bologna there were also slighter shocks at midnight, and at eight and 9.15 a.m. next day; while Florence likewise had a second shock at 7.53 a.m. on the 25th. An earthquake in Switzerland, on the 27th ult., threw down one hundred chimneys in Berne, and split many buildings from top to bottom.

In London 2864 births and 2114 deaths were registered last week. Allowing for increase of population, the births exceeded by 196, and the deaths by 347, the average numbers of the corresponding week of the last ten years. The deaths included 52 from smallpox, 28 from measles, 45 from scarlet fever, 8 from diphtheria, 43 from whooping-cough, 2 from typhus fever, 12 from enteric fever, 5 from ill-defined forms of continued fever, 8 from diarrhœa, and 2 from dysentery. The number of smallpox patients in the Metropolitan Asylum Hospitals, which had steadily increased from 77 to 516 in the thirteen preceding weeks, further rose to 520 on Saturday last. The deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs, which had been 371, and 617 in the two preceding weeks, further rose last week, under the influence of the continued low temperature, to 702, and exceeded the corrected average number in the corresponding week of the last ten years by 249: of these 481 were attributed to bronchitis, and 120 to pneumonia. Different forms of violence caused 74 deaths.

THE COURT.

Her Majesty remains in quiet retirement at Osborne, the days being little varied from their usual routine of home pursuits, and the general walks and drives, now that the roads are passable. The Empress Eugénie frequently joins the family circle at Osborne, as well as accompanying the Queen out of doors; her Majesty also often passing an hour with the Empress at Osborne Cottage.

Prince Leopold returned to Osborne last Saturday from town. The Right Hon. G. Shaw-Lefevre (First Commissioner of Works) joined the Royal dinner circle.

Divine service was performed at the house on Sunday by the Rev. George Connor, Vicar of Bridport, the Queen, Princess Beatrice, and Prince Leopold being present. Mr. Connor remained to dine.

Prince Leopold left for London on Monday. Captain J. R. Slade, Royal Horse Artillery, lately returned from Afghanistan, was included in the Royal dinner circle. Madame D'Arcas, Mdlle. Rouher, the Duc de Bassano, and the suite of the Empress Eugénie have also dined with the Queen.

Her Majesty and Princess Beatrice furnished gifts for the Christmas-Tree at the Annual Christmas entertainment given on Monday evening to the choir and schools of the Savoy by the members of the Royal Savoy Club.

In addition to the sum of money contributed by the Queen to the general fund for relieving the poor of the metropolis during the present distress, her Majesty has recently caused to be distributed, through the Rev. T. Teignmouth Shore, a quantity of warm clothing, coals, and blankets to the suffering poor in various parts of London.

The Hon. Amy Lambart has succeeded the Hon. Mary Pitt as Maid of Honour in Waiting; and the Hon. Ismay Fitzroy has arrived at Osborne.

We are authorised to state that her Majesty will hold a Drawingroom the second week in March, in addition to that announced for the 25th inst.; and that the Prince of Wales will hold a Levée towards the end of March, in addition to the one announced for the 21st inst.

Mr. James Risdon Bennett, M.D., President of the Royal College of Physicians, and Lieutenant-Colonel A. Need, Lieutenant of the Yeomen of the Guard, are to be knighted.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince and Princess of Wales, with their daughters, were at church as usual on Sunday at St. Mary Magdalene's, the Rev. F. Hervey officiating. Their Royal Highnesses terminated their sojourn at Sandringham on Monday, and, accompanied by their daughters, arrived at Marlborough House, where they will remain for the Parliamentary season. The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, Princess Louise of Lorne, and the Duke of Cambridge dined with the Prince and Princess. The Duke and Duchess of Connaught lunched with their Royal Highnesses at Marlborough House on Tuesday. The Prince and Princess and Princesses Louise, Victoria, and Maud of Wales attended in the afternoon a grand military assault of arms and gymnastic performance at the Royal Albert Hall in aid of the Afghan War Relief Fund. The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh and children, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, Princess Louise, Prince Leopold, the Duke of Cambridge, and the Duke and Duchess of Teck were also present. In the evening the Prince attended Mr. Edward Whymper's lecture on "Chimborazo and Cotopaxi," given to the members of the Alpine Club at the Royal Institution.

Letters from the flying squadron, with which are the Princes Albert Victor and George of Wales, in the Bacchante, describe the ceremonies which were observed in crossing the line on Nov. 29, when such of the officers and men as had not previously crossed the line were subjected to the time-honoured ordeal, Prince Louis of Battenberg, on board the Inconstant, being one of the victims. The proceedings on the Bacchante were similar, the Royal midshipmen, taking their turn in the shaving and ducking with the rest of the gun-room officers, entering heartily into the fun.

The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh arrived at Clarence House, St. James's, on Monday, from Eastwell Park. The Duchess has appointed the afternoon of May 28 for the annual distribution of prizes to her Majesty's choir and schools of the Savoy, at which her Royal Highness will preside in theatre of Burlington House. On the following Monday the annual concert will be given by the choir in the Theatre of the Royal School of Mines.

Princess Louise of Lorne, accompanied by the Duke and Duchess of Teck and Count and Countess Gleichen, was present at the concert of the Earl of Dunmore at Aberdeen House. Her Royal Highness and Prince Leopold, with Lord Brooke, attended the last afternoon performance of the "Children's Pinafore." Mr. Grossmith's entertainment at the Opera Comique; and in the evening they were at the Gaiety Theatre. Their Royal Highnesses went to the Royal Court Theatre the next night.

Princess Augusta Victoria of Holstein-Augustenburg, whose marriage with Prince William of Prussia takes place on the 27th inst. at Berlin, has left Cumberland Lodge for Germany. The Princess, who was accompanied by Prince Christian and Princess Caroline Matilda, her sister, travelled to Victoria, and thence by the Chatham and Dover Railway to Queenborough, crossing in one of the Zceland Steam-Ship Company's boats to Flushing, whence the journey was continued, viâ Cologne, by train.

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught and Prince Leopold were at the Gaiety Theatre on Tuesday evening.

The Empress Eugénie went to Bournemouth on Monday to visit the Queen of Sweden at Craig Head, on the East Cliff. The Empress crossed from Osborne to Southampton in the Royal yacht Alberta, and proceeded to Bournemouth by train, being met by the Queen at the East Station. The Empress drove to the Royal Bath Hotel in an open carriage, and subsequently drove along East Cliff to Craig Head House. Her Majesty remained with the Queen for a couple of hours, and then returned to the hotel, leaving Bournemouth by the 3.40 p.m. train on her return to Osborne Cottage.

The Empress of Austria, travelling as the Countess of Hohenembs, will arrive at Combermere Abbey, Whitchurch, Salop, on the 17th inst., for the hunting season.

His Excellency Count Münster returned to the German Embassy, Carlton House-terrace, last Saturday, from Brighton, having recovered from his recent severe indisposition.

The Lord President of the Council and Countess Spencer had a dinner last Saturday at Spencer House, St. James's, after which Lady Spencer had a large reception. The Countess has another reception on the 12th inst.

The marriage of Mr. Alexander Henry Wylie, of North Berwick, and Miss Louisa Lavinia Jennings, only child of the Rev. John Jennings, Archdeacon and Canon of Westminster, was solemnised on Tuesday in Westminster Abbey. Lord Beaumont acted as best man. The service, which was choral, was performed by the Dean of Westminster, assisted by Canon Farrar and the Rev. S. Flood Jones.

THE SILENT MEMBER.

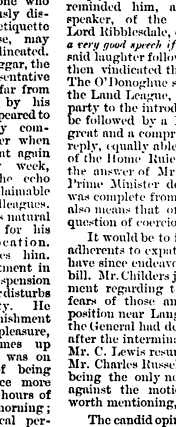
There is no denying it. Parliament is in a bad way. Public attention has been confined to the linked sourness long drawn out of the inordinately prolonged sittings in the Lower House. But the lethargy of the Lords has at length become marked by its contrast with the doings in the Chamber where speech accumulates but bills decay. It has previously been intimated that Earl Granville has no reason to vex his soul at the scarcity of Legislative work. Is not the control of the most important department of State enough to tax the noble Earl's energies? But, with plenty of time hanging heavily on their hands, the noble Lords the Leaders of the Opposition would assuredly lose nothing in public estimation were they to generally take the initiative, and, by emulating the law-making zeal of Earl Cairns, who has reintroduced his land bills, egg on the Government to legislative activity in the House of Lords. It is no exaggeration to say that a recent sitting was taken up solely with a social chat between the Lord Chancellor and Earl Granville on the woolsack, a conversation between Lord Beaconsfield and Earl Beauchamp on the front Opposition bench, an utterly uninteresting question and answer, and the Foreign Secretary's smiling motion for adjournment: five minutes in all! Although a little longer time was devoted yesterday week to Lord Wavency's motion in favour of the retention of Candahar, which idea the Marquis of Lansdowne and the Earl of Dunraven favoured, but Lord Enfield and the Duke of Argyll condemned; although the second reading of Earl Spencer's comprehensive Rivers Conservancy and Floods Prevention Bill occupied their Lordships till close upon the dinner hour on Monday; and although a little over a quarter of an hour was taken up on Tuesday with the Earl of Camperdown's exceedingly apt suggestion that the Metropolitan Water Bill should be introduced in the Upper House—yet assembling merely to disperse is still the rule with their Lordships.

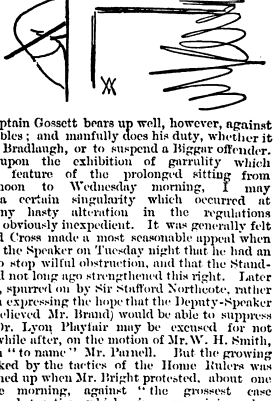
The Speaker of the House of Commons, in putting forth his giant's strength last Wednesday to check the irreconcilable band of Home Rulers, opportunely reminded them that the Ministerial measure for the Protection of Person and Property in Ireland had, in its initial stage, been under discussion for five days. A Past Master in the art of Obstruction, one who has conspicuously disregarded the etiquette of the House, may here be delineated. Mr. Joseph Biggar, the chosen representative of Cavan, so far from being cowed by his suspension, appeared to be as smugly complacent as ever when he took his seat again on Thursday week, cheered to the echo by his irrechainable Home Rule colleagues. Mr. Biggar has natural qualifications for his peculiar vocation. Nothing ruffles him. Neither indictment in Dublin nor suspension in Westminster disturbs his equanimity. He bears his punishment as if it were pleasure, and ever comes up smiling. He was on the verge of being suspended once more in the small hours of Wednesday morning; and his stoical persistence in what is to him the recreation of Obstruction, coupled with an uncomplimentary epithet he was supposed to have applied to Mr. Millbank, but denied having uttered, appears to have enraged the hon. member for the North Riding of Yorkshire to such a degree that he called Mr. Biggar "an impudent scoundrel," for the use of which figure of speech the hon. member had formally to apologise to the House. This is an instance of the episodes which occasionally cropped up to vary the monotony of the all-night sittings.

Mr. Henry Labouchere, who took up the thread of the debate on the Irish peace preservation bill on Thursday week, may be credited with having made one of the very few effective speeches that have relieved a protracted and wearisome discussion. Mr. Labouchere may be imagined (after a glance at the etching) rising from the advantageous seat he occupies on the front bench below the Ministerial gangway, and standing well out on the floor of the House to deliver a well-sustained flank fire at Ministers for their proposed interference with the liberty (but Mr. Forster only seeks to put down the license) of the subject in Ireland. If the coldness of his measured tones repelled sympathy, the vivacity and point of his argument held a crowded House captive. The senior member for Northampton, stimulated in his opposition by the shouts of the beaming Home Rulers, maintained that precedents proved the country had always been very adverse to the suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act, and entered into a skilful analysis of the official returns, with the view of showing, and not unsuccessfully, that a multitude of trifling offences had been represented as outrages, and that really agrarian outrage was not so rampant in Ireland as to justify the introduction of Coercion. Mr. Labouchere's scathing speech clearly made a marked impression upon Mr. Gladstone, who sat with Mr. Forster, Lord Hartington, and Mr. Bright on the Treasury bench.



Mr. Bright the same evening made the third noteworthy speech of the debate up to that period. The Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster is, as a coiner of phrases that cling to their victims, perhaps the superior of Lord Beaconsfield himself. Speaking with that silvery clearness of articulation which makes his oratory unfailingly acceptable, Mr. Bright repaid Mr. Joseph Cowen for some of that acrid criticism he is fond of applying to the present Government. The senior member for Newcastle-on-Tyne (here etched in the pilot coat and wideawake in whose freedom he likes modestly to revel, in an out-of-the-way corner of the Radical benches), had on the previous day vigorously assailed the Ministry for daring to claim precedence for Mr. Forster's bill. Mark how neat was Mr. Bright's retort! The right hon. gentleman simply said Mr. Cowen reminded him, as a speaker, of the late Lord Ribblesdale, of whom an hon. member said, "He makes a very good speech if you do not listen to what he says." Need it be said laughter followed Mr. Cowen's disconfiture? Mr. Bright then vindicated the Anti-Corn Law League from the stigma The O'Donoghue sought to cast upon it by coupling it with the Land League, and insisted that he would not have been a party to the introduction of the Coercion Bill if it were not to be followed by a Land Bill, which he trusted would be "a great and a comprehensive measure." Mr. O'Connor Power's reply, equally able in delivery and in argument, put the case of the Home Rulers as clearly as it could well be put. But the answer of Mr. Gladstone the following night, when the Prime Minister delivered an eloquent and masterly address, was complete from the point of view of the Government, which also means that of the vast majority of the Opposition on the question of coercion.

It would be to imitate the prolixity of Mr. Parnell's devoted adherents to expatiate on the idle talk by means of which they have since endeavoured to eke out the debate on Mr. Forster's bill. Mr. Childers just contrived on Monday to introduce a statement regarding the Transvaal War calculated to calm the fears of those anxious with regard to Sir George Colley's position near Laing's Neck: the House heard with relief that the General had declined further reinforcements. But thereafter the interminable theme of Ireland was soon returned to, Mr. C. Lewis resuming the discussion, and the lucid speech of Mr. Charles Russell and fluent periods of Mr. A. M. Sullivan being the only noticeable bits of real argument vouchsafed against the motion, among the supporters of which, it is worth mentioning, were Mr. Hopwood and Mr. Broadhurst.



The candid opinion of the urbane and experienced Serjeant-at-Arms, Captain Ralph Gossett, on the rakish proceedings of this and last week would not be without interest. As the authorised representative of a staff of obliging officials, the Serjeant-at-Arms (limned as he sits in his chair of state at the bar of the House, ever courteously attentive to the wants of members) might with reason protest against the undue strain put upon them. Captain Gossett bears up well, however, against such sea of troubles; and manfully does his duty, whether it be to arrest a Bradlaugh, or to suspend a Biggar offender. Not dwelling upon the exhibition of garrulity which was the main feature of the prolonged sitting from Monday afternoon to Wednesday morning, I may remark upon a certain singularity which occurred at its close. Any hasty alteration in the regulations of the House is obviously inexpedient. It was generally felt that Sir Richard Cross made a most seasonable appeal when he suggested to the Speaker on Tuesday night that he had an inherent right to stop wilful obstruction, and that the Standing Order passed not long ago strengthened this right. Later on Mr. Childers, spurred on by Sir Stafford Northcote, rather tardily joined in expressing the hope that the Deputy-Speaker (who had then relieved Mr. Brand) would be able to suppress the scandal. Dr. Lyon Playfair may be excused for not acting, a little while after, on the motion of Mr. W. H. Smith, who desired him "to name" Mr. Parnell. But the growing indignation evoked by the tactics of the Home Rulers was pungently summed up when Mr. Bright protested, about one o'clock in the morning, against "the grossest case of insult and obstruction which, in my opinion, has ever been exhibited." Throughout the small hours, nevertheless, did the small body of Irish members, about a score, struggle to secure the adjournment; and the game was kept up till nine o'clock on Wednesday morning. The Speaker then resumed his place, and at last firmly defined in a few clear sentences the exact position of affairs, and summarily put the question to the House. Dr. Lyon's amendment—aiming to give precedence to remedial over coercive measures—was negatived by 164 to 19 votes. After a few shouts of "Privilege!" the Home Rulers filed out of the House, Mr. Forster's bill was read the first time. Now, as the Speaker's direct intervention brought about this desired result, did not his "inherent' power render it unnecessary for Mr. Gladstone to have recourse to a form of clôture? Briefly put, the Premier's motion amounted to this:—

If, upon notice given, a motion be made that the state of public business is urgent, and if, on the call of the Speaker, forty members shall support it by rising in their places, the Speaker shall forthwith put the question, no debate, or amendment, or adjournment being allowed.

This memorable sitting, which lasted forty-one hours, was at length concluded. But the whole of the Wednesday afternoon was afterwards monopolised by the fruitless discussion of another Irish motion for adjournment (rejected by 278 to 44 votes), and an endeavour on the part of Mr. Parnell to move that the Speaker had been guilty of a breach of privilege in refusing to permit further debate.

MUSIC.

Miss Dora Schirmacher was again the pianist at the Popular Concert of Saturday afternoon, when she played, with brilliant execution (and occasionally somewhat exuberant energy), Beethoven's sonata, "quasi fantasia," in E flat, from op. 27; and, in response to the following applause, a waltz by Chopin. Cherubini's string quartet in E flat, led by Madame Norman-Néruda in association with Mr. L. Ries, Herr Straus, and Signor Piatti; and Mozart's clarinet quintet by these artists and Mr. Lazarus, respectively opened and closed the programme, which comprised Signor Piatti's performance of his own "Elegia" and "Siciliana" for violoncello, and vocal pieces by Madame Patey. The concert of Monday evening brought forward—for the first time here—some variations for Pianoforte and Violoncello by Herr Wilhner, and a Pianoforte trio by Mr. Davenport. The variations are ingeniously constructed, but, like the theme which gives rise to them, are dull and uninteresting. The trio is cleverly written, but consists too largely of mere passages of executive display for the respective instruments. The second of the three movements ("Andante") is the most interesting. Both works were finely played; the first by Mdlle. Krebs and Signor Piatti, the other by the same artists and Madame Norman-Néruda. The other instrumental pieces call for no specific mention. Mr. Harper Kearton sang, with good effect, Mozart's "Dalla sua pace," and Handel's "Love sounds the alarm."

On Saturday evening Berlioz's "Faust" music was again repeated at St. James's Hall, under the direction of Mr. Charles Hallé, the solo vocalists having been—as at the last performance—Miss M. Davies, Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. Santley, and Mr. Pyatt. The Hungarian March, the Ballet of Sylphs; and the Serenade for Mephistopheles, sung by Mr. Santley, were encored. The first of four orchestral concerts at St. James's Hall conducted by Mr. Hallé—with the co-operation of his excellent Manchester band, is to take place this (Saturday) evening. At the third—on Feb. 26—Berlioz's "L'Enfance du Christ" will be given for the first time in London, as recently performed, under Mr. Hallé's direction at Manchester. The dates of the other concerts are Feb. 19 and March 5.

That accomplished pianist Mr. Oscar Beringer gave a pianoforte recital at St. James's Hall on Wednesday afternoon, when his programme was of a very special nature, having comprised Beethoven's leviathan sonata in B flat, op. 106, Weber's sonata in A flat, Brahms's in F minor, and that by Liszt in B minor.

This (Saturday) afternoon the Crystal Palace concerts will be resumed—after the usual Christmas recess—with the twelfth performance of the twenty-fifth series. In the evening the Burns Festival, at the Royal Albert Hall, is to be repeated, again with the co-operation of Madame Christine Nilsson, and under the direction of Mr. W. Carter.

On Tuesday next, Mr. Sims Reeves will give, at St. James's Hall, the first of his projected ballad concerts, himself, his son (Mr. Herbert Reeves), and Miss Minnie Hauk, being among the vocalists announced.

On Thursday, the Royal Society of Musicians will hold its one hundred and forty-third anniversary festival at St. James's Hall, under the presidency of the Duke of Connaught.

Mr. Arthur Sullivan's sacred musical drama, "The Martyr of Antioch," is to be performed next Friday at the third concert of the Sacred Harmonic Society's forty-ninth season.

Next Saturday evening, Feb. 12, the Burns birthday commemoration concert, postponed on account of the severe winter weather, is to take place at St. James's Hall.

We have already referred to Mr. John Ella's transference of the direction of the Musical Union to M. Jules Lasserre, the well-known violoncellist. Mr. Ella's long and successful management of these excellent performances has secured for them a special reputation, which his successor will, no doubt, take a pride in maintaining. Mr. Ella's advanced age entitles him to a period of repose after a long and active career. The dates fixed for the performances referred to are April 26; May 10, 24, and 31; and June 14, 21, and 28.

THE PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The prospectus of the sixty-ninth season has been issued. It announces six concerts to take place on Feb. 24, March 10 and 24, April 7, May 12 and 26. Mr. Cusins retains the office of conductor, which he has held since 1867. Mr. Stanley Lucas's recent resignation of the office of secretary, which he so worthily fulfilled for many years, has been followed by the appointment of Mr. Henry Hersee, who is in every way qualified therefor. The analytical programmes, heretofore supplied by Professor G. A. Macfarren, will now be written by Dr. Hueffer. Some changes have also been made in the direction and general management—new features being the very judicious rule of having two rehearsals, instead of only one, for each concert; and the admission of subscribers to each second rehearsal.

Many important and interesting works will be performed during the season—several for the first time here—special interest attaching to the production of Berlioz's dramatic symphony (with vocal solos and choruses), entitled "Roméo et Juliette," an elaborate composition that has not been heard, in its entirety, for many years in London. This is announced for the second concert, on March 10. At the first of the series, Herr Scharwenka will perform a new pianoforte concerto of his own composition. The dates of the other four concerts are: March 24, April 7, May 12 and 26.

At a meeting of the Reading Town Council held on Monday to receive the report of a committee appointed to consider the offer of the Royal Agricultural Society to hold its show for 1882 in that town, it was stated that subscriptions to the amount of £4000 had been promised, and there would be no difficulty in finding an additional £1000, which would be all that would be required to comply with the society's requirements. An excellent site for holding the show had been found.

The Extra Supplement.

"BEFORE THE MAGISTRATE."

"Disturbed Ireland," of which we unhappily hear too much in these days, finds in Mr. O'Kelly's drawing an Illustration of one painful but needful consequence of giving ear to her seditious Fenian and agrarian intriguers, against the peace of our Sovereign Lady the Queen, against the principles of loyalty and social honesty, and to the ruin of those misguided dupes who are tempted to acts of violence and outrage. The appearance of one of these, a simple-looking youth, "before the Magistrate," in custody of the armed Royal Irish Constabulary, to answer some charge, of which he may or may not be able to clear himself, is the subject of our Engraving. The magistrate, who is not exactly of the class of our English country squires, but a stipendiary official, and probably either a lawyer, or a retired military or naval officer, has a direct and business-like manner of dealing with the case, and will not shilly-shally about it, but will commit this young man for trial, if there be any substantial evidence forthcoming. The mother, grandmother, and sisters of the prisoner, though little of their sorrowful faces can here be seen, express by their several attitudes the grief and fear that his perilous situation has excited in their breasts. It is a very sad affair, and we are very sorry to know that many such cases have recently occurred in Ireland, and it is but too likely that there will be many more, during the present year.

THE FROZEN THAMES AT TWICKENHAM.

Our Illustrations of the scenes during the late hard frost on the Thames at Teddington and Twickenham are from the photographs taken by Mr. J. Thomson's instantaneous process just before the ice broke up. There was no sign of the coming thaw; the thermometer stood at about 25 deg. Fahrenheit, and the ice was thick enough to form a safe highway for ordinary traffic. The Sleighing Club, had they been so disposed, might have made their way in comfort and safety across from the old church to Eel Pie Island.

The first Illustration is a view taken from Eel Pie Island, looking across the river. A dark mark on the ice, towards the left, indicates the spot where the sheep was roasted, and the poor of the parish were regaled with a hearty meal on Saturday, the 22nd ult.

The second of these views gives the wintry aspect of the river, looking up the reach towards "Pope's Villa." The third represents an extemporised sleigh, contrived by a man who had been thrown out of work by the frost. This simple device supplied at once a healthful recreation for the young folk of Twickenham, and temporary, not unprofitable, occupation for its owner.

The process used by Mr. J. Thomson, F.R.G.S., is so rapid, that it becomes possible to photograph thereby almost any scene one pleases. There is also this advantage, that the negative can be taken of the size needed, and placed in a customer's hands the same day on which they are taken. No second negative is required; and the result is fine.

THE IRISH-STEW DINNER AT LIMEHOUSE.

The London Cottage Mission, at its Mission Hall in Conder-street, Limehouse, has provided an abundant and comfortable repast on Wednesdays for hundreds of poor hungry persons, mostly women and children, during the late severe wintry weather. Nearly a thousand sufferers from cold and want assembled before the doors. About two hundred guests could find room, at one time, along the two long tables, with seats at each side, which are shown in our Illustration. Mr. Walter Austin, the founder and honorary director of the Mission, superintended the administration of its seasonable bounty. Miss Napton, the Lady Superintendent, with a numerous staff of assistants, caused the plates, dishes, and basins, the pots and pans, or the jugs, brought by the multitude of guests, to be rapidly filled; and hunger soon emptied them of the rich, hot, Irish stew, till the Mission had exhausted its store for the day. It was painful to acknowledge this limitation to its hospitality, on one of the hardest and bitterest days we have endured, in the recent prolonged visitation of frost and snow and chilling north-east wind. Hundreds of needy applicants were that day sent away from Conder-street without relief. The London Cottage Mission, like many other charitable institutions, is in want of funds. It not only gives these weekly dinners through the winter, but distributes fuel, food, and clothing at the homes of the East-End poor, and sends help to the sick, or to mothers lying-in. Religious services are held in the hall, and there is a reading-room. Subscriptions or donations are received by Mr. Walter Austin, 44, Finsbury-pavement; or by Miss Napton, 304, Burdett-road, Limehouse.

LIMA, THE CAPITAL OF PERU.

The fierce war that has been raging on the western shore of South America, during two or three years past, between the rival Spanish-American Republics of Chili and Peru, must now be near its end. The recent capture of Lima by the Chilian army leaves the result no longer doubtful. We present a view of that city, which is close to the seaport of Callao, and connected with it by a short railway. Lima was founded in 1535, on the banks of the river Rimac, which is crossed by a series of bridges, several of considerable beauty. The city proper occupies the south bank; on the north lies the suburb of San Lazaro, noted for its pleasant walks between double rows of magnificent trees. The streets of the city, which is surrounded by brick fortifications of no great strength, are narrow, crossing each other at right angles, thus dividing the ground into 200 square blocks of buildings. The houses, from the necessity of providing against frequent earthquakes, are mostly low, and built of yielding materials. One peculiarity is the absence of windows looking into the streets. All the better class of houses look upon large interior courtyards, often ornamented with frescoes. As in all cities built under the Spanish regime in South America, the principal point is the Plaza Mayor, or great square, on one side of which stands the Cathedral. Each side of the square measures 170 yards. The cathedral is a stone building some 300 ft. long and 180 wide, under the great altar of which lie the remains of Pizarro. Among other buildings of note may be mentioned the former palace of the Archbishops, lately used as a hall for the meeting of the Legislative Body and the palace of the Spanish Viceroys.

On the recommendation of the Field Marshal commanding-in-Chief, the silver medallion of the Royal Humane Society has been voted to Lieutenant Francis M. Aitken, of the 93rd Highlanders, Lieutenant Alfred H. Middleton, of the same regiment, and Lieutenant and Adjutant Charles R. Orde, of the Rifle Brigade, for acts of gallantry. On the recommendation of the Duke of Edinburgh, the society's medal has also been awarded to Peter Flynn.

WEATHER-LORE OF THE SUN.

As few subjects possess a wider interest than the weather, it is not surprising that from the earliest period various proverbs embodying superstitious fancies should have been associated with it, not to mention the manifold prognostics that have been drawn from the phenomena of nature. Thus, not only has each country its own popular lore for forecasting the weather, but, as in our own country, this oftentimes varies in different localities, some counties possessing pieces of weather-wisdom peculiar to themselves. As it is not, perhaps, known to most of our readers how extensive and curious are these items of weather-wisdom, it is proposed during the present year to give, from month to month, a brief outline of them as gathered, for instance, from the sun, moon, stars, clouds, winds, flowers, and animals. Commencing, then, with the Sun, we find that from time immemorial indications of the coming weather have been foretold from its various aspects. Thus, Virgil, in his first Georgic (438) alludes to these—

> Above the rest the Sun, who never lies,
> Foretells the change of weather in the skies;
> For if he rise unwilling to his race,
> Clouds on his brow, and spots upon his face:
> Or if through mists he shoots his sullen beams,
> Fringed of light, in loose and straggling streams,
> Suspect a drizzling day and southern rain,
> Fatal to fruits, and flocks, and promised grain.

Amongst most nations the Sun's redness on rising or setting has been regarded as ominous, and furnished materials for various proverbs. One old English adage informs us that—

> If red the sun begins his race
> Be sure that rain will fall apace;

a notion referred to by Christ in St. Matthew's Gospel (xvi. 2, 3): "When it is evening, ye say, It will be fair weather, for the sky is red; and in the morning, It will be foul weather to-day, for the sky is red and lowring." It may be remembered, too, how graphically Shakspeare speaks of this popular rule in his "Venus and Adonis:"—

> Like a red morn, that ever yet betokened
> Wreck to the seamen, tempest to the field;
> Sorrow to shepherds, woe unto the birds,
> Gusts and foul flaws to herdmen and to herds.

And the familiar rhyme tells us how

> Sky red in the morning
> Is a sailor's warning.

Referring to Continental observations, we are told in Milan that "if the morn be red, rain is at hand;" and, again, "if the sky be red when the morning star is shining, there will be rain during the week." As is well known, however, a red sunset is just as propitious as the former is unlucky:—"a red sky at night being a shepherd's delight;" and, according to a saying formerly very current in this country,

> The evening red, morning grey,
> Is a sign of a fair day.

Indeed, there are numerous proverbs on this subject, all to the same purpose; a Scotch one being as follows:—

> The evening red and the morning grey,
> Is the sign of a bright and cheery day;
> The evening grey and the morning red
> Put on your hat or you'll wet your head.

In Italy it is commonly said that "a red evening and a grey morning set the pilgrim a-walking;" and at Malta, "a red sunset says, get your horse ready." In Bohemia, however, the rule is reversed, a red sunrise being thought to betoken a fine day; a red sunset, wet weather.

A great mist before the sun rises is generally considered to presage fair weather, and, according to a popular proverb,

> A high dawn indicates wind,
> A low dawn indicates fair weather;

which Fitzroy explains thus:—"A high dawn is when the first indications of daylight are seen over a bank of clouds; a low dawn is when the day breaks on or near the horizon, the first streaks of light being very low down." An ancient piece of weather lore informs us that if the rising sun be encompassed with a circle of white clouds which equally fly away it is a sign of fine weather—whereas Virgil tells us that a gloomy sunrise is unauspicious:—

> If Aurora with hair open eyes,
> And a pale sickly cheek sanntes the skies,
> How shall the vine with tender leaves defend
> Her teeming clusters when the storms descend.

There is a prevalent notion that if a change of weather occurs about the time when the sun is crossing the meridian it will be for twelve hours at least. The proverbs relating to the sunset are even, perhaps, more numerous than those associated with sunrise, every aspect being supposed to denote the coming weather. Thus Shakspeare, in "Richard II." (ii. 4), referring to a popular belief, tells how

> The sun sets weeping in the lowly west,
> Witnessing storms to come, woe and unrest.

And when, too, it sets like a bull of fire, it is said to have "water in its eye." Again, a pale sunset is a bad sign, if we may believe the rhyme—

> If the Sun goes pale to bed,
> 'Twill rain to-morrow, it is said.

A hazy sunset, too, is equally unsatisfactory, for we are told that "when the air is hazy, so that the solar light fades gradually, and looks white, rain will most certainly follow." When, however, at the time of sunset there is a clear sky, it is said to indicate calm weather:—

> When the Sun sets bright and clear
> An easterly wind you need not fear.

But if, on the other hand, the sky is covered with fleecy clouds, it is an indication of wind:—

> When the sun sets in a bank
> A westerly wind we shall not lack.

A golden sunset is generally regarded as one of the most favourable tokens of fine weather, in allusion to which Shakspeare, in his "Richard III.," says:—

> The weary sun hath made a golden set,
> And, by the bright track of his fiery car,
> Gives signal of a goodly day to-morrow.

But when the sun at setting casts a lurid red light on the sky as far as the zenith, it is said to be an infallible sign of storms and gales of wind. Once more, the streaks of light occasionally seen when the sun shines through broken clouds are, according to an old superstitious fancy, believed to be pipes reaching into the sea, the water, it is supposed, being drawn up through them into the clouds, ready at any moment to be discharged upon the earth in the shape of rain. With this may be compared a similar idea given by Virgil (Georgic I. 380), "et bibit ingens arcus." This superstition, however, is curious, containing, as it does, some vestiges of truth. Although, as has been pointed out, the streaks of sunshine are no actual pipes, yet they are at any rate visible signs of the sun's action, which, by evaporating the waters, provide a store of vapour to be converted into rain. A species of rainbow, without either pillar or arch, having only a base, is known by sailors as the "sun-dog," and is considered indicative of windy, squally weather. In some parts of Sussex the light, fleecy clouds that encircle the sun in windy weather are called "foxy sun-clouds," being supposed to presage changeable and treacherous weather, a notion embodied in the following couplet:—

> Mackerel sky, mackerel sky,
> Never long wet, and never long dry.

HOME NEWS.

In all probability the University boat-race will be rowed on Saturday, April 9.

Mrs. Herbert Williams has given £500 to the funds of the Dorset County Hospital, in memory of her late husband.

Satisfactory progress is being made with the Channel Tunnel borings at Abbott's Cliff, Dover.

Ridley Hall, Cambridge, a building intended for students training for parochial work, was opened yesterday week.

The order for sending out Mrs. Decbee and six lady nurses to the Transvaal has, it is stated, been cancelled.

Sir C. Whetham has been elected, by a large majority, chairman of the Police Committee of the Corporation.

The Deanery of Argyle and the Isles has been conferred on the Rev. A. C. Haldane, Incumbent of Ballachulish.

Mr. Henry Griffith has been elected treasurer of the Honourable Society of Gray's Inn for the ensuing year.

Magnificent displays of the aurora borealis were witnessed on Monday evening at several places in England.

His Excellency the French Ambassador will preside at the annual dinner in aid of the funds of the French Hospital and Dispensary, next Saturday, at Willis's Rooms.

The annual general meeting of the Newsvenders' Benevolent and Provident Institution will be held at the office, 28, Martin's-lane, Cannon-street, City, next Tuesday afternoon.

Mr. John Langton, F.R.C.S., of Harley-street, Cavendish-square, a member of the Board of Examiners in Anatomy and Physiology of the Royal College of Surgeons, has been unanimously elected surgeon to St. Bartholomew's Hospital.

A grand military assault at arms by the gymnastic staff of the Aldershott Gymnasium, in aid of the Afghan War Relief Fund, took place at the Royal Albert Hall on Tuesday afternoon, in the presence of a distinguished audience numbering 8000.

Mr. Ernest Edward Blake, of the Colonial Office, has been appointed Crown Agent for the Colonies, in conjunction with Mr. William Charles Sargeaunt, C.M.G., and Mr. Montagu Frederick Ommanney.

The Mersey Dock Board have agreed to sell to the Midland Railway Company 63,000 square yards of land, situate near the new Docks at the north end of Liverpool, for £350,000. The company intend to devote the land to goods traffic purposes.

The annual festival of the Warehousemen and Clerks' Schools was held at the Cannon-street Hotel on Thursday. Last year the income of these schools, where 220 orphan children are maintained, clothed, and educated, fell short of the expenditure by £800.

An Order in Council was published in Dublin on Monday night stating that, in consequence of the prevalence of foot and mouth disease in certain parts of England, the importation of animals from Great Britain into Ireland is prohibited from Feb. 1 to 28 inclusive.

Sir Henry Holland, M.P., Mr. Bompas, Q.C., and Mr. A. W. Simpson, Recorder of Scarborough, have been elected Benchers of the Honourable Society of the Inner Temple, to fill the vacancies caused by the deaths of Lord Justice Thesiger and Mr. Freeling, and the elevation to the bench of Mr. Williams.

Last Saturday the Judge of the Cambridge County Court appointed a receiver to the estate of the Earl of Hardwicke, under a petition for liquidation. The liabilities are £240,000, but the greater part of this is owing to secured creditors. The value of the assets has not yet been ascertained.

Sir C. F. Smythe, Bart., was elected president, in the place of Mr. Edmund Wright, and Mr. G. D. Harrison, Mayor of Welshpool, vice-president, at the general meeting of the Shropshire and West Midland Agricultural Society, held at Shrewsbury last Saturday.

Sir Bartle Frere read a paper on Tuesday night before the members of the Society of Arts on the resources of South Africa. He described the extent of the mineral wealth which existed, and the fruitful nature of the agricultural districts, concluding by recommending the colony as well adapted for emigrants.

Mr. Edward Whymper gave an address on Tuesday at the Royal Institution, descriptive of his ascents of the Chimborazo and Cotopaxi at the end of 1879 and the beginning of 1880. Mr. C. E. Matthews, late president of the Alpine Club, was in the chair. A vote of thanks to Mr. Whymper was passed, upon the motion of the Prince of Wales.

The returns of metropolitan pauperism for the fourth week of January show that 53,519 indoor and 47,538 outdoor paupers were relieved, making a total of 101,057, as against 98,285 in the corresponding week of last year, and 84,144 in 1879. The north district alone is responsible for nearly 2000 of the increase The number of vagrants relieved was 571.

A suggestion to establish a Chamber of Commerce for London was brought, on the Lord Mayor's invitation, before the consideration of a number of the leading bankers and merchants at the Mansion House yesterday week. The proceedings were private, and the proposal, it is understood, will be the subject of a more extended conference.

Messrs. W. T. Weekes and Co. dispatched from Plymouth on Monday for Sydney, New South Wales, the ship Blairgowrie, 1550 tons, Captain Samuel Park, with 353 emigrants, of whom 150 are English, 22 Scotch, 171 Irish, and 10 foreigners. The Blairgowrie is owned by Messrs. Thompson and Gray, of Glasgow, and chartered by Messrs. F. Green and Co., of London.

Mr. John Pender, M.P., in presiding at the half-yearly meeting of the Eastern Telegraph Company, on Thursday mentioned that £10,000 had been spent in picking up one of their cables at a depth of 2000 fathoms, which had been ten years in the water. The establishment of the fact that it was possible to raise a cable from such a depth gave an additional value to all telegraphic property.

Mr. C. H. Parkes, in presiding at the half-yearly meeting of the Great Eastern Railway, said that, in order to continue their good relations with their employés, the company offered to contribute a larger sum towards the Accident Allowance Fund than formerly, at the same time giving the men liberty to withdraw from the fund and come under the Employers' Liability Act; but out of 13,000 belonging to the fund only five withdrew.

One of the speakers at a recent Land League meeting proposed to Boycott England. He suggested that Mr. Parnell should give the word of order to Irishmen not to wear a hat or shoe made in England, not to drink a cup of tea coming from England, and not to sweeten a cup of tea with sugar coming from Glasgow; and he was sure such an order would be obeyed. But what if England should Boycott Ireland?

Two years ago Sir Henry Havelock was left a valuable estate, now yielding ten thousand pounds a year, on condition that he assumed the testator's name of Allan; but he was not to enjoy the estate until his children had attained their majority, the income in the meantime to accumulate. Sir Henry appealed to the Chancery Division for an allowance from the estate to enable him to educate his sons in a manner to qualify them for their future positions; and Vice Chancellor Malins on Saturday last granted him two thousand seven hundred pounds a year.

ELECTION ITEMS.

Mr. J. McLaren, the Lord Advocate for Scotland, has at length obtained a seat in Parliament. After being defeated at Wigton and Berwick, he was on Thursday week elected, by a majority of 7450 over M. J. E. Jenkins, for the seat vacated by his father, Mr. D. McLaren, in the representation of Edinburgh. The numbers were—the Lord Advocate, 11,390; Mr. Jenkins, 3940. At the general election in April last Mr. Duncan McLaren, the late member, polled 17,807 votes.

Mr. John Edward Redmond, an advanced Home Ruler and member of the Land League, was returned on Monday for New Ross, without opposition, as successor to Mr. J. Foley, who has accepted the Chiltern Hundreds.

The report of the Canterbury Election Commissioners has been issued. They are of opinion that the constituency is not now, as a whole, corrupt. Out of about three thousand voters, perhaps five or six hundred are at all times accessible to bribery.

The Commissioners appointed to inquire into the existence of corrupt practices at Knaresborough report that corrupt practices did not extensively prevail at the election of 1880; that certain persons, whose names are mentioned in the schedule, were guilty of corrupt practices at the same election; that neither Mr. Wood nor Sir H. M. Thompson was guilty of corrupt practices; and that such practices did not extensively prevail at the election of 1874.

The Town Clerk of Preston, at a meeting of the Town Council last week, said that the statement that at the last Parliamentary election there were 3582 voters in the borough who could not write their names was a clerical error. The number should have been 582 only.

The Portrait of the late Mr. Sothern, which we have engraved for this week's publication, is a photograph of the series called "Housesworth's Celebrities," issued by Mr. Housesworth, of San Francisco. The photograph of Mr. Sothern as "Lord Dundreary" is one by Mr. Bassano, of Regent-street, and that of the same actor, as "Brother Sam," is by Messrs. Marcus Ward and Co., of Belfast.

At the Royal Asiatic Society, on Monday week, Sir Henry Rawlinson in the chair, Mr. W. Simpson, our Special Artist late in Afghanistan, read a paper, "On the identification of Nagarahara, in connection with the travels of Hiouen-Thsang at the beginning of the seventh century." Jellalabad is the modern city, and belongs only to the Musselman rule; but in the Buddhist time, when Hiouen-Thsang and Fah-Hian, the Chinese Buddhist Pilgrims, visited the valley, Nagarahara was existing, and is partly described by them. Mr. Simpson's identification places the site at the junction of the Surkh-ab with the Cabul river, about four miles from the present Jellalabad, where a rock, covered with Buddhist remains, is known to the natives as the "Bala Hissar" or Acropolis of an old non-Musselman city.

The Metropolitan Board having been memoralised to take steps to prevent the inundations which frequently occur at Lewisham and Lee, the subject was submitted to the consideration of a committee, and the board directed plans to be prepared for further protecting the Victoria, Albert, and Chelsea Embankments from overflow at high tides.

In the long experience of the National Life-Boat Institution the services of its life-boats during the recent storms appear to be unexampled for bravery, exposure, and determination. The rescued shipwrecked crews on those disastrous occasions form a long list. At some of these rescues the boats' crews were out consecutively, in raging seas and intense cold, twenty and thirty hours at a time, and sometimes a few hours after reaching the shore the life-boatmen have proceeded again and again in reply to signals of distress from endangered ships.

The annual general meeting of the governors of the Cancer Hospital (free), Brompton, was held on the 2nd inst. From the thirtieth annual report of the executive it appears that the hospital is steadily advancing in usefulness, and that during the year there had been an increase of funds. After careful deliberation it has been decided to enlarge the hospital, so as enable a much larger number of patients to be received. Last year 1028 new patients were received, 339 being in and 689 out patients.

EPPS'S COCOA. GRATEFUL and COMFORTING.
"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operation of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately-flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.

This wonderful remedy was discovered by Dr. J. Collis Browne, and the word Chlorodyne coined by him expressly to designate it. There never has been a remedy so vastly beneficial to suffering humanity, and it is a subject of deep concern to the public that they should not be imposed upon by having imitations pressed upon them on account of cheapness and so being the same thing. Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne is a totally distinct thing from the spurious compounds called Chlorodyne, the use of which only ends in disappointment and failure.

"To J. T. Davenport, Esq., 33, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, London.

"Dear Sir,—We embrace this opportunity of congratulating you upon the widespread reputation this lately esteemed medicine has earned for itself, not only in Hindostan, but all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we must question whether a better is imported into the country, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but a very short one. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Cholaraic Diarrhœa, and even in the severer terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never met any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES and Co.,

MR. SOTHERN AS LORD DUNDREARY.

THE LATE MR. E. A. SOTHERN.

MR. SOTHERN AS BROTHER SAM.

THE LATE MR. SOTHERN.

It is a great mistake, and, moreover, it is a cruel injustice to the memory of a most accomplished and versatile comedian, to assume that the lamented Mr. Edward Askew Sothern was what is called, in the technology of the stage, a "one-part actor." He could, indeed, play many parts to admiration; and he must have sustained a large number of varied characters during a career of unflagging industry, but of comparative obscurity, which extended over at least ten years; since, born at Liverpool about 1829, he went in 1851 to the United States, and appeared at the National Theatre, Boston, in the character of Dr. Pangloss; and it was not until 1862 that he took the town by storm as Lord Dundreary, in the late Mr. Tom Taylor's comedy of "Our American Cousin." He had already played Dundreary in the States more than eleven hundred times. I have seen it stated in more than one well-informed quarter that the acceptance of Sothern by the audience at the Haymarket was at the outset dubious and slow, and that for some weeks he played Dundreary to almost empty benches. If such be the case, he must have vaulted into popularity with extreme suddenness. At the period named the writer of these lines, overwhelmed as he was by journalistic and literary labours, scarcely ever entered the doors of a theatre; and he remembers being actually forced by a lady of his acquaintance, for whose critical faculty he entertained the highest respect, to go to the Hay-market to see Sothern, who, as she put it, had literally taken the town by storm. And he remembers in that same year having written in a magazine which he was then conducting, called Temple Bar, under the title of "A Remarkable Dramatic Performance," a lengthy essay on the genius of Sothern, which the writer assumed at the time to have been generally recognised. On the whole, perhaps, Sothern did not find the public acclaim come to him more slowly than it had come to Robson, who had played for months and months at the Grecian Theatre, unnoticed by the press and uncared for by the general public, before he, too, "took the town by storm" in the "Yellow Dwarf" and "Medea," and a score more characters, humorous and serious, at the Olympic.

Sothern was not only inimitable as Dundreary and unapproachably characteristic in "Brother Sam" (which, an adaptation, I think, by John Oxenford, of some German play, further fitted to the stage by Buckstone, was not a good play, and a slightly repulsive one); but, in addition to the two characters in which the artist has delineated him, he was surpassingly excellent in "David Garrick." His performance in "Home," an adaptation of the French "Aventurière," was likewise most excellent; and he appeared at intervals in a whole round of farce characters, all marked by the sparkle of his uncontrollable fun. "The Crushed Tragedian" was scarcely a brilliant success in England, owing to the simple fact that the Tragedian himself was a very lifelike caricature of one Mr. George Jones, an eccentric Anglo-American, the father of the distinguished tragédienne Miss Avonia Jones, and who, for some occult reason, had chosen to assume the style and title of "The Count Joannes." He was always bringing actions against people, and vainly endeavouring to gain popularity in high tragedy parts; and altogether he figured for many years, more or less conspicuously, in the minor Bohemia of New York City. To the British public Sothern's simulacrum of the Count Joannes (he died in great poverty about a year ago) presented no kind of purport nor significance. It was acknowledged to be very clever; but few people were able even dimly to understand what it meant.

I repeat that the excellent actor, brilliant wit, courteous gentleman, and charitable and kindly man who has been taken from us so sadly and so prematurely had many arrows in his well-furnished quiver, in addition to the character of Dundreary. But the public of two worlds decreed that in Dundreary Sothern should be almost exclusively "Lord of the Silver Bow." The Bow is unstrung now, and its sheen is gone; and the Arrows lie around all pointless and unfeathered, not to go home to our hearts, any more. G. A. S.

GRAND FANCY-DRESS BALL AT LIVERPOOL.

The entertainment given on Thursday night last week, in the Townhall of Liverpool, by the Mayor, Mr. W. B. Forwood, and the Mayoress, Mrs. W. B. Forwood, has afforded subjects for an amusing variety of figure Sketches, which fill two pages of this publication. Fancy-dress balls have taken place there, as well as in St. George's Hall, upon several former occasions under the Mayoralty of Sir A. B. Walker, of Lieutenant-Colonel Steble, of Mr. A. B. Forwood, in 1878, and of Mr. J. B. Royden, in 1879. The Townhall, though built at the beginning of this century, is a civic mansion of splendid apartments, worthy of the present position of Liverpool. Below the Mayor's state-rooms, in the "crypt" or vaulted passage to the Council Chamber, special decorations were required, which were contrived and executed by Mr. Gilbert Winter Moss and Mr. Kidson. They hung the walls of this passage with the richest satin embroidery of Japanese and Oriental patterns, suspended corresponding banners from the roof, with a carved Chinese lamp, and ranged a fine collection of enamel dishes and vases along the sides, with about two thousand camellias, while the floor was covered with a Persian carpet. The adjacent corridors were decorated with shrubs and greenhouse flowers. On this lower floor, in the Council Chamber and another room, supper was provided by Mr. Eberle. At the head of the grand staircase, in the principal reception-room, the company arriving, to the number of one thousand ladies and gentlemen, were received during an hour and a half by the Mayor and Mayoress, accompanied by the Earl and Countess of Lathom, with Lady Maud Wilbraham, Lady Claud John Hamilton, and Lord Charles Beresford. The Mayor wore his customary Court dress; the Mayoress was attired as the Queen of Palmyra, in an antique dress of sky-blue satin, with velvet train, trimmed with ermine and silver embroidery; she wore a tiara and silver-spangled veil, silver armlets, and jewellery of pearls, diamonds, and sapphires. Lady Claud John Hamilton appeared as "Dresden China," the Countess of Lathom as Queen Catherine Howard, and Lady Maud Wilbraham as Rowena. The dancing took place in the large ball-room, where a raised dais was put up for the Mayor and Mayoress; also in a smaller ball-room, and in the dining-room. The music for dancing was furnished by Streather's band; the police band had played while the company entered the Townhall.

Among the costumes worn by such a multitude, which represented many notable characters of history, poetry, and romance, the national dresses of many ancient and modern peoples, and the fashions of many different periods, we only mention a few that were much remarked. Mr. Harold King and Mr. E. T. Gardener formed a pair as "the Cheerybls Brothers," from "Nicholas Nickleby;" the reputed originals of that amiable pair having been well-known Manchester men. Mr. C. Langton wore a portentous old-fashioned French walking-dress, as "David Sichel, avocat;" while Mr. H. Stolterfoht appeared as an American merchant; Mr. Robertson Gladstone, a Zouave Captain; Mr. Walter Gladstone, a Montenegrin; Mr. J. Cunningham, Sir Walter Raleigh, the first importer of potatoes and tobacco; Mr. C. Cream, "Bluebeard;" Mr. Alderman Samuelson, "Friar Tuck;" and Mr. E. Mawdsley, "Captain Absolute." Lord Lathom wore the uniform of her Majesty's Yeomen of the Guard, and Lord Charles Beresford, that of a seaman of the Royal Navy. The costumes of many of the ladies were extremely tasteful and pretty; a "sweet girl graduate," a vivandière, a Buy-a-broom girl, a Neapolitan fishwoman, contrasted with "My Great-Grandmother," in old-fashioned English full dress; or with "Olivette," from a recent stage performance; or with the impersonation of "Lawn Tennis." The stewards of the ball were Messrs. G. W. Moss, A. Earle, Dudley Ryder, R. Kellock, A. B. Forwood, T. B. Forwood, jun., F. G. Prange, J. Edwards Moss, Vincent Hall, T. B. Royden, J. G. Livingston, Corbet Lowe, R. E. Graves, T. E. Taylor, and Ernest Inman. The entertainment was kept up from nine o'clock till three in the morning. It was, altogether, a complete success.

LIVERPOOL DURING THE FROST.

Several of the Sketches presented this week show the unusual scenes that were to be observed at Liverpool, during some days of the late severe frost. Immense quantities of floating ice were brought down the river Mersey by the ebb of the high spring tides. The Birkenhead ferry steam-boats, though of considerable size and power, had much difficulty, at times, in crossing the river; while the Rock Ferry and Tranmere service was more than once stopped. Vast numbers of sea-gulls were forced by want of food to come up the estuary and the river; and would tamely or boldly accept pieces of bread or biscuit thrown to them from the steam-boats or from the Liverpool landing-stage. The work of clearing the snow, as well from that place as from the quays and wharves of the docks, gave frequent employment to a number of labourers; but the business of the port was so interrupted as to occasion much distress. Mr. Simpson, the well-known proprietor of the refreshment-room at the Landing Stage, made an effort to get relief for the poor by setting out his customary "bowl," with a placard requesting all passengers to give what they could spare for that kindly purpose. Besides this bowl for the collection of pence or silver, he provided another, to hold crumbs and scraps of food, which he dispensed to "the poor birds;" so that the bipeds, feathered as well as unfeathered, of the Liverpool and Cheshire shores, came in for a share of this popular bounty. In the streets of the town, as of other cities and towns, some temporary obstruction to traffic was caused by the heavy snowfall. A very curious freak of the frost, in the display of icicles which nature produced in a back yard of 53, Lord-street, forms the subject of one of our Artist's sketches. The house was being pulled down by builders' labourers; so that by looking through an opening of the back wall of the shop, into the yard behind, there was a good view of this extraordinary spectacle. The festoons and pendants of ice, with one perfect arch of ice, were like a scene in a Christmas pantomime. An enterprising speculator rented this show for a few days, charging threepence to see it, and made a handsome sum of money.

OLD MASTERS AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

CONCLUDING NOTICE.

In our preceding articles we followed the ebb and flow of the two great tides of art in Italy and the Netherlands, and, speaking generally, the course of these main streams have been widely asunder. In coming to the English school, we find much uniformity and consistency—no steady onward flow since it welled into light, or, rather, burst into life, like a mountain torrent, in the days of Hogarth and Reynolds and Gainsborough. Even the degree of consentaneous advance that obtained near the fountain-head was soon disunited, and in the result no school has branched into so many channels, the produots of no other have been so various, or perhaps so interesting for their individuality, yet so disappointing as a whole—so kaleidoscopic and therefore so fragmentary.

There can be no doubt that our early, and must we not add our best, masters were more studious of their great Continental predecessors, and owned more allegiance to tradition. The germ of a good deal that was done by Hogarth will be found in Dutch genre and "conversation pieces." There is considerable affinity between "The Lady's Last Stake" (55), by that able painter and great satirist, and one or two works by Jan Steen here. As for the subject of this picture, we need scarcely say autre temps, autre mœurs; but the moral to be drawn from the vice of gambling would have had more point—and, indeed, we might almost have expected so much from Hogarth—had the tempter been an older and less well-favoured man. The obligations of Reynolds to Titian and Rembrandt are too obvious and well known to require mention; equally so are Gainsborough's passionate admiration and emulation of Vandyke—to which, indeed, he bore testimony on his death-bed; the Norwich school owes some at least of its excellence to emulation of Dutch models; and did not Turner compete successively with the great Italian and Dutch landscapists before he formed his own style—from which he was too soon to fall almost to the level of the scene-painter.

Sir Joshua Reynolds is nobly represented by works of his mature time, in which his defective education as a draughtsman, and the neglect of detail consequent upon the pressure of fashionable favour, are forgotten before their splendour of colour and potency of effect, and in which are shown to the full that marvellously subtle and sympathetic perception of what are his sitters' most characteristic gestures, expressions, and traits which qualified him as the happiest painter of children art has known. There are several of his groups of children, or with children, all of them delightful; the pretty pair, Master Angerstein and his Sister (30); the magnificent group, in the Great Room, of the children of the first Lord Melbourne, and its pendant of Lady Melbourne, with her little son throwing himself round her neck for a kiss. In this faculty of seizing the fleeting charm of a momentary action Sir Joshua is supreme; each new work of his is a surprise; and he completely escapes the stiffness and formality in portraiture from which none of the Continental masters—not even Titian and Velasquez, Rubens and Vandyke—are entirely, or at least always, free. There is another daring instance of this faculty in the male group of Lord Sydney and Colonel Acland shooting red-deer (181), the former characteristically bent forward at the moment of drawing his arrow to the head. The so-called "Nymph and Pan" (35)—the former, lying nearly nude, listening coyly to an equally bashful swain—presents, in its gaping cracks, melancholy testimony to Reynolds's experiments with bitumen and other untrustworthy colours and materials. Yet, notwithstanding the tesselated surface, what a Titianesque fulness and richness is here! Judged, however, by the highest standard of style and form, this essay in classical idealism falls short of what might be desired: neither the face of the nymph, despite its fascinating girlish beauty, nor her form, are classical in type or feeling.

Gainsborough—the airy, the graceful, the versatile—is likewise represented at his best, as well as but indifferently. The art of Gainsborough is decidedly less solid, robust, and masculine than that of Reynolds; he consequently rarely shines in male portraiture. This tame, weakling, limp, three-quarter-length of Pitt (47) can hardly be accepted as an adequate presentment of so eminent a leader of men. Pitt's features, particularly his up-turned nose, were certainly not of heroic stamp; yet the expression of the force and fire of the young chief's genius must have often transfigured that unpromising exterior; and it is the painter's first business to render the inner man. On the other hand, expression seems to be carried to excess in the killing glance of Miss Tylor's dark, glittering eyes (31), and the triumphant smile of her tightened, glistening, moist lips. Moreover, the flesh is too white; but this has probably arisen from the glazes having vanished, though this has seldom happened to the same extent, apparently, in Gainsborough's works. A far more sympathetic example of the painter is the pretty group of rustic children, "The Wood-Gatherers" (172), notwithstanding that in the brilliant, sketchy handling of the flesh the tones are here and there too dark and spotty. So intense was Gainsborough's love of the country, as well as country-folk, that he is equally at home in the fine, rich, low-toned "Landscape," numbered 50. However slight or conventional in detail, this is vastly more true in general effect, and in the poetical impression it conveys, than the toilsome productions of contemporary realists. Gainsborough's most important work, however, by far—his capo d'opera, probably, and one of the most exquisite masterpieces of female portraiture of any school—is the famous full-length of Lady Ligonier (177)—the tall, lithe figure gracefully posed beside a pedestal surmounted by a bronze statuette, her left elbow resting on the pedestal, and the raised hand supporting her chin, giving, as it were, a point d'appui for the fixed gaze directed steadily, but demurely, at the spectator. As in Leonardo da Vinci's female heads, there is a fascination in those delicately chiselled features, those Sibylline piercing eyes and latent smile, that, once seen, will ever after haunt the memory. The whole-length of rather common-place-looking Lord Ligonier hangs close by (171), but we need not recount the unhappy and finally broken relations of these two.

Hanging as a pendant to Lady Ligonier, and not altogether unworthily is a full-length of Mrs. Bankes, of Kingston Lacy (175), a masterpiece by Romney, the lady also draped in white and leaning against a pedestal—as though to show how nearly he could approach to Gainsborough as well as to Reynolds, both of whom he rivalled in fashionable favour, and for some time successfully. This, too, is beyond question a most charming work—sculpturesque in its monumental repose and the simplicity of its contours and treatment, and distinguished by a fine sense of beauty. Yet there is a certain routine mannerism and rather empty equality in the execution, and a slight approach to meretriciousness, which falls short of the less formal yet more chaste refinement of Gainsborough.

The remaining English pictures need not detain us long. In portraiture, the most noteworthy work is a large group, from Buckingham Palace, of the three Princesses, Mary, Sophia, and Amelia, daughters of George III. (133), painted with a free and full brush by Copley. The workmanship is sound and honest portion by portion; but, viewed as a whole, we feel that the effect should be more focussed: the values are too equal throughout, and, in consequence of this want of concentration, the objects do not sufficiently detach themselves one from another; the eye finds no resting-place. Stubbs, the authority on the anatomy of the horse, shows how well he could paint that animal in the equestrian group of the Melbourne family (2). The picture will bear examination, though coming to it direct from the Dutch portrait and genre pieces in the next room. The series of small pictures by George Morland, well known from the old colour-prints after them, representing the fall of "Letitia" from innocence to depravity (14—19), is hackneyed enough in the telling of the story, and in its moral: but there is a congenial charm of old-fashioned naïveté in the painting that wins admiration. Wilkie's life-size full-length seated portrait of the shrewd-looking Earl of Kellie (176), in his robes, is one of the most powerful works in the artist's later manner that we know of, and, though loaded with bitumen, it is in perfect preservation. Among the exceptionally few works of landscape in this exhibition, there is one, "Calm on the Medway" (46), by Callcott, which cannot fail to command attention if only by its magnitude. But—partly, let us admit, on account of the subject—there is less life even than usual in this sample of Sir Augustus's big pictures—many of which, however otherwise ably carried out, lack something of animation, suggestiveness, and "go." With mention of two pictures by Turner, both of his middle time, we must close this short review. In "The Lake at Tabley" (178) liveliness is given to the scene by the craft on the water and other expedients; nevertheless the ensemble is unwontedly prosaic, and the perspective not a little "out." In "Kilgarren Castle" (173) Turner's growing habit, when this was painted, of departing widely from local fact is more apparent; a kind of grandiose character is imparted that is foreign to the scene; nay, more—although this character is in itself impressive—although one may not know one inch of or care one whit for the topography—the impression is accompanied with a sense of pictorial license so obvious in the nature and intention of its artifices, that the imagination is not better satisfied than the memory—that is to say if the conception of the possible aspect of this class of scene is not divorced from reason. For instance, the mass of shadow enveloping the slope to the left, and half the lake, is too palpably introduced to impart a vague vastness to that side, and foil the light in the centre. In short, this is not the perfect art that knows how to conceal itself—a verdict which we opine posterity will pass upon a large proportion of Turner's works.

At a general assembly of the Royal Academy held yesterday week Mr. John Brett, painter, Mr. Andrew Gow, painter, and Mr. William Burges, architect, were elected Associates.

Messrs. Christie, Manson, and Woods sold at their rooms last Saturday the collection of paintings and drawings formed by the late Mr. S. Boddington, a great admirer and patron of Mr. T. Stothard, R.A. The collection produced £1671.

The Senatus of Glasgow University has been presented with a portrait of the Very Rev. Principal Caird, the esteemed head of the University, and Mrs. Caird with a replica. The portraits are the gift of subscribers belonging to all religious and political parties, and are the works of Mr. Millais, R.A. The Principal is represented in academic dress, and the likeness is very striking.

Sir Frederick Leighton, P.R.A., Mr. Calder Marshall, R.A., and Mr. Woolner, R.A., who acceded to an invitation of the Rowland Hill Memorial committee to adjudicate upon the various models sent in by competing artists of a statue of Sir Rowland about to be erected at the Royal Exchange, have decided that a model, the work of Mr. E. Onslow Ford, gives the best promise; but they advise that the artist should be requested, before the commission is intrusted to him, to send in another design on a larger scale.

The Ipswich Fine-Art Club, which has already done so much to foster a good taste for art and to give Suffolk artists due honour in their own county, opened its seventh annual exhibition last Monday. There are not so many large pictures as in former years, but the general quality of the works exhibited is still higher than before. Among the oil-paintings, we may notice Mr. W. D. Batley's "Study of a Priest;" several portraits by Mr. W. R. Symonds (one that of Mr. Sterling Westhorp, and two of Mr. and Mrs. Booth, the late Mayor and Mayoress); a good view of "Harwich, from Shotley Point," by Mr. J. R. Wells, and another of the same subject, by Mr. W. A. Smith; Mr. Duvall's picture of a gamekeeper, with a white pony and dog, delivering pheasants "With his Grace's Compliments;" and two or three fine pictures of horses, by the same artist; Mr. F. G. Cotman's landscape, "From Shade to Sunshine;" Mr. Lindley Nunn's "Sunrise" on the beach at Felixstowe; Mr. Moore's "Dale Hall Farm" and "Wilford Bridge;" several Cornish coast scenes, by Mr. W. T. Griffiths; Mr. Hermann Biddell's large picture of Suffolk mares and foals, called "Our Natives;" a hunting-picture by Mr. T. Smythe; and the contributions of some lady artists—"Just Out," a pretty girl in old-fashioned ball-dress, by Mrs. Vulliamy, an amateur; Mrs. Ladell's fruit and flower pieces, and others. There is a very high degree of excellence in the works executed in water-colour that are shown at this year's exhibition. Mr. S. Read sends his grand "Interior of the Cathedral of Toledo;" Mr. F. G. Cotman, a beautiful summer landscape; Mr. C. J. Smart, "The Gateway at Cairo;" Miss Lacon, some exterior views of Cathedrals; and Messrs. Lloyd Jones, Howard Gaye, Robertson, Goddard, Binyon, and others, some works of fair merit. The exhibition is, altogether, a decided success; and the honorary secretary of the Ipswich Fine-Art Club, Mr. E. Packard, jun., to whose exertions this is greatly due, may be congratulated, with the other members of the committee, upon a continued great improvement in the result of their liberal efforts.

It is stated that Sir Richard Sutton, Bart., of Benham Park, has agreed to hunt the Craven county for three years.—— The Marquis of Londonderry has given £100, and promised a similar annual subscription, towards the purchase of a pack of hounds to hunt the western portion of Durham, Sir W. Eden having decided to give up hunting that part of the county.

A meeting was held at the Mansion House yesterday week in support of the movement for holding, at the Crystal Palace, a series of International Exhibitions illustrative of our great industries and manufactures. The first Exhibition, which is to be devoted to the woollen manufactures, will be held from June to October next. Lord Elcho, M.P., Sir W. Cole, Sir Julius Vogel, and others, spoke in support of the movement, for which success was predicted.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

THE TROUBADOURS.

Mr. Francis Hueffer gave the first of a course of four lectures on the Troubadours on Thursday, Jan. 27. After noticing the scanty literature of the subject, especially the excellent work of Professor Diez, he deprecated the common erroneous notion that the Troubadours were mere itinerant sentimental minstrels, asserting that much of their poetry was religious, social, and political. Their language, the Provençal, or langue d'oc, was of the Romance family, derived from Latin, which prevailed in Southern France in the Middle Ages, and was more closely allied to Spanish dialects than to the langue d'oil that of Northern France, which eventually became the national tongue. A melodious specimen of the langue d'oc, by the Père Vidal, with a metrical translation, was given. In society the Troubadours held an exceptional position. They were of all ranks and professions, including Sovereigns, such as Richard Cœur de Lion, who had a poetic contest with the Dauphin, Robert of Auvergne; and examples were mentioned of both amateurs and professional minstrels. At the Courts of Princes the Troubadours were honourably welcomed, and often rewarded liberally; but were not permanently settled, which would have been contrary to their free wandering habits of life. Their popularity was no doubt largely connected with their impassioned devotion to the fair sex; yet they were also at times stern censors of moral and political depravity. Among the illustrations Mr. Hueffer commented on a poetical treatise, called "The God of Love," by Sir Amanieu des Escas, which contains a minute account of the accomplishments expected from a well-educated young lady, and of the bad habits to be avoided. Some of the advice savours of insincerity. The refining influence of the Provençal ladies upon literature was admitted; but the popular stories respecting the "Courts of Love," in connection with the Troubadours, were asserted to be utterly fabulous, as demonstrated by Diez in 1825, in opposition to the imaginary conjectures of Raynouard, in his "Choix des Poésies Originales des Troubadours," published in 1817.

TEACHINGS OF MODERN SPECTROSCOPY.

Dr. Arthur Schuster, F.R.S., gave the discourse at the evening meeting on Friday, Jan. 28. He defined Modern Spectroscopy to be the union of the old science of spectroscopy, the object of which was purely chemical, such as the demonstration of the existence of certain elements in any compound body, by means of its spectrum, with the recently developed ideas of molecular physics. The object of his discourse was to give an account of some of the problems which the advocates of the new spectroscopy believe it to be capable of solving. He first referred to the division of spectra into three types. Line spectra appear at the highest, and continuous spectra at the lowest, temperature; while intermediate between these are the spectra with fluted bands. The different types are due to different molecular complexity. Compound bodies give spectra of fluted bands, and when elementary bodies do the same, the molecular forces must be similar; that is, the molecule will be a compound one, though it may be a compound of one element with another of the same kind. Examples were given in which changes of spectra were accompanied by changes of density. The attempts made to deduce the spectrum of a compound body from those of its elements were next mentioned; and an account was given of a few simple cases in which the change amounted to a shifting of the whole system of vibration, either towards the red or towards the blue end of the spectrum. The hope was expressed that the changes of spectra due to temperature might be made a measure of that temperature, when all other methods fail, as in the case of the sun and the stars. It was, however, pointed out that changes in the concentration or dilution of the substance employed have the same effect as a change of temperature—a fact of considerable theoretical importance.

THE AMAZONS IN GREEK LEGEND AND LITERATURE.

Mr. Sidney Colvin, M.A., Slade Professor of Fine Art, Cambridge, gave the first of a course of four lectures on the Amazons on Saturday last, Jan. 29. In beginning, he stated that the idea and name of Amazons are of Greek invention, becoming prominent during the golden age of Cimon and Pericles, in the fifth century B.C., being regarded as a mythic foreshadowing of Hellenic greatness, the result of the victories of Marathon, Salamis, Platæa, Mycale, and the Eurymedon over the invading hosts of Persia. The time of this great enlightening of national consciousness was when epic poetry was becoming exhausted and the lyric embellishment of epic legends was beginning, together with historic compilation, dramatic vivification, and the realisations of sculpture and painting. Four Greek legends are specially conspicuous—the conflicts of the Centaurs with Herakles, Theseus, and the Lapithæ; that of the Amazons with Herakles, Theseus, and Achilles; that of the Giants with Herakles, helping the gods; and that of Eumolpus and the Thracians with Theseus and the Athenians. The Amazons, fair and terrible strangers, children of Mars, violating the sanctities of domestic life, were said to have come from the frozen north to fight on equal terms with the Greek heroes, by whom they were finally vanquished; and illustrations of the combats were shown in fine bold diagrams copied from ancient vases, one most graphically representing a Greek warrior triumphing over a prostrate Amazon. Diodorus Siculus describes a peculiar society of Amazons dwelling on the West Coast of Libya, of which some amusing details were given; but the most celebrated territories of these female warriors were in Asia Minor, and to them is attributed the foundation of Smyrna, Ephesus, the site of the temple of the virgin goddess, Artemis, Thyatira, and other cities, where their memory was long cherished. They had settlements also on the northern coasts of the Euxine. For purposes of art and literature, Professor Colvin specially commented on three famous encounters of the Amazons with Greek heroes:—1. When Herakles was sent by Eurysthenes to win and bring the girdle of the Amazonian queen Hippolyte, in which he was successful; 2. The victory of Theseus over the Amazons invading Athens to avenge his abduction of their queen Hippolyte; 3. The encounter of the Greeks with the Amazons, who came to help the Trojans, ending with the death of Penthesilea, their last queen, whose beauty, even in death, subdued the heart of the victor, Achilles. The lecture concluded with the reading of some interesting extracts, circumstantially describing this conflict, from an epic poem by Quintius Smyrnæus, most probably compiled from the works of Arctinus, Lesches, Apollonius, and other ancient writers, his phraseology being closely modelled on that of Homer.

RED BLOOD-CORPUSCLES.

Professor E. A. Schäfer, F.R.S., began his second lecture on the Blood, given on Tuesday last, the 1st inst., by referring to the discovery of the red corpuscles by Swammerdam, and the successive observations of Malpighi and Leeuwenhoek in the seventeenth century, and of Mr. Gulliver and others since. He then described the methods by which the shape, size, and number of bodies had been determined. In form, they generally resemble bi-concave disks, and appear to be homogeneous in their structure, being elastic and very slightly coloured, with a central intense shadow or nucleus. The descriptions were elucidated by diagrams and models. The methods of examination devised by Vievordt, Welcker, Gowers, Boettticher, and other physiologists were fully explained. There appears to be no difference in the red corpuscles in males and females, nor in different races of mankind. Their number, which varies much according to the state of the health of the individual, is now readily determined by the examination of a drop of blood; and the mode adopted in medical practice was exhibited by dealing with a fresh drop of blood. The measurements of Gulliver and Welcker of the red corpuscles in the other vertebrate animals were noticed, and some peculiarities pointed out. These bodies are much the same in size in the horse and the harvest mouse, in the shrew and the giraffe. In some American amphibia, they are large enough to be visible to the naked eye. The application of the microscope, with micrometers and other appliances, to the accurate investigation of these interesting bodies is truly wonderful. Mr. G. F. Dowdeswell's paper in the January number of the Quarterly Journal of Microscopical Science, on the Appearances of the Red Blood Corpuscles of Man and other Vertebrata, was specially referred to as describing the latest researches.

Professor Robert S. Ball, LL.D., F.R.S., Astronomer-Royal for Ireland, will give a discourse on "The Distances of the Stars" on Friday evening next, the 11th inst.

THE MAGAZINES.

FIRST NOTICE.

Mr. James Payn's "A Grape from a Thorn" promises to be a constant source of amusement to the readers of the Cornhill. It is a thoroughly sprightly story, gay and sparkling, exciting as yet no deep sympathy, but putting us thoroughly in good humour with all the characters, even the vulgar ones, who, to say the truth, are more numerous and pronounced than would have been tolerable in a work with any high pretensions to art. "Love the Debt," a Yorkshire story, also has humour, although of a quieter sort. The writer is too prone to write about his personages, instead of letting them depict themselves. "Holiday Customs in Italy" is a very charming paper, describing these customs with spirit, and tracing them back to their roots in classical or even earlier times. "Voltaire and Shakspeare" is entertaining, but only repeats a well-known story; and a critical essay on George Eliot is poorly written, and strangely deficient in insight and sympathy.

Insight and sympathy were never wanting to the late Mr. Blackwood, and the most interesting among the contributions to the current number of Blackwood's Magazine records how much he did to foster the great genius we have lost. "The Private Secretary" maintains its rank as one of the brightest and cleverest novels now in course of publication. There is abundant cleverness, too, in Mr. Cox's "Protégé," a portrait, manifestly from the life, of an ill-conditioned incubus upon an Alpine expedition; and in the Highland fishing adventure "The Salmon of Clootie's Hole." Lady Martin continues her reminiscences of her great theatrical parts, Portia being the subject of the present instalment. Mr. Trollope's biography of Cicero is eulogised, and Mr. Trevelyan's biography of Fox condemned, the first with obvious personal partiality, the second with no less obvious political animosity.

The Fortnightly Review is dull, as a whole. Mr. Swinburne's demonstration of Tennyson's superiority to Musset, with whom he has been paralleled by rash Frenchmen, was of itself hardly called for, but affords occasion for some subtle remarks on the best points of the French poet's genius and some of the weakest of the Englishman's, to whom he nevertheless accords supreme admiration. Mr. Cliffe Leslie's account of the French economist, Léonce de Lavergne, has both human and scientific interest. The other writers—Mr. Spencer, Mr. Rathbone, Mr. Webster, Mr. Brand—are highly competent to enlighten the world on their respective subjects, but the collective impression of their lucubrations is decidedly ponderous. The general heaviness is somewhat relieved by Professor Beesly, who approves of "Boycotting" in Ireland on the ground that it in a measure realises the social excommunication which Comte undisguisedly wished to inflict upon those who differed from his notions.

The Nineteenth Century has three contributions of great significance—the Dean of St. Paul's apology for the Ritualists, which entirely overlooks the real ground of popular distrust and dislike, their habit of seceding to the Church of Rome; Sir Bartle Frere's view of the Transvaal question, grave, statesman-like, and worthy of profound attention; and a still more remarkable paper on "The Breaking up of the Land Monopoly," by the Marquis of Blandford, pointing out with great ability the causes which are undermining established territorial arrangements, and recommending reconciliation with the spirit of the age as the surest method of arresting political revolution. It would be interesting to know whether this is an isolated or a representative utterance. Mr. Lucien Wolf's article on the persecution of the Jews in Germany is a powerful exposure of the real motives of this disgraceful business. The only contribution of a purely literary character is the late Mr. Dallas's essay on La Rochefoucauld—tasteful and scholarly, like everything Mr. Dallas wrote.

The most noticeable contributions to Temple Bar are the lively chapters of the new novel, "The Frères," and good biographical articles on Shelley and Beaumarchais. Nothing in Time deserves attention except the instalment of Mrs. Singleton's clever and eccentric Sophy; but this is very good and very long.

At the weekly meeting of the London School Board on Thursday week, Sir Charles Reed, M.P., presiding, the School Management Committee submitted a report as to the increased work of the inspectors of schools, containing a recommendation that a seventh inspector be appointed. The proposition met with much opposition, and underwent two discussions, the result of which was that the further consideration of the subject was adjourned.——Lady Brabazon has given a cheque for £300 to provide a daily meal for the most destitute children attending the Board Schools of London.

Prince Leopold presided on Thursday week at the first meeting of the Kyrle Society, which was held in the Kensington Townhall. There was a large attendance, including Princess Louise, and Sir Frederick Leighton. Prince Leopold made an earnest appeal to all, in order that a love of beautiful things might be diffused among the poor. Amongst the objects of the society were the preservation of open spaces as gardens for the public, the formation of choirs to give concerts to the poor, decorations by mural paintings, and the gifts of flowers. The objects of the society were warmly approved. Resolutions in support were spoken to by Dr. W. H. Alchin, Mr. G. A. Sala, Mr. William Morris, the Rev. Teignmouth Shore, M. Kegan Paul, Mr. J. G. Fitch, and others.

THE CHURCH.

PREFERMENTS AND APPOINTMENTS.

Birch, J.; Vicar of Wednesfield.
Buss, Septimus; Vicar of St. Leonard's, Shoreditch.
Knight, J. G. B.; Diocesan Inspector in the Archdeaconry of Richmond, Diocese of Ripon.
Mitchinson, John; Rector of Sibson, Leicestershire.
Parrington, J. Walter; Vicar of East Dean with Friston.
Scarlin, Walter James; Curate of West Derby, Liverpool.—Guardian.

The Bishop of Lichfield's quinquennial appeal for the Church Extension Society has produced £13,000.

A handsome Munich stained-glass window, by Messrs. Mayer, has been erected in Wirksworth church, Derbyshire.

Collections were made in the churches and chapels of Hastings and St. Leonards last Sunday in aid of the infirmary and two dispensaries of the borough. About £550, it is expected, will be handed over to these institutions.

It hardly looks as though the Church of England was losing her position as the educator of the poor, when we read in the Government returns that during the past nine years £5,630,000 has been subscribed for Church schools, against £1,323,000 for those of all other religious bodies.

The parish church of St. Michael, Highgate, having undergone improvement and enlargement, was reopened on Saturday afternoon, when the new portions of the building were consecrated by the Bishop of London, in the presence of a large congregation. A new chancel and vestry have been provided, at a cost of about £3000.

The Company appointed for the Revision of the Authorised Version of the Old Testament finished their sixty-seventh session yesterday week, at the Jerusalem Chamber. Twelve members attended. The second revision of the historical books was completed, and the revision of Proverbs was continued as far as xxiv. 14.

Mr. Newdegate, M.P., speaking on Monday at the annual meeting of the Warwickshire Scripture Readers' Society at Coventry, said that for various reasons the agencies of other denominations were now more than usually active, and if the Church of England should seem, however deceptive might be the appearance, to be careless of her charge, he was quite sure it would produce an effect most detrimental to her.

The Rev. W. J. Earle, M.A., on resigning his post as Sub-Warden and Head Assistant-Master of Uppingham School, has been presented with the following testimonials:—A pension of £150 per annum, voted unanimously by the trustees; a purse of £270 from the old and present boys of the school; and a handsome clock from the masters. Mrs. Earle also has received a valuable piece of plate from the past and present Brooklands boys.

ŒCONOMY.

Adams, Jesus
Chadwick, Jesus
Darlow, Clare
Dickinson, Trinity
Durrant, Emmanuel
Giles, Queen's
Hope, Trinity
Reed, Clare.

The Senior Wrangler is Mr. Andrew Russell Forsyth, son of the late Mr. John Forsyth; the second, Mr. Robert Samuel Heath, is the second son of Mr. Samuel Heath, of Thornton Curtis, Lincolnshire; and the third, Mr. Alfred E. Steinthal, is the eldest son of the Rev. S. A. Steinthal, of Manchester. All three were educated at Trinity College.

The Senate House was filled last Saturday morning with persons anxious to witness the conferring of the degrees upon those men who had passed in the several triposes. The Senior Wrangler was loudly cheered, and cheers were also given for Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Bright. The last man in the Mathematical Tripos, Mr. MacMaster, was presented with a shovel, not with a wooden spoon, as is usual. The shovel had painted upon it the college arms, and was suspended by the strings across the building. After Mr. MacMaster had taken his degree, he carried the shovel away, amid vociferous cheers.

Girton College has been again successful in the Mathematical Tripos. The Senior Moderator has reported that the papers of Miss M. Pailthorpe, a student of the college, would have entitled her to be placed between the twenty-third and twenty-fourth wranglers. Three other students of the college were also examined, of whom Miss H. M. Sheldon would have been a Senior Optime, and Miss S. Marks and Miss K. Gale Junior Optimes. Miss Pailthorpe held one of the scholarships given by Mr. R. S. Wright, and Miss Gale one of the exhibitions of the Clothworkers' Company.

Ridley Hall, Cambridge, was opened yesterday week. The building, which cost ten thousand pounds, is intended for students, after having degrees, to train them for parochial work. The Vice-Chancellor said the University Commissioners intended to abolish resident fellowships, and the mode of electing heads of houses, so the masters of colleges might be appointed without professing any religious creed.

At Oxford University the Davies Chinese Scholarship has been awarded to Mr. William Coward Bradley, B.A., of Queen's College. Mr. Bradley was formerly a scholar of Queen's College, and gained the Boden Sanscrit Scholarship in 1879. The examiners testify to the excellence of the papers of Mr. R. C. N. Kelly, of Worcester College.——Mr. H. J. Gibson, formerly of Rossall School, has been elected to the vacant Casberd Scholarship of £80 for four years at St. John's College. Mr. R. C. Perry, formerly of Merchant Taylors' School, has been elected to a similar scholarship, tenable for one year only. Exhibitions have been awarded to Mr. G. W. Ellis and Mr. T. W. Haycroft, commoners of that college.

OBITUARY.

SIR BRUCE CHICHESTER, BART.

Sir Alexander Palmer Bruce Chichester, Bart., of Arlington Court, Devon, died on the 25th ult., at his seat near Barnstaple. He was born Dec. 24, 1842, the eldest son of Colonel Sir John Palmer Chichester, Bart., by Caroline, his wife, daughter of Mr. Thomas Thistlethwayte, of Southwick Park, Hants, and succeeded to the title at his father's death, Dec. 20, 1851. He married, Feb. 9, 1865, Rosalie Amelia, third daughter of Mr. Thomas Chamberlayne, of Cranbury Park and Western Grove, Hants, and leaves an only child, Rosalie Caroline. Sir Bruce was educated at Harrow, was J.P. for Devonshire, and served as High Sheriff in 1868. The baronetcy, conferred in 1840, now becomes extinct. The Chichesters of Arlington are a branch of the very ancient family of Chichester of Raleigh.

SIR GEORGE JACOB.

Major-General Sir George Le Grand Jacob, K.C.S.I., C.B., died on the 27th ult., at his residence, Queensborough-terrace, in his seventy-sixth year. He was son of Mr. John Jacob, of Guernsey, by Anna Maria, his wife, daughter of Mr. George Le Grand, of Canterbury, and was educated at Elizabeth College, Guernsey. He entered the Indian Army in 1821, and served in numerous affairs in India, the Mutiny, &c. From 1857 to 1859 he was Special Political Commissioner of the Southern Mahratta country, and in 1869 was made a Knight of the Star of India, having previously, in 1859, been created C.B. He married, in 1835, Emily, daughter of Colonel Utterton, of Heath Lodge, Croydon.

We have also to record the deaths of—

The Rev. James Cartmell, D.D., Master of Christ College, Cambridge, and Chaplain in Ordinary to the Queen, on the 23rd ult., in his seventy-first year.

Andrew Wood, LL.D., D.C.L., an eminent medical practitioner of Edinburgh, on the 25th ult., aged seventy. He was President of the Royal College of Surgeons of Scotland in 1855.

Mrs. Samuel Carter Hall, who has been associated with her husband in literary work for more than half a century, on the 29th ult., at Devon Lodge, East Molesey, at the age of eighty-one.

Mr. George Parbury, J.P. and D.L., late member of the Legislative Council of Bengal, on the 27th ult., at Caterham, Surrey, aged seventy-four. He was twice married; first, in 1833, to Mary Anne Joanna, only child of Mr. Edward Ellis, of Hertford Priory; and secondly, in 1849, to Lucy Wilson, daughter of Sir John Key, Bart., and leaves issue.

Major-General John Noble Arbuthnot Freese, C.B., Colonel Royal Artillery, on the 25th ult., at Southsea. He was born in 1813, entered the Army in 1832, and attained the rank of Major-General in 1864. He served in the expedition to China and in the Crimea, including Inkerman and Sebastopol, and had a medal and two clasps, the Turkish medal, and the Order of the Medjidie.

Charlotte, Lady Glamis, on the 19th ult., at Redbourne, St. Albans, in her eighty-fourth year. Her Ladyship was the daughter of Mr. Joseph Valentine Grinstead, and was married, in 1820, to George, Lord Glamis (only son of Thomas, eleventh Earl of Strathmore), who died in 1834, during his father's lifetime. By this union Lady Glamis was mother of Thomas George, twelfth Earl of Strathmore, and of the present Earl.

Mr. Thomas Hext, of Trenarren, Cornwall, J.P. and D.L., on the 26th ult., aged seventy-five. He was the eldest son of Mr. John Hext, of Trenarren, by Elizabeth, his wife, daughter of Mr. Thomas Staniforth, of Darnall, Yorkshire. He married, in 1845, Rhoda Charleton, daughter of the Rev. Henry Farr Yeatman, of Stock House, Dorsetshire, and leaves issue. The family of Hext has for centuries been resident in Cornwall and Devon.

Mr. John Lewis More-O'Ferrall, M.A., J.P., and D.L., for many years Commissioner of the Metropolitan Force, Dublin, on the 21st ult., at Granite Hall, Kingstown, near Dublin, aged eighty. Mr. More-O'Ferrall was second son of Mr. Ambrose More-O'Ferrall, of Balyna, in the county of Kildare, by Anne, his wife, daughter of Mr. John Bagot, of Castle Bagot, in the county of Dublin. He married, 1836, Clare, daughter of Mr. Thomas Segrave, of Cabra, in the county of Dublin, and leaves issue.

The Rev. John Brooke, of Haughton Hall, Shropshire, on the 27th ult., at his seat near Shiffnal, in his seventy-eighth year. He was second son of Mr. George Brooke Briggs Brooke, by Henrietta, his wife, daughter of Mr. Richard Massey, of Walton-on-the-Hill. He married, in 1843, Georgiana Frances, youngest daughter of Mr. John Coates, of Woodcote, Salop, and leaves, with other issue, a son, Mr. John Townshend Brooke, J.P., married to Lady Wilhelmina, youngest daughter of William, fourth Earl of Dartmouth.

Matthew Henry Marsh, Esq., of Ramridge, Hants, M.A., J.P., and D.L., on the 26th ult., at Bournemouth. He was son of the Rev. Matthew Marsh, Chancellor and Canon of Salisbury, by Margaret, his wife, daughter of the Rev. Peter B. Brodie, was educated at Westminster, and at Christ Church, Oxford, and was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1836. He sat in Parliament for Salisbury from 1857 to 1868, and was formerly a member of the Legislative Council of New South Wales. He married, in 1844, Eliza Mary Anne, daughter of Mr. Serjeant Merewether, and leaves three daughters.

Lieutenant-General William Philip Hampton, late of the Bengal Army, at 65, Haverstock-hill, on the 23rd ult., aged seventy. He entered the Army in 1828, and attained the rank of Lieutenant-General in 1877. His services were many and important. He was in the Afghanistan War of 1839, including the capture of Kelat. In 1843 he took part in the Gwalior campaign, and was present at Maharajpore; and in 1848-9 he served in the Punjaub, and was at Chillianwallah and Goojerat. In 1850 he assisted at the forcing of the Kohat Pass, and commanded the 31st Bengal Native Infantry during the Mutiny.

Mr. Edward Holroyd, on the 29th ult., at his residence at Wimbledon, in his eighty-seventh year. He was the third son of the eminent Judge Sir George S. Holroyd. For seven years he practised as a Special Pleader under the Bar, having a large business and ten pupils, amongst whom may be mentioned the late Sir David Dundas, afterwards Solicitor-General. Mr. Holroyd was called to the Bar on April 26, 1826. In the following November he was appointed by Lord Lyndhurst one of the Commissioners of Bankruptcy under the old system, and on Oct. 31, 1831, he was appointed by Lord Brougham a Commissioner of the Court of Bankruptcy, then established, and held the position of Senior Commissioner on the abolition of the court, in December, 1869, having been in office for a longer period than any Judge then on the Bench. On his well-earned retirement, the Hon. Commissioner was publicly thanked by the Bar and by the solicitors of his Court for his invariable courtesy and kindness during his lengthened term of office.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

All communications relating to this department of the Paper should be addressed to the Editor, and have the word "Chess" written on the envelope.

E L G (Blackwater).—It was acknowledged last week, having arrived too late for notice before. No. 1926 appears to have baffled many of our regular solvers.

P J (Broadmoor).—None of the positions with which you have favoured us are up to our standard of publication. The chief defect in all of them is that too many powerful pieces are employed in working out rather commonplace combinations, the result being something to confuse and nothing to edify the solver.

H L (Berlin).—The variation in question escaped our observation; but you are right.

C A B (Bombay).—In No. 1916, after 1. Q to B 8th, should Black 1. P takes B, the continuation is 2. Q takes B mate. In No. 1921, Black's reply to 1. Kt takes P at B 3rd (ch) is 1. R takes Kt.

G H McL (St John's, Newcastle-on-Wood).—It shall appear in the course of the present month.

T W (Canterbury).—The Chess Column has appeared every week. We should be glad to see the Number you refer to.

J H S (Birkenhead).—In No. 1924 if Black, instead of 1. P takes Kt, play 1. K to K 3rd, White continues with 2. Kt to Q B 6th, discover check, and mates next move with the same Knight or with Rook, according to Black's play.

TRIAL (Glasgow).—We have examined the position referred to in your note, and believe that Black should win, owing to White's forces being shut up at home.

TH Z (Alexandria).—Thanks for the problem.

NUOVO RIVIERE (Leghorn).—We have pleasure in complying with your wish, and have addressed a letter to you on the subject.

CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No. 1919 received from William Pocock (Cape Town); of No. 1921 from Va, U.S.; and of No. 1924 from Emile Frau.

PROBLEM No. 1929.
By FRIDESWIDE F. BEECHEY.

WHITE.
White to play, and mate in two moves.

Mr. Blackburne has been delighting our country friends with exhibitions of chess without the chessboard, and, as is usual with him in these prodigious efforts of memory and imagination, with uniform success. Appended is one of ten games played by him concurrently and sans voir at Burton-on-Trent on the 18th ultimo; and our readers will agree with us that, as regards fertility of resource and ingenuity of combination, Mr. Blackburne's conduct of the game is worthy of any player with the board and pieces before him:—

(Danish Gambit.)

| WHITE (Mr. B.) | BLACK (Mr. Wright.) |
|---|---|
| 1. P to K 4th | P to K 4th |
| 2. P to Q 4th | P takes P |
| 3. P to Q B 3rd | P takes P |
| 4. B to Q B 4th | P takes P |

Black might have obtained a safe game here by 4. Kt to K B 3rd, whereas the move adopted helps to develop the adversary's forces.

|---|---|
| 5. Q B takes P | Kt to K B 3rd |
| 6. Kt to K B 3rd | B to Kt 5th (ch) |
| 7. Q Kt to Q 2nd | Castles |
| 8. Castles | P to Q 4th |

Injudicious, to say the least of it. 8. P to Q 3rd, followed by Kt to B 3rd or B to Kt 5th, is a preferable course.

|---|---|
| 9. P takes P | Kt takes P |
| 10. Q to Kt 3rd | P to Q B 3rd |
| 11. B takes Kt | B takes Kt |
| 12. B to Kt 4th | B to B 5th |
| 13. Q R to Q sq | Q to B 2nd |
| 14. Q to B 3rd | B to R 3rd |
| 15. Kt to Kt 5th | B to K B 4th |
| 16. K R to K sq | |

Threatening 17. Kt takes B P and mate, if R takes Kt in reply.

|---|---|
| 16. | Kt to R 3rd |
| 17. R to K 5th | |

Gaining time to double the Rooks on the King's file. There is also a little pitfall for an unwary adversary in this ruse.

|---|---|
| 17. | B to Kt 3rd |

If he had played instead 17. B takes Kt, then follows—

|---|---|
| 18. R takes B | B to B 3rd. |

| WHITE (Mr. B.) | BLACK (Mr. Wright.) |
|---|---|

If 18. B to B 3rd, then 19. R takes B 19. R to Kt 5th, and wins.

|---|---|
| 18. Q R to K sq | Q R to Q sq |
| 19. R to K 7th | Q to B sq |
| 20. Kt to K 6th | |

A masterly combination, conducted with unerring precision by the bloodshed player.

|---|---|
| 20. | P to Kt 4th |
| 21. Kt takes Kt P | |

Much more effective than taking either of the Rooks the young player will find, after very brief examination.

|---|---|
| 21. | B to Q 7th |

This seems but a poor resource; but he really has no good defence at this point. If 21. P takes B, White continues—

|---|---|
| 22. Kt to B 5th | P to B 3rd |
| 23. Kt takes B (ch) | K to B sq |
| 24. Q takes P (ch) | R takes Q |
| 25. R takes R. | Mate. |
| 22. Q to B 6th | B takes R |
| 23. Kt to K 6th | |

23. Kt to B 3th appears a shorter road, but is not so; for Black can retort with 23. B takes K B P (ch); and if then 24. K takes R, there follows 24. Q takes Kt (ch), forcing the exchange of Queens.

|---|---|
| 23. | B takes P (ch) |
| 24. K takes B | P takes Kt |
| 25. R to Kt 7th (ch) | K to R sq |
| 26. R to K B 7th (dis. ch) | K to Kt sq |
| 27. Queen mates. | |

"Elementary Chess Problems" is the title of a very interes ing selection from the compositions of Mr. J. P. Taylor, just published by Mr. G. C. Heywood, of High-road, Lee, Kent. Excepting three or four positions which have been specially composed for this book, all the problems have appeared in contemporary publications within the last few years, many of them in this column, and, having therefore passed the ordeal of public criticism, call for no extended comment now or here. It will suffice to observe that Mr. Taylor is facile princeps in the composition of those happy thoughts in Black and White called two-move chess problems, and that he has shown excellent judgment in selecting the best specimens of his work. The book opens with a few hints to young composers which possess the merit of being concise as well as practical. Author and Publi-her being both chessplayers and problem composers of known skill, it is not to be wondered at that the book is superbly printed. We can cordially recommend the "Elementary Chess-Problems," and, in accordance with a time-honoured custom, quote one of them not previously published. Such of our readers as may recollect Mr A. E. Studd's fine three-move problem, published by us on June 20 last year, married by an indefinite first move, will observe a close re-emblance in the mating position between that and Mr Taylor's composition. Both these gentlemen are above suspicion of, either of them, being indebted to the other's work for the conception, and we select this problem from the others merely because it furnishes another illustration of fortuitous coincidence in the construction of chess problems.

White: K at K 3rd, Q at K Kt 5th, R's at Q 2nd and Q R 5th, Kts at Q 5th and Q 8th, B's at K B square and K B 4th. (Eight pieces.)
Black: K at Q 4th, Kt at K 5th, B at K B 4th; Pawns at K Kt 3rd, K B 7th, and Q 6th. (six pieces.)
White to play, and mate in two moves.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated Jan. 23, 1877) with two codicils (dated Jan. 23, 1879, and June 3, 1880) of the Right Hon. Beilby Richard, Baron Wenlock, late of Wenlock, Shropshire, and of Escrick Park, Yorkshire, who died on Nov. 6 last, has been proved at the district registry, York, by the Dowager Baroness Wenlock, the widow, and John Coleman, two of the executors, the personal estate, including leaseholds, being sworn under £250,000. The testator bequeaths to his wife, Elizabeth, Lady Wenlock, £2000, certain horses and carriages, and the jewels usually worn by her; she is to have the use for life of the family jewels and such plate as she may select; at her decease these are made heirlooms to go with the estates; he also leaves her £1000 per annum for life, in addition to the jointure secured to her by her marriage settlement, and Monk Hopton House, Salop, with the furniture, or Escrick Villa, Yorkshire, for a residence, as she may elect. All his manors, messuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments in the counties of York and Salop (except Weel, Yorkshire, and Monk Hopton and Priors Ditton, Salop), he devises to the use of his eldest son, Beilby Lawley, for life, with remainder to his first and other sons successively in tail male. His property at Monk Hopton and Priors Ditton, Salop, he devises to the use of his second son, Richard Thompson Lawley, for life, with remainder to his first and other sons successively in tail male. He gives to his eldest son absolutely all his live and dead farming and agricultural stock and implements of husbandry, and the use of all his furniture, plate, pictures, and household effects for life, after which they are to go with the estates; to each of his four younger sons, £30,000; to each of his four daughters, £15,000; and legacies to many of his servants, conditional on their being in his service at the time of his decease. The advowson and rectory of Marston, Yorkshire, is left to trustees, for the purpose of his son Algernon George, if in holy orders, being presented to it at the next vacancy. The residue of his real estate is directed to be sold, and the proceeds, with the residuary personal estate, laid out in the purchase of land about Escrick, to be settled the same as the family estates.

The will (dated Aug. 19, 1880) of Mr. John Davidson, late of No. 6, Albemarle-street, who died on Dec. 3 last, was proved on Dec. 30 last by the Rev. Lionel Davidson, the brother, and Gerard Frederick Miller, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £50,000. The testator bequeaths to the museum of the Royal United Service Institution an embossed helmet, an embossed pistol (in case), a gilt spear-head (in case), his New Zealand jade patapatoo (in case), and the gilt and chased Cashmere sword once exhibited there. There are considerable legacies to his brothers, sisters, godchildren, and others; and the residue of his real and personal estate he leaves to his brother Thomas.

The will (dated Aug. 13, 1880) of Mr. John Bennett, late of No. 35, Ladbroke-square, Notting-hill, who died on Dec. 4 last, was proved on Dec. 22 last by William Bennett, the son, and Richard Harris, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £30,000. The testator gives to his wife, Mrs. Harriett Bennett, £300, and his household furniture and effects, and for life the dividends of £10,000 Indian railway stock; and he makes provision for his children, and the widows and children of his deceased sons. After giving some other legacies, he leaves the residue to his two sons, Robert Dryhurst and William.

The will (dated June 25, 1878) with a codicil (dated Nov. 12, 1879) of Mrs. Sarah Murgatroyd, late of Haugingroyd, Hebden Bridge, Yorkshire, who died on Oct. 26 last, was proved on the 15th ult. by John Murgatroyd, Champion Murgatroyd, and Henry Murgatroyd Thomas, the sons, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £30,000. The testatrix, after making provision for her daughter, Mrs. Sarah Helen Eastwood, and the three children of her deceased daughter, Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Cunliffe, gives the residue of her property to her said three sons.

The will (dated Sept. 9, 1876) of Mr. Edward Byron Noden, late of No. 76, Angel-road, Brixton, who died on Dec. 18 last, was proved on the 5th ult. by John Bragg and William Waghorne, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £25,000. The testator, after giving a few legacies, leaves the residue of his property upon trust for his aunt, Frances Byron, for life; and at her decease, among other legacies, he bequeaths £1000 each to the Manchester Royal Infirmary, the British and Foreign Bible Society, the Lancashire Independent College, Withington, near Manchester, to be invested and the income appropriated towards the maintenance of the library of the said college by an annual purchase of books, and the Railway Benevolent Institution, to be applied in the payment of £10 a year each to four widows of railway officers according to the arrangements now existing, and the investment to be known as The Byron Noden Fund;—£500 each to the London Missionary Society, the London City Mission, the Manchester City Mission, Birch's Home for Orphans, Cornbrook, near Manchester; the Deaf and Dumb Institution, Old Trafford, Manchester; the Idiot Asylum, Earlswood, the Cancer Hospital, Fulham-road; the Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest, Fulham-road; and the Reedham Asylum for Fatherless Children, near Croydon;—£300 each to the Royal Hospital for Incurables, West-hill, Putney-heath; and the Orphan Working School, Maitland-park, Haverstock-hill;—£250 each to Miss Marsh's Convalescent Hospital at Brighton; and the Deaf and Dumb Institution, Old Kent-road;—£200 each to the London Hospital, Whitechapel; St. Mark's Hospital, City-road; the Lewisham Congregational School, Lewisham; the British Home for Incurables, Clapham-road; and the Infant Orphan Asylum, Wanstead;—and £100 to the Colonial Missionary Society Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street. As to the ultimate residue, one third is to go to the Railway Benevolent Institution, and the remaining two thirds among such charitable institutions as the trustees shall see fit.

The will (dated June 12, 1869) of the Rev. Frederick James Jobson, D.D., ex-President of the Wesleyan Conference, late of No. 21, Highbury-place, Islington, who died on the 4th ult., was proved on the 13th ult. by Mrs. Elizabeth Jobson, the widow and sole executrix, to whom he gives all his real and personal estate for her sole and separate use and benefit. The personal estate is sworn under £12 000.

The will and codicil (both dated Dec. 4, 1879) of General Henry Duncan Twysden, late of East Stonehouse, Devon, who died on Nov. 5 last at Harrogate, were proved on the 11th ult. by Mrs. Martha Louisa Twysden, the widow and sole executrix, the personal estate being sworn under £10,000.

The will (dated July 24, 1869) of Mrs. Ellen Kean (the widow of the late Charles Kean), late of No. 47, Queensborough-terrace, Kensington-gardens, who died on Aug. 20 last, was proved on the 8th ult. by Mrs. Mary Maria Logie, the daughter and acting executrix, the personal estate being sworn under £3000. The testatrix bequeaths to her niece, Miss Martha Eliza Chapman, £1000 railway stock, certain furniture, books, and pictures, and her dog "Toozey," free of legacy duty; and the residue of her property to her said daughter.

THE SKIN.—The glory of woman, the pride of man. It contains the delicate lines of beauty and constitutes all that we term "Loveliness;" yet how many thousands have their skins blemished by the use of the irritant soaps, Carbolic, Coal Tar, Glycerine, and the coarse coloured soaps, caustic with alkali and made of putrid fats. The more delicate the skin the quicker its ruin. The ALBION MILK AND SULPHUR SOAP is the purest, the whitest, and most purifying of all soaps, by its purifying action taking away and preventing all pimples, blotches, and roughness. It is recommended by the entire Medical Profession as the most elegant preparation for the skin that is known. To all Chemist, in Tablets, 6d. and 1s. FLORIMEL OF PALM.
A white and delicate hand is the first attribute of beauty and civilisation. "The hand," says Sir Charles Bell in the "Bridgewater Treatise," "distinguishes man from the brute; he careful of it, for in polite society it is an index not only of the body but of the mind."
The Florimel of Palm being rubbed over the skin is to be removed with a little water, then dried with a soft towel. Once using will convince the most sceptical that, if daily applied, too much cannot be said in favour of Florimel of Palm for rendering the skin or hands white, delicate, soft, and fair.
PIESSE and LUBIN, 2, New Bond-street, London.
May be obtained of any Chemist or Perfumer in the world.

TURKISH PASTILS.
"Through all my travels few things astonished me more than seeing the beauties of the harem smoking Narghiles at Stamboul. After smoking a sweet aromatic lozenge or pastil as used by them, which is said to impart an odour of flowers to the breath. I have never seen those breath scenes but once in Europe, and that was at PIESSE and LUBIN'S shop in Bond-street."—Lady W. Montagu.
In Boxes, 2s.; by post, 2s. 2d.

SWEET SACHETS.
PIESSE and LUBIN compose every variety of Sachet Powder the same odours as their many perfumes for the handkerchief. Placed in a drawer, stud, or travelling-bag, they impart a grateful and pleasing perfume without being too pungent. Piesse and Lubin have, on demand, Dried Odorous Flowers, Spices, and Odoriferous Gums. Per ounce, 1s. 6d.; per lb., 21s.
2, NEW BOND-STREET, LONDON.

A MASS OF CURLS.—COX'S CURLING FLUID (protected by Proprietor's Signature) ensures Curly and Wavy Hair, also assists the Growth. Warranted harmless and certain. Price 4s. 6d. per Bottle, carriage paid, free from observation; or order of your local Chemist, or send direct to the Sole Agent for Great Britain, J. L. N. Mansfield, Commission Agent, 39, St. Mary-le-square, London, S.E.

VALUABLE DISCOVERY for the HAIR. If your hair is turning grey, or white, or falling off, use "The Mexican Hair Renewer," for it will positively restore in every case Grey or White Hair to its original colour, without leaving the disagreeable smell of most Restorers. It makes the hair charmingly beautiful, as well as promoting the growth of the hair on bald spots where the glands are not decayed. "The Mexican Hair Renewer" is sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, at 3s. 6d. per Bottle.

FLORILINE. For the Teeth and Breath. Is the best Liquid Dentifrice in the world; it thoroughly cleanses partially-decayed teeth from all parasites or living animalculæ, leaving them pearly white, imparting a delightful fragrance to the breath. The fragrant Florilline removes instantly all odours arising from a foul stomach or tobacco smoke, being partly composed of honey, soda, and extracts of sweet herbs and plants. It is perfectly harmless, and delicious as sherry. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, at 2s. 6d. per Bottle.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.
LONDON: SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1881.

The Parliamentary storm is over. The atmosphere of the House of Commons, partly owing, no doubt, to reaction from a long period of excitement, has become quiet, genial, and even dull. Organised obstruction, at least in its coarser form, has been put down. The change is owing mainly to the patience, patriotism, and courage of the Speaker. His interposition, which, in truth, has saved our representative system from contempt, is, perhaps, without precedent in the annals of Parliament. The right hon. gentleman acted upon "his own responsibility and his sense of duty to the House." In an abstract constitutional sense his refusal to permit the further protraction of the debate for leave to introduce the Protection of Life and Property (Ireland) Bill, on Wednesday se'nnight, after a sitting of forty-one hours, may be open to adverse criticism. The circumstances of the case, however, justified, and even demanded, that extreme act of authority. He had exercised forbearance until forbearance was in danger of degenerating into weakness. He saw that the character—possibly the very existence—of the House of Commons was at stake; that the conduct of a minority, consisting of a mere handful of members, aimed at inflicting degradation on the House itself. Of that House he was the head. Of its dignity he had been constituted a guardian. Hitherto, he had restricted the exercise of his delegated powers within the ordinary limits prescribed by written and unwritten regulations. But now that the question had arisen whether the freedom of debate and of action, which the constitution presupposes, should be strangled by a misuse of the very forms it devised to secure them, he had the manliness to sacrifice forms for the sake of the substance, and to prefer the realisation of a great Imperial end to the preservation of the customary means of obtaining it. Quietly, but firmly, after a few moments' clear exposition of the situation, he put the amendment of Dr. Lyons to the effect that remedial should precede coercive legislation, then under consideration, to the vote, and after a division which showed a large preponderance of numbers against the amendment, he immediately put the main question—namely, that leave be given to bring in the Bill, which was assented to nem. con., and accordingly introduced by Mr. W. E. Forster. This was the first stage of the proceedings.

The second was reserved for Thursday. The introduction, discussion, and adoption, on the motion of the Leader of the House, of a new Standing Order for preventing future deliberate and persistent obstruction, was preceded by what is said to have been an unpremeditated, but was assuredly an extraordinary, episode. The arrest of Mr. Michael Davitt, in Dublin, during the day had been effected. Mr. Parnell put a question to the Secretary of State for the Home Department as to the truth of the information he had received of the fact. Sir W. Harcourt confirmed the statement, and assigned, as the ground for his decision, that the conduct of Michael Davitt had been incompatible with the ticket of leave by which a convict enjoying the conditional favour of the Crown is permitted to be at large. To a second question inquiring which of the conditions of the ticket of leave had been violated by the prisoner, Sir W. Harcourt gave no reply. It was then that Mr. Gladstone rose to bring forward his new Standing Order; whereupon Mr. Dillon also rose, and was told by the Speaker that the Premier was "in possession of the House." Mr. Dillon, however, did not resume his seat, whereupon the Speaker "named" him, according to the terms of the Standing Order passed upwards of twelve months ago, "as wilfully disregarding the authority of the Chair." Mr. Gladstone then moved that Mr. Dillon be suspended from the service of the House during the day's sitting. Upon it the House divided, when there appeared for it 395, and against it 33 votes. Still Mr. Dillon declined to obey when called upon by the Speaker to withdraw, and the Serjeant-at-Arms was ordered to remove him, which, after a sufficient show of force, was done. Again and again Mr. Gladstone rose to bring forward his motion; again and again he was interrupted by one or other of the advanced Party of Home Rulers. At length Mr. Parnell was named as guilty of wilful and deliberate obstruction, a motion for his suspension was made and put; but the Home-Rule members, as a protest against the alleged illegality of the proceeding, kept their seats during the division. The numbers were—Ayes, 405; Noes, 7. Mr. Parnell was removed, on a show of force, as Mr. Dillon had been. But why go through the whole story? The Home Rulers were successively suspended and removed to the number of thirty-five, after which the Premier proceeded with his motion. The scene was a thrilling one, but the hon. gentlemen who put themselves in opposition to the Chair were clearly disorderly in more than one respect. The mistake, originating possibly in the passion of the moment, betrayed them into the hands of their opponents; so that during their absence from the House the Motion of Mr. Gladstone, after considerable amendment, at the instance of Sir Stafford Northcote, was carried by 371 Ayes against 28 Noes.

And now we come to the Order itself. It is stringent enough. It would have been unnecessarily stringent if it had been carried in its original form. The Conservatives have done credit to themselves, as well as to the House, by the changes they introduced into the framework of the motion. It puts the whole authority of the House, in certain prescribed circumstances—so far at least as concerns the regulation of Procedure—into the Speaker's hands. Of course, such power will be vested in the right hon. gentleman on certain occasions only. Ordinarily, the business of the House will proceed as it did before. The new rule will come into operation only under the following restrictions. "Urgency of public business" is to be moved, after due notice, by a Minister of the Crown, who in the course of his statement in support of the motion will point out what that business is which is to be regarded as urgent. The question will then be submitted to the House by the Speaker, no debate, amendment, or adjournment being allowed. The majority (should the House go to a division) in favour of urgency must be three to one in a House of not less than 300 members. The state of urgency may be declared at an end by the Speaker himself, or by a Majority of the House, duly ascertained and reported. The authority thus transferred to the hands of the Speaker, and which for the time being will be unlimited, will not, it may be easily inferred, be lightly invoked, needlessly prolonged, or tyrannically exercised. It is a weapon only to be taken from the shelf when exigency requires, and to be put back again when the necessity for it is past. It may never be used; it may become speedily obsolete; but it also may be effectually resorted to for the purpose of putting down wilful obstruction. Regretful as we must all be that any occasion should have arisen for the invention of such an instrument of self-defence, we cannot but feel relieved that the House of Commons has at length been put into a position to remove out of its path the wilful obstruction which has lately paralysed its functions.

Lord Oda Russell is to be raised to the Peerage under the title of Lord Ampthill.

Mr. Henry Fox Bristowe, Q.C., has been appointed to the post of Vice-Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, vacant by the death of Mr. George Little, Q.C.

Mr. Patrick Fraser, Dean of Faculty, has been appointed to the Judgeship of the Court of Session, vacant by the resignation of the late Lord Ormidale. It is stated that it is not the intention of the Government to fill up the vacancy caused by the resignation of Lord Gifford.

The Registrar-General in his weekly return states that in London 2925 births and 1926 deaths were registered last week. Allowing for increase of population, the births exceeded by 225, and the deaths by 43, the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The deaths included 54 from smallpox, 39 from measles, 38 from scarlet fever, 12 from diphtheria, 39 from whooping-cough, 8 from enteric fever, 1 from ill-defined form of continued fever, 16 from diarrhœa, 1 from dysentery, and none from either typhus or simple cholera; thus 208 deaths were referred to these diseases, being 47 below the corrected average number in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The fatal cases of smallpox, which had been 27, 42, and 52 in the three preceding weeks, further rose to 54 last week. The number of smallpox patients in the Metropolitan Asylum Hospitals, which had steadily increased from 77 to 520 in the fourteen preceding weeks, further rose to 617 on Saturday last. This is the largest number that has been under treatment in these hospitals since June, 1878. The deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs, which had been 371, 617, and 702 in the three preceding weeks, declined last week, under the influence of mild weather, to 606, but exceeded the corrected weekly average number in the corresponding week of the last ten years by 52. Different forms of violence caused 79 deaths.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

It is not in a column of rambling and disjointed gossip that I could fitly do even such feeble justice as I am able to render to the memory of THOMAS CARLYLE. If I have read the words of any writer searchingly, lovingly, and reverently, I have read his my whole working life through; and the news that he is dead, although from his great age the loosening of the Silver Cord and the breaking of the Golden Bowl had long been expected, strikes on the sense with an unusually deep and mournful knell. To the Republic of Letters it is as though the Great Bell of Paul's were sounding—the bell that only sounds when Royalty dies. And this Patriarch of Chelsea was indeed Anazandron—a King of Men.

In the vaults of the Pantheon, at Paris, there is the tomb of an illustrious French philosopher; and from one of the walls of the sarcophagus there extends a brazen hand grasping a flaming torch. The light he kindled still, from his tomb by the Mountain of Ste. Geneviève, illumines the world of thought. So will it be, we all trow, with Thomas Carlyle. His mortal part is resolved into the Eternal Silence; but the voice of the old man eloquent will not be hushed. His rugged dialect, his humour, now grim and now sarcastic (did you ever read the account which he wrote—it was in some keepsake or annual—of the only visit he ever paid to the Italian Opera, and of the ballet he saw there?), his pathos, often very tender and touching, his vehement invective, his stern denunciations of Wrong, his scathing sneers at Fraud and Meanness, and Hypocrisy will all be patent, I should say, to English-speaking students so long as English letters endure.

Was he "understanded of the people;" and will he be better understood a generation hence? These are questions which may not lightly be answered, and which I, for one, would shrink from undertaking to answer. I will frankly own that I was a long way past twenty-one before I could construe Carlyle with even tolerable facility. When I was a mere lad, say about 1844, very raw and obscure, and poor and ragged and happy, I used to spend my evenings at a coffee-shop in Long-acre. Potter's I think it was called. The tariff for refreshments was not onerous. Coffee a penny. Bread-and-butter a penny. The fascination of Potter consisting in his having a library of some thousands of volumes, very limp and dog's-eared, and so oleaginous that they seemed to be redolent of the fried bacon which he dispensed so liberally at twopence per rasher.

In the Potterian library there was a set of Fraser's Magazine from the commencement. From those volumes of Fraser I drank—yes, drank—all Thackeray's earlier essays and stories, "The Yellow-Plush Papers," "Catherine," "Barry Lynden," and so forth; all Maginn's "Homeric Ballads," Father Prout's "Reliques," and especially the "Sartor Resartus" of Thomas Carlyle. Should it be to my shame that I confess that I could not, after twice reading it through with painful deliberation, and digging my elbows into Potter's dinted and coffee-smirched table, understand so much as one page out of three of the "Sartor." Yet by the same hand, and in the same magazine, there was a series of papers narrating the history of Madame de la Motte and the Diamond Necklace, which I could comprehend very clearly. I am inclined at present very narrowly to question the bona fides of any young man of ordinary intelligence under five-and-twenty who declares that he has completely mastered the inner geist of the "Sartor Resartus."

One young man, indeed, I did know in my adolescence who precociously understood Carlyle. That was poor James Hannay, author of "Satire and Satirists," Quarterly Reviewer, some time Editor of the Edinburgh Courant, who died British Consul at Barcelona. Hannay, on leaving the Royal Navy, had "taken up" Carlyle as a subject for study, even as one might "take up" Sanscrit or Geology, Telugu, Astronomy, Sclavonic, or Crystallography. The hardest of students when he chose, Hannay understood the Sage of Chelsea at last, and had an opportunity of telling him so. He came to know Carlyle, and to be honoured by the friendship of the great scholar and philosopher — the eloquent historian, the wise and blameless man.

My contemporary "Atlas" (who, by-the-way, does not approve of the Kyrle Society), speaking in a previous issue of the conversion of a youthful patrician to another Communion, mentions that the young gentleman's noble papa bears a Royal achievement of arms "with a bar sinister." What is "a bar sinister"? I have heard of a "bend sinister," and of a shield being "debruised with a bâton sinister." Of the sinister "bar" I am yet ignorant; and it is never too late to learn.

As it notably happened in the case of the "Dukeries." An English lady in Switzerland asked me to explain the term. It happened that I did not know the precise locality of the "Dukeries;" so in this column I asked the question where they were situated. "D. B.," one of many correspondents tells me that the "Dukery country is in the neighbourhood of Worksop, Notts, in that part of the county which is closed in, so to speak, by Yorkshire (North and West) and by Lincolnshire (Eastward)." It takes its name, says my correspondent, from its comprising the estates of the Duke of Newcastle at Clumber, the Duke of Portland at Welbeck, and that of Earl Manvers, whose ancestors inherited the estates of the extinct dukedom of Kingston. "The Dukes of Norfolk and Rutland," adds "D. B.," "have also residences at no very considerable distance;" and he thinks that the Duke of St. Albans has also broad acres among "the Dukeries." I print this information for the benefit of my correspondent in Switzerland; but I shall refrain from reading any more topographical communications on the matter, which is really a wholly unimportant one, and should no more interest the great body of my readers than (I am sure) it does me.

The question, however (put in thorough good faith), brings me a remarkably silly letter from "W. C. C.," who writes that "he should be surprised if he thought that I was serious in avowing my ignorance as to the Dukeries." And he proceeds to accuse me of habitually "drawing out" my readers. I do assure him that I was perfectly serious in the avowal of ignorance, and that I am not in the habit of "drawing out" my readers, one way or another. They draw me out, with a vengeance. My life is devoted to the acquisition of knowledge. When I am asked a question, and am able to answer it, I answer it. If I am unable to do so, I ask for information; and that is the way to acquire more knowledge. As I said last week, I know scarcely anything of my own country, and could not fill in an outline map with the names of the English counties and chief towns. What on earth had I to do with "the Dukeries," or they with me?

Mem: One correspondent has the common sense to ask why if an English locution is to be manufactured out of the circumstance of a number of Ducal estates being conterminous, we should not say the "Dukery" instead of the "Dukeries." We say a "Rookery," and not "The Rookeries."

The ghost of the horrible Charles Peace, it would seem, is not yet definitively laid in the Red Sea. Something like the counterfeit presentment of the monstrous murderer upon whom justice was done at Leeds has made his appearance in one of the most aristocratic quarters of London—in the Cromwell-road, South Kensington, indeed, burglariously breaking into and out of a gentleman's house, and with murtherous revolver shooting down all and sundry. The desperado who thus ran amuck has not (up to the time of my closing this page) been laid by the heels; but we must all hope to hear ere long that he is in hold. Ten pounds was not much of a reward to be offered by the Criminal Investigation Department for the miscreant's apprehension.

The practice of carrying revolvers by persons who have not the slightest excuse for possessing them has grown, is growing, and should be diminished. The Home Secretary admitted as much in the House of Commons on Tuesday. To my thinking, a heavy tax should be placed on all revolvers not used for naval or military purposes, or for travelling expeditions, or by householders of known respectability anxious to procure such weapons for the purpose of protecting their persons and property. Neither pawnbrokers nor dealers in miscellaneous property should be allowed to sell revolvers, which should be procurable only at licensed gunsmiths, bound by law to keep a strict registration of the persons with whom they deal. The indiscriminate sale of Prussic Acid is not tolerated; and six-shooters are becoming as dangerous as Scheele's Preparation.

By a not very large majority, the long-mooted Divorce Bill brought in by M. Naquet has been rejected by the French Chambers. Do not be afraid that I am about to become controversial on the subject of Matrimonial Causes (I remember the time when a Divorce a vinculo, which required a special Act of Parliament to enable the divorced parties to re-marry and find, if they could, partners more suitable to their minds, cost from a thousand to fifteen hundred pounds). Who was the witty Proctor of Doctors' Commons who said that a divorce suit was like walking barefoot over broken bottles? You bled at every step. We have obtained, for better or for worse, our own laws facilitating divorce and judicial separation; and I suppose that the settlement is to be considered a final one.

I notice that in the course of the debate M. Legrand, speaking against the Bill, remarked that Divorce was not a Democratic institution, and that it could not be re-established without compromising the Republic. Divorce is certainly an "institution" pretty liberally patronised in that most Democratic of communities the United States of America. Old Cobbett, writing at the beginning of the century, said in his wild way that in one of the States the process of divorce did not take ten minutes (I have seen an Algerian cadi divorce half-a-dozen Mahometan couples in the course of half an hour); in the American State in question the crier rang a bell on the steps of the court-house, and made certain proclamations touching the matrimonial relations of A and B. Then the sum of five dollars was paid to the clerk, and the conjugal yoke was summarily broken.

The laws for the dissolution of marriage vary considerably in different States of the Union, but I believe that they are easiest in the State of Indiana. At least there is a joke long current in the Eastern States that trains going west stop ten minutes at Indianopolis "for Refreshment and Divorce." I believe that in some of the States incompatibility of temper is a recognised ground for the abrogation of wedlock. It is curious to reflect that, if such be the case, a similar ground for divorce was vehemently advocated by the greatest of English Puritans and Democrats, John Milton. Deep into the dark hours was I reading this morning "The Doctrine and Discipline of Divorce," when I came on this superbly eloquent passage:—

"Hate is of all things the mightiest divider; nay, it is division itself. To couple hatred, therefore, through wedlock try all her golden links, and borrow to her aid all the iron shackles and manacles of law, it does not serve but to twist a rope of sand: which was a task, they say, that posed the Devil; and that stubborn fiend of Ocnus in Tartarus, whom the poets tell of, brought his idle cordage to as good effect, which never served him to bind with but to feed the ass which stood at his elbow."

I straightway learned this passage by heart and repeated it aloud at breakfast time. It (the passage) was not appreciated; and I was told that Mr. Milton was too fond of quarrelling with his wives on slight pretences, and that he was an Impertinent.

I have been frequently asked "off and on," and generally by young and studious correspondents, how a Common-Place Book should best be kept. It is possible that I have already quoted, in this place, what Bacon wrote concerning the matter in hand; but that which Francis of Verulam thought will surely bear re-quoting:—

"For the disposition and collocation of that knowledge which we preserve in writing it consisteth in a good digest of Common Places. I am not ignorant of the prejudice imputed to Common-Place books as causing a retardation of reading, and some sloth or relaxation of memory. But because it is but a counterfeit thing in knowledge, except a man be deep and full, I hold the entry of Common Places to be a matter of great use and essence in studying, as that which assureth "copia" of invention and contracteth judgment to a strength. But this is true: that of the methods of Common Places that I have seen there is none of any sufficient worth: all of them carrying merely the face of a school and not of a world, and referring to vulgar matters and polemical divisions without all life or respect to action."

This you shall find in the "Advancement of Learning." Book II.; and you might do worse than transcribe the passage on the fly-leaf of each of your common-place books.

I keep mine as a trader keeps his books—in a waste book, a journal, a ledger, and a cash book—the last for entries of notable statistics and historic matters of finance. But I will only indicate a mode of keeping the Waste Book, which includes all kinds of "vulgar matter" and "polemical divisions," consecutively transcribed just as they occur in the course of reading. The process of keeping is simply this: the extracts are at one end of the book and the index is at the other. For example, I make this entry—"Queen Anne is dead and the Dutch have taken Holland." Against this I draw a circle, and in the circle I write, in red ink, a number consecutive to that of the preceding entry, which was, say, (4404). In the Index I enter, under the letter A, "Anne, Queen, her death indubitable:" with the number (4405), and under the letter H, and with the same number (4405), I write, "Holland undeniably taken by the Dutch."

A very careful index-maker will resort to a system of double or even triple entry. For instance, I find in a practical and not a theoretical common-place book, under the date of Jan. 6, 1862, this entry: "And when we said unto the angels 'worship Adam,' they all worshipped him, except Eblis, who refused, and was puffed up with pride, and became of the number of unbelievers." "Sale's Translation of the Koran," Chapter II. "The Cow" (269). In the index, I find under the letter A, "Adam: the angels commanded to worship him; under E, "Eblis refuses to worship Adam;" and under P, "Pride and unbelief of Eblis;" all with the same number (269) for reference in the body of the extracts.

This practice of double or triple entry or "cross-indexing" will by degrees fix indelibly in your memory the fact contained in the extract. I say this because I would not have it thought that I am the base and mechanical slave of common-place books. I never take them on long journeys; and I have been obliged to write thousands of miles away, without the assistance of any books of reference, nearly as much as I have written at home. But, when you are at home, studious young man, be indefatigable in making extracts ("Read with a pen in your hand," said Napoleon the Great, in his wonderfully studious youth), "hammer away" untiringly at your indices; and discard, save as mere toys and pastimes, all systems of artificial memory, from the "Typical" one of Simonides the Greek downwards. They are snares and delusions. They give you the rind, and not the fruit.

"Who would not Sell his Farm and Go to Sea?" This proverbial expression among mariners, which so puzzled my naval correspondent in the "Golden South Americas," and of which I was unable to give any explanation, has brought me a very kind note from "D. S.," Oban, N.B., in which the writer observes that he was forty years at sea, and that he never heard the expression used in fine weather; but that it is commonly used, "all over a ship," when the weather is very bad. "When a sea comes on board and drenches a man to the skin, he shakes himself, and says, with grim good-humour, 'Who wouldn't Sell his Farm and Go to Sea?'"

Meanwhile, a correspondent writing from Wellington College, suggests that the idea embodied in the proverbial saying is to be found in a passage in Horace, which he quotes. I have mislaid his esteemed communication; but I will find it and give the quotation next week. Stay; here it is: the quotation, not the letter; but I declare that I had been hesitating about opening with inky fingers the delicious little edition of Horace, "the Poet of Middle Age" (London: Bell and Daldy, 1855), the recent binding of which (white vellum, extra, tooled) by Mr. Zaehnsdorf is (in combination with other specimens of the bookbinder's art) rapidly accelerating my progress to St. Pancras workhouse. Odes, Book II.

> Gaudentem patrios findere sarculo
> Agros Attalicis conditionibus
> Nunquam dimoveas, ut trabe Cypria
> Myrtoum pavidus, nauta secet mare.

But are sailors, as a rule, Horatian scholars? How would it be if something of the nature of the expression cited by my correspondents at Buenos Ayres, and at Oban, was common twenty centuries ago among the sailors on the quay side at Brundusium or at Ostia? Why not? In the ordinances of Richard the Lionhearted for the government of the fleet in which he sailed to Cyprus frequent mention is made of "the custom of the sea" as something to the origin of which the memory of man ran not. Why should not popular sayings among mariners of all nations be similarly immemorial?

PARISIAN SAYINGS AND DOINGS.

Paris, Tuesday, Feb. 8.

There are weeks when Paris seems to slumber, its pulse beats almost imperceptibly: there are, again, other weeks when the pulse of Paris indicates high fever. The past week has been one of high fever, happily not of a political but of a literary kind. The Londoner who reads in his daily morning paper a column of telegrams from Paris describing at length the development of M. Antonin Proust's interpellation in the Chamber on the foreign policy of France, the debate on the Press Bill, the projects of this and that diplomatist as regards the Greek question or the declarations which M. Barthélemy Saint-Hilaire intends to make in his next circular, obtains, perhaps, an erroneous idea of the life and movement of Paris. The Parisians have other things to think about than politics. MM. Gambetta and Grévy and Messieurs les Députés may be left to guard the interests of the Republic. The Parisians themselves are for the moment entirely devoted to literature and art. Conversation is absorbed by the question Dumas. "Have you seen the 'Princesse de Bagdad?'" "What do you think of the 'Princesse de Bagdad?'" "Do you not think that the piece is impossible, irritating? It would seem as if Dumas had laid a wager to aggravate the public." "In what kind of society does the piece take place?" "In what kind of society? Eh! at Charenton!" And so the discussion waxes hot. Article after article appears in the newspapers. The critics are divided. M. Sarcey finds the piece feeble and melodramatic; others find it bold and strong. The public is separated into two camps: one camp defends the character of the heroine, the other declares her to be unnatural and impossible. The piece is even being discussed in public meetings, and only last night M. Henry de Lapommeraye, one of our most accomplished critics, made an eloquent defence of M. Dumas' play before an unusually large and distinguished audience. We might almost believe ourselves carried back to the golden days of Romanticism, when Victor Hugo was general of the forces, and when Théophile Gautier, in his immortal red waistcoat, led the battalion of the Jeunes-France at the battle and victory of "Hernani."

Apropos of Victor Hugo, the illustrious poet will enter upon his eightieth year on the 27th of this month. It is proposed to celebrate the event by a public manifestation—Paris, the whole town, without distinction of opinion, political or religious, coming with joy and emotion to raise a barricade of flowers in front of the poet's villa. If this project be carried into execution—and why should it not be?—what an imposing and touching sight it would be! What a terrible blow to the common belief that the Parisians, of all the French, are those who preserve with most obstinacy the curious habit of insulting their great men while they are alive and raising statues to their memory when they are dead. Victor Hugo, in his long life, will have been one of the most honoured and most insulted of mortals. No man has been discussed with more fury and more passion than the poet who is now universally acclaimed. The vocabulary of invective has been exhausted against his prose and against his verse. He has been called vandal, brigand, incendiary, velche, helot, curse, cannibal, savage, iconoclast. He has been compared to Dubartas, to Scarron, to Gongoza. He has been found absurd, ridiculous, grandiloquent, trivial, convulsive, emphatic. He has been caricatured and parodied. Men in high places, academicians even, have signed petitions to the King to prevent the performance of his plays. Nay, has he not been shot at in the Champs-Elysées as if he were a vulgar temporal King? What fuller cup of glory could mortal man desire?

The battle of naturalism is raging fiercely side by side with the Dumas conflict. A comic paper has represented Zola and Dumas as showmen standing on a platform in front of their respective booths, beating big drums, and vaunting the merits of "Nana" and of the "Princesse de Bagdad." The showman Zola offers a tempting premium to the visitors to his exhibition: "At the end of the performance the delicious Nana will communicate the smallpox to the spectators!" En vérité, on n'est pas plus gracieux. But "Nana" has been equalled if not surpassed in realistic abominations by a drama called "Zoë Chien-Chien," produced at the Théâtre des Nations on Saturday last. In this piece we are introduced into the interior of St. Lazare, and to the doing of the ignoble police des mœurs. Such literature is sickening; my only excuse for mentioning it is that I desire to make my record of the life and movement of Paris as complete as space will permit, and that at the present time "naturalism," after having long been militant, threatens to become triumphant.

The world of the fine arts is very animated just now; it is the season of small exhibitions at the artistic clubs and elsewhere, the season of the petits Salons, to be followed in a couple of months by the grand Salon. The most important exhibitions are those of the Cercle Artistique et Littéraire and of the Cercle de l'Union Artistique, better known as the Mirlitons. Carolus Duran is represented at both exhibitions by some portraits. To change a homistich of Robert Browning: "Duran's your painter now!" His portraits of children remind one of Velasquez: they are superb. At the Place Vendôme M. Bastien-Lepage exhibits a portrait of "Monseigneur le Prince de Galles," the same, I believe, which was in the Royal Academy last year. This portrait, an attempt to resuscitate the style of Holbein, is very severely criticised here. For the Parisians, more perhaps even than for the Londoners, the Prince of Wales is an essentially modern figure, almost a boulevardier; and were it not for the name of the canvas the Parisians would hardly recognise the fine and robust head of the Prince in M. Bastien-Lepage's monotonous and pale portrait, so feebly modelled and so loosely drawn that the head becomes confounded with the embroidery of the grotesque Henry VIII. costume in which the Prince is dressed.

Another exhibition which is much talked about is that of the water-colours of Jules Jacquemart, the celebrated engraver.

Literature and art have taken up so much space in my letter this week that I have but little room left to talk of politics. The sittings of the Chamber of Deputies have, however, not been without interest of late. On Thursday M. Antonin Proust made a long-expected interpellation on French foreign policy, and the Chamber again passed a resolution approving the pacific policy of the Ministry. The Chamber further resolved to pass to a second reading of the new Press Bill, and on Saturday, to everybody's surprise, M. Alfred Naquet's bill for the re-establishment of divorce in France was placed upon the order of the day. By 254 votes against 211 the Deputies resolved to pass to the discussion of the articles of the bill, a fact which seems to show that the Chamber is in favour of divorce. The discussion has naturally attracted the attention of the ladies, and yesterday and to-day the tribunes of the Palais Bourbon were filled by high-born and influential ladies, clad in gay and gorgeous raiment, who drank in eagerly the words of MM. Naquet, Louis Legrand, Léon Renault, and other orators. The discussion was continued before a full House this afternoon, when M. Cazot, in accordance with a decision taken at the Cabinet Council this morning, rose to oppose M. Naquet's bill in the name of the Government. Finally, the bill was rejected by 261 votes to 225. T. ### SPAIN.

The Chamber of Deputies on Monday rejected, by 164 votes to 44, a motion censuring the Government for having prohibited certain banquets which were to have been held to celebrate the anniversary of the proclamation of the Spanish Republic in 1873. During the debate the Minister of the Interior said that he would prohibit the holding of any banquet, the object of which was directed against the existing institutions of the country.

In consequence of the refusal of King Alfonso to sign the Bill for the conversion of the redeemable debts of Spain, the Ministry has tendered its resignation, and a new Cabinet has been formed under Señor Sagasta.

A Royal decree dissolving the Cortes was read in the Chambers on Wednesday.

ITALY.

King Humbert visited the University of Rome on Wednesday morning, and was most enthusiastically received by the students.

The Third College at Rome has re-elected the newly appointed Minister of Public Instruction, Signor Bacelli, as its representative in the Chamber of Deputies.

Monday being the anniversary of the death of Pius IX., the Pope celebrated a solemn Requiem in the Sistine Chapel. The Standard correspondent at Rome states that the spectacle was magnificent and imposing. A very large number of Cardinals, the whole of the Vatican Corps Diplomatique and the ladies of Embassies, with many of the Roman aristocracy, were present, as well as the Russian Grand Dukes. Cardinal Di Pietro, Dean of the Sacred College, celebrated; the Holy Father pronounced the Absolution.

GERMANY.

The marriage contract between Prince William and Princess Victoria of Schleswig-Holstein has been completed and signed at Berlin. The illustrious bride, accompanied by Prince Christian, her uncle, on Monday passed Dresden, on their way to Prinkenau Castle, the seat of the Dowager Duchess of Schleswig-Holstein.

The German Parliament has been convened for the 15th inst.

Mr. Goschen, on his way to Constantinople, has had interviews with the Emperor William and Prince Bismarck at Berlin. He had a protracted audience of the Emperor on Sunday, and was afterwards received by the Crown Prince and Princess of Germany. His Excellency left on Monday.

Prince Bismarck made a speech yesterday week in the Prussian Parliament, in which he urged that the taxes on tobacco and spirituous liquors must be considerably increased, and announced that he intended to fight to the last against opposition to his views. Parliamentary conflicts, he said, would not make him swerve from his principles. He would not retire until commanded to do so by the Emperor.

The German Emperor has accepted Dr. Schliemann's offer of the Trojan relics which he discovered, and which have been exhibited in this country, and they are to be assigned a department in the new Ethnological Museum in Berlin.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

The Crown Prince returned to Vienna on Monday from Brussels, where he has been staying for a fortnight past as a guest of the Brussels Court.

Mr. Goschen arrived in Vienna on Tuesday morning, viâ Constantinople, and was received by Sir H. Elliot, with whom he visited the Russian Embassy, and afterwards proceeded to the Austrian Foreign Office, where he had a long conference with Baron Haymerle.

The Upper House of the Hungarian Delegation has finally passed the Bill authorising the introduction of taxes on articles of consumption.

TURKEY.

In consequence of the necessities of the State, the Porte, it is stated, is making preparations for the imposition of new taxes, including a poll tax.

GREECE.

In the Chamber on Saturday last M. Commoundouros, in reply to a question, said that the Powers continue to show a very friendly disposition towards Greece. Europe desired a pacific solution of the Turco-Greek question; but the Powers had never advised Greece to reduce her claims or to moderate her aspirations. All they had counselled the Hellenic Government to do was to avoid taking hasty, irrevocable steps in the matter. "Any precipitate action on our part," said M. Coumoundouros, "would wound Europe, and might damage our cause."

The present strength of the army is 54,000 men, of whom 39,663 have been enrolled since last summer. The reserves will shortly be called out, when the army will number 75,000 men.

AMERICA.

The projectors of the New York World's Fair gave General Grant a reception last Saturday, when he accepted the Presidency of the Commission. Subscriptions to the funds were opened last week, and 322,500 dols. have been already subscribed by private individuals. The desire is to raise 4,000,000 dols.

Congress on Saturday last passed the resolution ordering the Presidential votes to be counted on the 9th inst., when Messrs. Garfield and Arthur were to be formally declared elected. The resolution avoided any declarations which heretofore have caused partisan conflicts.

A resolution has been introduced in the House of Representatives regretting the misunderstanding between the English authorities and the Transvaal Boers, deploring the shedding of blood in consequence of that difference, sympathising with Great Britain's efforts to preserve the Christians of South Africa from the incursions of savages, and requesting the President of the Republic to convey to her Majesty Queen Victoria the good wishes of the people of America in regard to the British Colonies, together with the expression of their hope that there will be no more bloodshed, and that her Majesty may see fit to accord independence to the Transvaal if it should be found that the people have no desire for annexation to Great Britain.

Another resolution, expressing increased solicitude on account of the painful condition of affairs in Ireland, and renewing the expression of sympathy with the Irish people, has been introduced in the House of Representatives.

Mr. Collins, president of the Irish National League in the United States, has issued a violent proclamation denouncing the course pursued by the English Government in Irish affairs, appealing to America to protest against it, and urging the assembling of indignation meetings in every city of the Union. Indignation meetings were held at New York and elsewhere on Sunday, by the branches of the Irish Land League, to protest against the policy of the British Government.

In the House of Commons, yesterday week, Sir J. Alexander Macdonald, the Premier, stated that there had been some correspondence between the British and Canadian Governments respecting immigration from Ireland.

BRAZIL.

The Chambers were closed on the 11th ult. by a speech from the Emperor, in which his Majesty thanked both Houses for passing the Electoral Reform Bill. The relations of Brazil with Foreign States were friendly, and tranquillity prevailed throughout the empire. The text of the new Electoral Law has been published. The Cabinet offered to resign in order to allow the Emperor to choose new Ministers to carry out its provisions, but, his Majesty declining to accept their resignation, the Ministers remain in office.

Slight shocks of earthquake were felt last Saturday at Reggio, in Calabria.

The Servian Skuptschina on Monday, unanimously passed a resolution in favour of closing all the monasteries in Servia, and the Minister of Public Worship promised to prepare a bill in that sense. He stated at the same time that the proposed measure would necessitate a modification of the Constitution.

The King of Ashantee is stated to have declared war against the British Government on the Gold Coast because of the Governor's refusal to surrender a native chief who had taken refuge on British territory. On hearing of King Coffee's threatening attitude, the Governor of Sierra Leone dispatched 250 of the 2nd West India Regiment, who were due to arrive at Cape Coast Castle on the 2nd inst. The force under the control of the Governor on receiving King Coffee's ultimatum consisted mainly of Houssas, a company of which was immediately dispatched, with three guns, to the frontier.

THE LATE MRS. S. C. HALL.

The death of this lady, a very popular and pleasing writer, has been recorded in our Obituary. Mrs. Hall was in the eighty-first year of her age. Her maiden name was Anna Maria Fielding, and she was a native of Dublin; she was married to Mr. Hall in 1824. Five years afterwards she published "Sketches of Irish Character." A little later Mr. and Mrs. Hall published their joint book, "Ireland: Its Scenery, Character, &c." Among other volumes which they have produced, "The Book of the Thames" was one of the most successful, having passed through several editions since it was first published in the Art Journal. Mrs. Hall was author of many tales or novels—"The Buccaneer," "Woman's Trials," "The Outlaw," "Uncle Horace;" "Marion, or a Young Maid's Fortunes;" "The Whiteboy," "Midsummer Eve," "A Woman's Story," and "The Fight of Faith;" and of one or two plays, one of which, "The French Refugee," was performed at the St. James's Theatre. She also wrote a series of papers describing the homes and haunts of English poets, which appeared in her husband's Art Journal. Besides their literary labours, Mr. and Mrs. Hall were engaged in founding several philanthropic societies and institutions. Mrs. Hall was also the originator of the Florence Nightingale Fund. For some years past Mrs. Hall had enjoyed a Civil List pension of £100 per annum, and had received other marks of Royal favour.

THE LATE COLONEL DEANE.

Colonel Bonar Millett Deane, late of the 19th Foot, Deputy-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General at the Cape of Good Hope, was killed in the attack on Lang's Neck Pass, in the Transvaal. He was in command of the advance column of Sir George Colley's force, consisting of the 3rd Battalion 60th Rifles and two companies of the 58th Foot. He entered the Army in 1853, and joined the 22nd Foot, then serving in India. He became Lieutenant in the 22nd in 1855, and was Adjutant to that corps from 1856 till his promotion to the rank of Captain in 1857. The 22nd Regiment returned from India in 1855, and embarked for Malta in 1860. Colonel Deane became Major of the 22nd in 1863, but was transferred to the 18th (Royal Irish) in 1864, and to the 19th Foot in 1865. He served on the Indian Staff as Assistant-Quartermaster-General at head-quarters, Madras, from 1866 to 1871, and received the brevet rank of Lieutenant-Colonel in 1873. From 1872 to 1875 he was military secretary to Sir Philip Wodehouse, Governor of Bombay. He rejoined his regiment, the 19th Foot, as Regimental Lieutenant-Colonel in 1875. He continued in command of the first battalion of the 19th at Aldershott and other home stations, until placed on half pay in 1879, having attained the brevet rank of Colonel. In the same year he was appointed extra Inspector under the Local Government Board in Ireland during the distress of last winter. This post he resigned last year, in order to undertake the staff duties at the Cape of Good Hope.

The portrait is from a photograph by Messrs. Hills and Saunders, of Eton, Aldershott, and London.

DOMESTIC THEATRICALS.

Our three Illustrations of the preparation and performance of a very delightful private entertainment of this kind, by a large party of young people, with the approval and assistance of their kindly elders, will be understood without much need of particular explanation. The little girls attiring themselves in the dressing-room, or hastening to take from the servant-maid a quantity of articles of dress that she has just brought in, seem to be engaged in a manner always sure to be agreeable to lively spirits of their sex. The second of these views, which ought rather to be entitled "From the Stage," shows us the assembled audience, young and old, in front of the stage, from the aged grandmother down to the smallest baby; while to the right hand, behind the screen, all the dramatis personæ stand in waiting for their signal to appear and begin the play. A four-year old girl, led forward by her elder sister, is about to speak the prologue. In the dénouement of "the Last Act," whatever may have been the action and dialogue of the preceding dramatic representation, we can easily recognise the seasonable apparition of some jolly old personage—he may be Father Christmas—or the New Year, if he were not so old—or Old Father Time—or Gog of Guildhall, converted to jovial generosity—who makes everybody happy with his liberal gifts of sweetmeats and toys. We have a shrewd suspicion that it is only Papa in disguise; but please don't tell.

THE PLAYHOUSES.

Mr. William Gilbert, the father of Mr. W. S. Gilbert, the satiric poet and dramatist, once wrote a sociological romance—and an excellent one it was—called "A Story for the Philistines." On Wednesday, the Second inst., just after last week's "Playhouses" had gone to press, I went to the Prince of Wales's Theatre to witness the first performance of what I may term a Grand Play for the Philistines, being a new comedy in Three Acts, entitled "The Colonel." It is written by Mr. F. C. Burnand; its dialogue overbrims with fun and epigram; it is excellently well acted; it was received throughout with shouts of laughter and applause; and it must be pronounced a brilliant and unqualified success. It is earnestly to be hoped that the Philistine Host will so flock into the house of which Mr. Edgar Bruce is lessee and manager for so many weeks as shall constitute a turning-point in the fortunes of a most charming and well-conducted theatre. Otherwise I hold "The Colonel" to be a very unfair play; and I am going to show its unfairness, and to protest against it.

Mr. Burnand has had the modesty to announce that "The Colonel" is partly founded on a French piece called "Le Mari à la Campagne," which was adapted to the English stage many years ago by the late Mr. Morris Barnett as a comedy-drama called "The Serious Family." The French author of "Le Mari à la Campagne" was less candid than Mr. Burnand. He did not mention his indebtedness to a short story called "Un Double Ménage," any more than M. Alexandre Dumas the Younger mentioned that he had borrowed largely from the same Henri de Balzac's character of Coralie in "Un Grand Homme de Province à Paris," in order to strengthen the character of Marguerite Gautier in his own "Dame aux Camellias." But let that pass. Everybody has stolen from Balzac. As a matter of fact, Mr. Burnand's debt to the French dramaturge is infinitesmal; and more than nine tenths of "The Colonel" must be acknowledged as altogether original and redolent of the humour and vivacity of its accomplished author. As regards "The Serious Family," it may be said absolutely that Mr. Burnand "owes the cat no fur," and "the worm no silk." His hypocrite is entirely out of diapason with the fraudulent and sanctimonious hypocrite, Aminadab Sleek, who reminded us equally of Tartuffe, Mawworm, and the Rev. Mr. Stiggins. In lieu of a pseudo religious "fraud" it has pleased Mr. Burnand to devise an æsthetic one. He has invented a High Art swindler: a type of humanity, I confess, new to me. I have heard of roguish picture-dealers; but I never yet came upon a lecturer on the Beautiful in Art who was a mean and truckling rascal. Perhaps Mr. Burnand had "James Weathercock"—Wainwright the artist, and critic, and forger, in his eye when he drew the character of the despicable impostor Lambert Streyke. But, then, Wainwright was not a "mean cuss." He did things en grand. He not only forged, but murdered.

The plot of "The Colonel" may be very briefly related. The once-happy home of Richard Forrester (Mr. W. Herbert) is made miserable by the invasion thereof by a rascally Professor of the Beautiful (with a big B), Mr. Lambert Streyke (Mr. James Fernandez), who contrives to breed a coolness between Forrester and his young, beauteous, and somewhat weak-minded wife (Miss Myra Holme), and utterly to fascinate and dominate her vulgar and foolish mother, Lady Tompkins (Mrs. Leigh Murray), the relict of a City Alderman. The crafty Streyke hopes to inveigle the widow, who is wealthy, into marrying him; and he is also eager to secure the hand of Nellie, Forrester's sister and ward (Miss C. Grahame), for his nephew Basil Giorgione (Mr. Rowland Buckstone), whose real name is Bill Something or another, and who has been a druggist's assistant, but who, at the instigation of his uncle, poses as an artist of the "consummate" kind, and paints horrible daubs which Streyke declares and the two infatuated women believe to surpass the masterpieces of Cimabue and Giotto. The results from this state of things are those which, in analogous circumstances, take place in "Le Mari à la Campagne" and in "Un Double Menage." Denied happiness at home, Forrester seeks it elsewhere. He is continually going on pretended fishing excursions; but his angling really means his putting up at a West-End hotel, assuming the name of Fisher, and carrying on a flirtation with a dashing and coquettish widow, Mrs. Blyth (Miss Amy Roselle). He even seems to be on the point of offering marriage to this lady, but Mr. Burnand dexterously slurs over such an embarrassing conjuncture; and the discovery of the pseudo Fisher's escapade by the indignant Lady Tompkins and her daughter Olive timeously puts a stop to a very equivocal state of things so far as the relations of Forrester and Mrs. Blyth are concerned. The Deus ex Machinâ, who eventually sets things straight and restores peace and happiness to a distracted household, is a certain Colonel, Wootwool W. Wood (Mr. Coghlan), described as of "the United States Cavalry." The Colonel, who is a friend of Forrester's youth, kindly yet gravely remonstrates with him on the score of his compromising flirtation with the dashing widow, who he has not the slightest idea is an old and fondly-loved flame of his own. He discovers that the Professor of the Beautiful (with a big B) and his "consummate" nephew are arrant knaves and cheats, that, while pretending to be ascetics as well as "æsthetics," scorning the flesh-pots of Egypt, they are gross Sybarites, who gorge heavy suppers at the house of one Romelli, an Italian restaurateur, with whom they have run up a long bill. "The Colonel" succeeds in completely unmasking this brace of impostors, and they are duly kicked out of Forrester's house. The estranged husband and wife are reconciled; Lady Tompkins repents (the idea of a repentant mother-in-law is good); Nellie Forrester, instead of wedding young "Pill-blister," alias Basil Giorgione, is united to the real sweetheart of her choice, Edward Langton (Mr. Eric Bayley); and "The Colonel" is married to his old flame, Mrs. Blyth, to whom he has been all along passionately attached. Whether the moral of all this is that it is a wicked thing to go to the Grosvenor Gallery, and that the demons of Fraud and Hypocrisy are always crouching behind the canvases of Mr. E. Burne Jones and Mr. Walter Crane, I do not know.

Mr. Burnand's funny ridicule of the people of culture who are called "Æsthetes" has been called by some critics harmless and good-natured. I am willing to believe in its harmlessness; because culture (or "cultchaw," as Mr. Burnand would call it) is rapidly making rapid progress and will win the day over stupid and vulgar Philistinism; but I fail to see its good-nature. The costume worn and the phraseology assumed by a very small section of the party of culture may be legitimate subjects for ridicule. So, precisely, might be some of the histrionic fantasies of the Ritualists; but I distinctly question the right of a dramatist to invite inference that the love of an influential body of thoughtful and accomplished persons for Mediæval art, or of a large number of earnest and devoted clergymen for mediæval rites and ceremonies can be made a cloak for the most detestable hypocrisy and for downright swindling. Because we may happen to admire Pietro Perugono or Andrea Mantegna, is there any need that we should forthwith go out picking pockets? Does the study of Pugin and the "Tracts for the Times" necessarily lead to our telling lies and obtaining money under false pretences? As rather an elderly hand at discovering the "tricks and manners" of dramatists, I think I can hit upon the cause of this gross injustice having been done to a most inoffensive class in English Society. In the first instance, Mr. Burnand (who is bound to back up the Maudle and Postlethwaytisms of Mr. Du Maurier) burned to have a slap at the "Æsthetes," and he did not exactly know where to "have" them. The "Æsthetes" were to him even as the celebrated "Pump and Tubs" were to Mr. Vincent Crummles. On the other hand, Mr. Burnand found the plot of a play with a hypocrite in it. He would not make him a religious hypocrite, because he remembered and wished to avoid all kind of foregathering with Aminadab Sleek. So he took a couple of the coarsest rascals on whom he could lay hands—two more squalid outfitts never footed it on the treadmill—and draped them with the garments of an æsthetic professor and a "consummate" painter. But the clothes do not suit their limbs, and I protest against the misfit. The piece in its dialogue and costumes is so clever, and the acting is, "all round," so good, that I shall go to see "The Colonel" again, and report further upon it next week. For the sake of the Philistines (if there be geese there must be stubble), I hope that "The Colonel" will have a long and prosperous run.

Artistic good taste and elegance, admirable acting and perfect stage management reigned triumphant at the Haymarket Theatre on Saturday, the 5th inst., when Messrs. Tom Taylor and Charles Reade's original comedy of "Masks and Faces" was revived, in the presence of a crowded audience, with complete and well deserved-success. It was during their brilliant career of management at the Prince of Wales's Theatre that Mr. and Mrs. Bancroft last revived, a few years ago, this sterling English play, Mrs. Bancroft being then, as now, the Peg Woffington, and Miss Ellen Terry the neglected wife, Mabel Vane, a part which is now gracefully and pathetically sustained by her sister, Miss Marion Terry. At the Haymarket, the accomplished lessees and managers have a much larger frame for their picture than they had in the little house by Tottenham-court road; and the canvas of decoration and "mounting" has been consequently and necessarily expanded, but without the exquisite symmetry and harmony of the last revival being in any manner sacrificed. At the Prince of Wales's, you turned the small end of your opera-glasss to the stage; at the Haymarket, the larger extremity of your lorgnon is bracketed on "Masks and Faces:" that is all. Mrs. Bancroft acted Peg Woffington with unflagging vigour and sprightliness, showing herself in the sudder scenes the accomplished mistress of passionate pathos which she has always been; and with unabated energy did she dance the famous jig in the garret with Triplet's ragged children, Lysimachus and Roxalana, very prettily played by two little Misses named Kate and Mabel Grattan. Mr. Bancroft was the Triplet; and when I say that he looked ten times more distressed than Hogarth's "Distressed Poet," and that he suited his acting to his looks, but that he never overstepped by one hair's breadth the modesty of nature, and that he never forced, albeit he failed not to elicit, the alternate smiles and tears of his audience, I have not done him half enough justice. They were all so good! Mr. H. B. Conway was commendably polished, cold, and heartless as the fashionable roué Sir Charles Pomander; Mr. Ducrè bore himself to admiration as the erring husband (my feet stumble at erring husbands—are there no unerring ones besides Sir Peter Teazle?); Mr. Teesdale swaggered and looked gastronomic as James Quin; Mr. Smarl and Mr. Soaper, the critics, were capitally impersonated by Mr. Kemble and Mr. C. Brookfield; Mrs. Canninge was quietly impressive as Mrs. Triplet; Miss Wade made as much as was possible of the not very engaging part of Kitty Clive; and Mr. Arthur Cecil as Colley Cibber was—well, what? Hogarth's beau in the "Modern Polite Conversation." More than that. Read Charlotte Charke's description, in her memoirs, of her finicking papa; and you may gather a slight notion of what Mr. Arthur Cecil was like. He was the "Titty Tit, Esq.," of "Gulliver's Travels." He was Colley Cibber himself. I see that on alternate nights Mr. Bancroft and Mr. Cecil are to alternate the parts of Triplet and Colley Cibber; but as yet I have only seen the first-named actor as Triplet and the last as Colley. The mounting of "Masks and Faces" was simply magnificent. The new and splendid dresses, specially designed by the Hon. Louis Wingfield, were everything that could be desired, and shall have, as they deserve to have, a special notice. Altogether, this has been a most enjoyable week at the Playhouses; and the children of Israel, as well as the Philistines, have equally a right to be pleased. Two such bright successes as "The Colonel" and the revival of "Masks and Faces" are not often seen together.

SCIENCE AND REVELATION.

Dr. Samuel Kinns, F.R.A.S., read a paper at the Victoria Institute on Monday last to show that the advancement of scientific knowledge confirms the cosmogony of Moses, the days being taken as enormous periods of time, and he gave improved translations of several verses removing special difficulties which have hitherto existed.

In connection with a similar object (the truthfulness of the Historical Scriptures), Dr. Kinns on Saturday week gave a lecture in the Assyrian Galleries at the British Museum, which was attended by a distinguished company, amongst whom were the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress, Bishop Claughton, Earl Fortescue, and others.

An exhibition of a new and interesting character is to open next season at extensive galleries being built at 103A, New Bond-street. The object of this Exhibition is to afford the decorative painter, designer, sculptor, and art-workman, the same advantages of public exhibition of their productions (either independently or in acknowledged connection with manufacturing firms) as are now enjoyed so largely by practitioners in the Fine Arts proper.

A drawing-room meeting was held last Saturday at the residence of Miss Müller, one of the School Board members, to consider means for securing the return of ladies as Poor Law Guardians. A resolution setting forth the desirability of having ladies on every Poor Law Board was unanimously carried, and it was determined that a society should be formed to help all qualified ladies who were prepared to stand at the coming election.

General Lord Templeton, K.C.B., presented certificates to a ladies' class of the St. John Ambulance Association at Richmond on the 2nd inst., and in doing so showed the continued great increase in Ambulance work. On the same day another member of the Council of the Order of St. John, Colonel Sir James Bourne, Bart., attended at the Court-house, Birkenhead, the Mayor presiding, and presented the medal awarded by the Chapter to one of the borough officials, Mr. M'Gowan, for conspicuous gallantry in saving life at much personal risk in October last.

MUSIC.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

The Saturday afternoon concerts were resumed last week, when the twelfth performance of the twenty-fifth series took place. The programme possessed the special interest of bringing forward, for the first time in this country, the earliest of Schubert's orchestral symphonies—in D major—a charming work, full of melodic beauty and tender grace; and altogether remarkable as the product of his seventeenth year. It is to the Crystal Palace that we owe the production of this and several others of Schubert's symphonies, and various works besides, the manuscripts of which had fallen into oblivion. The seven remaining symphonies by this composer are to be given in regular order at successive Saturday concerts. On the occasion now referred to, the instrumental selection included two effective extracts ("Dialogue" and "Carnival") from Hofmann's orchestral piece, entitled "An Italian Love-Story;" Schumann's pianoforte concerto and unaccompanied pieces by Chopin and Liszt, finely played by Mr. Eugene D'Albert, and Weber's overture to "Der Freischütz." Mr. Santley sang, with special effect, Mozart's aria, "Vedrò, mentr' io sospiro," Handel's aria, "Nasce al bosco" ("He layeth the beams"), and Beethoven's sacred song, "Busslied" ("Penitence"). Mr. Manns conducted with his usual efficiency.

MR. CHARLES HALLE'S CONCERTS.

The first of four grand orchestral concerts, by Mr. Charles Hallé's celebrated Manchester band, conducted by himself, took place at St. James's Hall last Saturday evening, when an interesting, but more or less familiar, selection of instrumental music was admirably performed; the programme having comprised Weber's overture to "Oberon," the "Andantino" from Spohr's "Power of Sound;" Herr Goldmark's characteristic symphony, entitled "A Rustic Wedding;" Beethoven's C minor symphony; the Entr'acte (in B flat) and "Air de Ballet" from Schubert's "Rosamunde" music; and Wagner's overture to "Tannhauser."

The second concert takes place on Feb. 19, when a highly interesting programme will include the performance of Beethoven's Triple Concerto for Pianoforte, Violin, and Violoncello—respectively by Mr. Hallé, Madame Norman-Néruda, and Signor Piatti—and (for the first time in London), Mozart's "Haffner Serenade." The third concert, on Feb. 26, will be especially interesting as bringing forward Berlioz's important sacred work, "L'Enfance du Christ," recently produced by Mr. Hallé at his Manchester concerts; and at the last performance of the series, on March 5, the same composer's "Faust" music, several times recently given at St. James's Hall under Mr. Hallé's direction, will be repeated.

A few lines—more than were possible last week—are due to Mr. Oscar Beringer's pianoforte recital at St. James's Hall. This was a remarkable display of pianoforte playing of an exceptionally high order. His execution of Beethoven's leviathan sonata in B flat (op. 106)—a work that but few of the greatest pianists have rendered in public—was a specimen of rare technical skill, especially in the clear enunciation of the elaborate intricacies of the fugued finale. Similar high qualities were displayed in Mr. Beringer's interpretation of Weber's romantic and ideal sonata in A flat; and in Brahms's sonata in F minor, and that by Liszt in B minor, two works of exceptional difficulty, that were heard to disadvantage after the fine compositions that preceded them.

At the Popular Concert of last Saturday afternoon, and at that of the following Monday evening, Herr Ignaz Brüll was the pianist. On the former occasion he was associated with Madame Norman-Néruda, in Herr Goldmark's Suite in E major for pianoforte and violin, and was also heard in some studies by Chopin. On Monday, his solo was Chopin's "Barcarolle," which he rendered with great success. Herr Brüll's fine pianoforte playing, in association with that of Madame Néruda at the violin, and of Signor Piatti at the violoncello, gave undue effect to a very dull trio of the pianist's composition, which he introduced for the first time at these concerts. Madame Antoinette Sterling was the vocalist at Saturday's concert, and Mdlle. Friedländer on Monday.

The first of the ballad concerts given by Mr. Sims Reeves, previous to his starting on his farewell tour, took place at St. James's Hall on Tuesday evening, when he sang, with his usual success, "The Message;" lieder by Beethoven and Mendelssohn, and "Tom Bowling;" besides having been associated with Miss Minnie Hauk in Donizetti's duet, "Tornami a dir." The lady just named was encored in her delivery of the popular "Habanera," from "Carmen," having also contributed other effective performances. Mr. Reeves's son, Mr. Herbert Reeves, displayed his agreeable quality of voice and refined style in Blumenthal's "Thinking of thee," Tosti's "Vorrei morire," and Louisa Grey's ballad, "Evening Star." Miss Helen D'Alton and Mr. Oswald added to the attractions of the vocal programme, as did the members of the London Vocal Union; and Mr. Sydney Smith played two pianoforte solos of his own with brilliant execution. Mr. Sidney Naylor conducted. The second concert takes place next Tuesday evening.

This week's London Ballad Concert offered an attractive programme, comprising many favourite old English songs, associated with the names of Misses M. Davies and C. Samuell, Mesdames Patey and Antoinette Sterling, Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. J. Maas, Mr. Santley, and Mr. Maybrick, as solo vocalists.

The one hundred and forty-third anniversary festival of that excellent institution the Royal Society of Musicians was announced to take place on Thursday evening, under the presidency of the Duke of Connaught—the proceedings, as usual, including a concert of vocal and instrumental music.

Mr. Harward Turner (pianist) has announced three concerts of chamber music at the Beethoven Rooms, Harley-street. The first was to take place last Thursday evening, the dates of the others being March 3 and 17. The programmes—vocal and instrumental—are of sterling interest.

Yesterday (Friday) evening, Mr. Arthur Sullivan's sacred musical drama, "The Martyr of Antioch," and Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" were to be given by the Sacred Harmonic Society; Mrs. Osgood, Miss A. Marriott, Madame Patey, Mrs. Suter, Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. F. King, and Mr. H. Blower having been announced as the solo vocalists.

The concert in celebration of the birthday of Burns, announced to take place at St. James's Hall on Jan. 25, was—as already recorded—postponed, on account of the severe weather, to this (Saturday) evening.

The Royal Albert Hall Choral Society will give the fifth concert of the tenth season next Thursday evening, when Professor G. A. Macfarren's oratorio, "St. John the Baptist," will be performed.

As previously mentioned, Mr. Kuhe's annual Brighton Festival will open on Tuesday next with a performance of Mr. Arthur Sullivan's "The Martyr of Antioch" (conducted by himself) and a selection of sacred music.

THE LATE THOMAS CARLYLE.

At the venerable age of eighty-five—he was born in 1795—in the retired dwelling, 5, Great Cheyne-row, Chelsea, where half his long life was spent, Thomas Carlyle has expired. His voice, which was once powerful amongst us, had seldom been heard in the last fifteen years, since he finished the "Life of Frederick II. of Prussia, called the Great." He had something to say, in 1867, upon Mr. Disraeli's Reform Bill, which he called "Shooting Niagara;" again, in 1870, upon the crisis of the war between France and Germany; and, lastly, in December, 1876, upon the misrule of "the unspeakable Turk." These utterances were in the form of letters meant for the public, but he had ceased to write books or elaborate essays. Few persons below middle age can now realise the effect and character of his literary influence—rather moral than intellectual—during the period of its conspicuous activity. That was from 1833, when he published "Sartor Resartus" in Fraser's Magazine, to the beginning, above twenty years ago, of his most laborious and voluminous historical work. The special value of this work, his "Life of Frederick the Great," lies rather in its accurate research, and in its masterly narratives and descriptions, than in the expression of original principles. It does not, like his former writings, contain many sentences that have often recurred to the mind as stimulating, warning, or guiding maxims for practical life. The author had, in "Sartor Resartus," "Past and Present," "Chartism," and the "Latter-Day Pamphlets," applied his didactic satire immediately to the correction of social evils then felt to be rife amongst us. To this performance he had brought a greater power of lively, picturesque, and humorous illustration than was possessed by any English prose writer since Dean Swift, except the producers of avowed fiction. He was thereby enabled to make political and ethical discussions immensely entertaining, while preserving the grimmest and most tremendous earnestness of tone and argument. That was Carlyle's method of winning popular attention. He knew that only a limited audience could be got to listen to the most impressive discourses, without this sauce piquante, upon his momentous theme, the need of national righteousness. So he mingled the sauce, adding such novel ingredients as his quaint tricks and queer freaks of language, to amuse readers who might not else have been tempted by any writings on so grave a subject. This purpose—which was also probably that of Rabelais and

THE LATE THOMAS CARLYLE.

Swift, though we believe the motive of Carlyle, as a truly religious man, was far higher than theirs—is most forcibly carried out by his writings above named.

These were the books that made him not only famous, but really powerful, for about a quarter of a century, terminating soon after the Crimean War. He was a middle-aged man, approaching forty, before the period of his renown began. But he had already done a large amount of literary work, chiefly magazine and review articles, critical and biographical essays, translations of German fairy-tales and romances, and of Goethe's "Wilhelm Meister," and a "Life of Schiller." The masterly ability that he had shown in these performances, and the vein of profound reflection opened in his essays upon the characters of Johnson, Burns, and Edward Irving, were recognised by a small circle of literary associates. He had not long been in London, but had passed most of his youth and early manhood in rural and studious seclusion, in Dumfriesshire or Ayrshire, after receiving his education at the University of Edinburgh. He was the son of a small farmer at Ecclefechan, and was intended for the ministry of the Scottish Presbyterian Kirk, but could not stand the Westminster Confession; so he became a teacher of mathematics, and soon afterwards betook himself to the literary profession. How many of the cleverest Scotchmen of our time, the most accomplished and the most high-minded, have changed their course of life in a similar way! Carlyle's first published writing, it is said, was for the Edinburgh Encyclopædia, but he wrote for the London Magazine long before he came to England. His style, in the early "Miscellanies," is correct, stately, properly Johnsonian, without any oddity or eccentricity; the most prim and scrupulous editorial censorship could find no fault with it; but it is a weighty, energetic style. No reader at that time could have expected that the same writer would afterwards come to adopt the amazing fashions of word-placing, the inversions of syntax, the omissions or perversions of particles, the ejaculations, the queer compound phrases, so frequently reiterated, which abound in his "History of the French Revolution," and, more or less, in all his later works.

This fantastic literary mannerism, it has sometimes been said by his enthusiastic admirers, was natural to Carlyle. That it certainly was not, for he began it, as the deliberate artifice of a scholarly humourist, in "Sartor Resartus." Any reader who will turn to the parting sentences of that admirable jeu d'esprit, which will ever be esteemed one of the finest pieces of sustained humour in English literature, may satisfy himself on this point. The author ably pretends to apologise for having allowed his English style to be deranged and corrupted by too much copying and translating Herr Diogenes Teufelsdröckh's imaginary scraps of manuscript. Now, this is merely Carlyle's fun, or an ironical recommendation of the novel and amusing effect that he had produced, in Fraser of that time, by exhibiting the strange German idioms in a dress of English words. He was, on the contrary, a most perfect translator, as is shown by his "Wilhelm Meister," one of the best versions in good English that was ever composed. But, finding that "Sartor Resartus" brought him into vogue, he soon resolved to put the stamp of this peculiarly distorted style upon his next book, which was that on the "French Revolution." The materials and plan of this work, it is known, were privately furnished by Mr. John Stuart Mill. It is, of course, a work of vast imaginative genius and descriptive power; a great prose poem, and a very bad history. The popular taste, in 1837, had the whim of liking that strange, wild, new style of composition which Carlyle had recently started. It proved an immense success; and the consideration of profitable bookselling is enough to account for his continuing to write in the same style. He did not adopt it, or retain it, from vain affectation; but, in the first instance, as an ingenious device of comic or grotesque art; and, subsequently, because it would pay best, as his publishers may have told him, to go on wearing the same outlandish garb.

For Carlyle, we take it, was at all times indifferent to the mere external attire of his thoughts; he only strove to get them clearly and energetically impressed upon his readers' minds. He had the powers of a great artist, but he despised the graces of art; harmony of tone and feeling, balance, measure, proportion, due relief and gradation, he wilfully and scornfully violated. His purely literary criticisms, as in the essay on Goethe, prove that this was not done from want of perception of those excellencies, but of malice prepense. We cannot but suspect that it was prompted, though unconsciously, by an inward revolt against the excessive and demonstrative Goethe-worship, to which he had, until Goethe's death in 1832, devoted many passages of inordinate laudation. It is not at all difficult to understand how this had come about. Carlyle was one of the very few English literary men, fifty years ago, who occupied themselves with German poetry and romance. He had opened a personal correspondence with the most celebrated man in Germany, who had replied to him with condescending approval. Carlyle was then still in comparative obscurity; and his natural gratification at Goethe's behaviour towards him may very easily have led him to exaggerate, as he surely did, the merits of Goethe as a philosophic moralist; "the Wisest of this Age," a divinely inspired guide of life for all mankind in his generation. We have, by this time, formed a different estimate of Goethe's moral wisdom, finding it shallow, selfish, and frivolous, as might be expected from his life as a dilettante courtier. No life or character, one might have supposed, would have been less likely to win the serious approval of Thomas Carlyle. It was, in our belief, by the merely accidental and personal relations above noticed, that Carlyle was induced, for a time, to fall into the train of Goethe's extravagant idolators. He extricated himself from this delusive affectation, when he began to deal with a subject so tremendously serious as the French Revolution. There is no more Goethe-worship in his writings after that; but an entirely different kind of "Hero-worship," the adoration of historic figures, eminent combatants, conquerors, or rulers, men of supreme determination and force of will, who could bring the mass of men to obey their behests. Carlyle made a new religion of this, and preached it in the fashionable lecture-room, as well as in many of his books. We are quite as little disposed to join in the Hero-worship, as in the Artist-worship; indeed, we much prefer Goethe to Mirabeau or Danton, to Napoleon, or even to Frederick the Great. It is to be regretted that a mind like Carlyle's, in the full maturity of its faculties, should have wasted its sympathies by such a perverted partiality of judgment in these directions.

The interval, however, between his "French Revolution," in 1837, and his compilation, in 1845, of the "Letters and Speeches of Oliver Cromwell," produced some of his truest and best attempts to appeal to the moral conscience for the redress of existing public wrongs. With all their faults of intemperate scorn and anger, the fierceness of their invective, the pitilessness of their contempt, which far out-do Mr. Ruskin's later sallies against the vices of this age, "Past and Present," "Chartism," and the "Latter-day Pamphlets," are dictated by a noble spirit. They are prophetic writings, not as foretelling events in the future, but as proclaiming the eternal principles of right and duty, the practical truths of the Moral Law, the essential relations of man to man, and the fundamental conditions of social welfare. Upon many of the current topics of political controversy in his own day Carlyle's opinions, for want of the special experience and special knowledge required by statesmen, were enormously mistaken. He indulged, too, a most violent prejudice against the negro race; he could see no harm in West Indian slavery, and could not believe that the Jamaica revolt of 1865 was punished with undue severity and indiscriminate cruelty. He never comprehended the value of legal rules and precedents as securities for public liberty; he did not know what a Parliament is, or a Constitutional Government, but could imagine nothing better than a wise despotic administration, or a dictatorship ad hoc, like Cromwell's, for the needs of the time. This incapacity of sound political judgment vitiates all Carlyle's work as an historian, not less than his predilection for the domineering, arbitrary, aggressive type of individual character. We are quite sure that he was, at heart, one of the most just and kind, the most humane, devout, and conscientious of men; and we could quote from his writings a hundred passages breathing the sincerest spirit of piety, and a tender regard for the feeble and suffering in all classes of our fellow-creatures. But the tendency of Carlyle's works, taken for all in all, has not been to unmixed good. Carlyle was, notwithstanding the objections we feel bound to admit, a great author and a great man. He will be honoured, though hardly much read, among the Past Grand Masters of our literature, a hundred years after our own time.

He married, in 1826, Jane, daughter of Dr. Welsh, a physician at Haddington; she died in 1866, and he had no children. His brother, the late Dr. John Carlyle, of Florence, was a translator of Dante. At Westminster Abbey, on Sunday, Dean Stanley preached a sermon, in which he spoke of the character and moral influence of Carlyle. His text was, "The Kingdom of Heaven is like unto a man who sowed good seed in his field." The funeral of Carlyle will take place, not in Westminster Abbey, as the Dean proposed, but in the ancient Cathedral Church at Haddington, near Edinburgh, where Carlyle's wife is buried, and where he desired himself to be laid.

The Portrait of Carlyle, in this Number of our Journal, is reprinted from an engraving which we published in October, 1864; it was drawn after a photograph by Mr. W. Jeffrey, then of Great Russell-street.

THE MORN OF ST. VALENTINE.

Monday morning is the Fourteenth of February; and what is that to you and to us? Not much, indeed, if we be old, dried-up, dull-hearted, unsympathetic, solitary, loveless and joyless curmudgeons, or forbidding "envious prudes," who condemn the innocent natural attachment of youth and maiden to each other. But St. Valentine, in the good old times, in the "ages of faith," knew much better than such pseudo-Protestants, or pseudo-Puritans, the stuff of which wholesome human life is made. This day is consecrated, by ancient popular tradition, in merry England that used to be, and probably also with a certain degree of ecclesiastical sanction or toleration, to the festive celebration of betrothal rites, private or public, which that genial personage is deemed to regard with a peculiarly benevolent countenance of approval. Some curious archæologist may here interpose, for the twentieth time, with stale particulars of biographical information concerning a Bishop of this name fifteen centuries ago; and with a conjectural explanation of the blunder in language, by which his name was converted into the Provençal or old French equivalent for a chivalrous lover's refined and elegant manner of courtship. We do not care to hear any more of that just now, while looking at this happy pair of English lovers; the gentle damsel of good birth and breeding, who looks out from the opened window of her father's mansion; and the manly young fellow, dressed like a country squire of the last century, who has ridden over from his own place, so early in the morning, to give her a flower, and to assure her that he is "her own True Valentine." This is "the old, old fashion" of life's best earthly treasure, discovered anew by every succeeding generation of mankind; and we trust there are many who shall find it surely theirs, on the anniversary of St. Valentine in the present year.

THE COURT.

The Queen, who has had Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein on a visit to her, entertained various guests at dinner during her stay, including the Empress Eugénie and her suite, the Right Hon. G. T. Goschen, her Majesty's Ambassador to the Sultan (who came to take leave of the Queen on his return to Constantinople), the Duchess Dowager of Roxburghe, Rear-Admiral the Hon. Fitzgerald Foley, Captain and Lieutenant Slade, Royal Horse Artillery, and the Rev. H. White.

Prince Charles of Sweden (Duke of West Gothland), third son of the King of Sweden, travelling under the name of Count Carlsborg, paid a visit to her Majesty yesterday week, and remained to luncheon. His Royal Highness also visited the Empress Eugénie. Count Piper, the Minister for Sweden and Norway, accompanied the Prince from Bournemouth.

Her Majesty, Princess Christian, and Princess Beatrice attended Divine service at Whippingham church on Sunday. The Rev. Canon Prothero, the Rev. H. White, of the Savoy Chapel, and the Rev. James Hamilton, association secretary to the Church Missionary Society, officiated.

Princess Christian visited the Empress Eugénie while at Osborne. The Princess returned to Cumberland Lodge on Monday, preparatory to her departure for Germany for the marriage of her niece.

The Queen and Princess Beatrice visited Mrs. Prothero at Whippingham Rectory on Tuesday. Her Majesty has driven out every day, and has paid various visits to the Empress Eugénie at Osborne Cottage.

The Court is expected to arrive at Windsor Castle next Saturday.

The Duchess Dowager of Roxburghe has succeeded Lady Southampton as Lady in Waiting, and Lieutenant-General Gardiner and Colonel the Hon. H. Byng have arrived as Equerries in Waiting to her Majesty. The Hon. Ismay Fitzroy has left Osborne.

The Queen has contributed £100 to the Afghan War Relief Fund.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince of Wales attended the latest meeting of the council of the Royal Agricultural Society of England, at their offices in Hanover-square. His Royal Highness, with the Princess, was present at the debate in the House of Commons yesterday week; and in the evening they dined with the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh at Clarence House. Their Royal Highnesses, accompanied by Princesses Louise, Victoria, and Maud of Wales, went to the morning performance of the pantomime at Drury Lane Theatre on Saturday. The Royal family attended Divine service on Sunday. The Prince and Princess went to St. James's Theatre on Monday evening. Prince Charles of Sweden, accompanied by the Minister for Sweden and Norway, lunched with their Royal Highnesses on Tuesday; and in the afternoon the Princess, with her daughters, accompanied by the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh and their family, went to see the performance at Hengler's Circus. Princess Christian and Prince Leopold have lunched with their Royal Highnesses. The Prince, with the Duke of Connaught and Prince Leopold, was present at Lord Dunmore's second smoking concert. Colonel A. Ellis has succeeded Colonel Teesdale as Equerry in Waiting to his Royal Highness.

Mr. J. W. Benson has submitted to the Prince and Princess the gold casket presented to the King of the Greeks by the Corporation of the city of London.

The Prince and the Duke of Edinburgh will leave London on the 24th inst. for Germany, to attend the nuptials of Prince Frederick William of Prussia and Princess Augusta Victoria of Holstein-Augustenburg, which takes place at Berlin on the 27th inst. Their Royal Highnesses will travel from Charing-cross to Dover and Calais, and thence, viâ Brussels, Aix-la-Chapelle, and Scherfelde, to Berlin, where they will be the guests of the Crown Prince and Princess of Germany.

The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh and the Duke of Cambridge dined last week with the Prime Minister and Mrs. Gladstone, at the right hon. gentleman's official residence in Downing-street.

The Duke of Connaught presided at the 143rd anniversary festival of the Royal Society of Musicians, held on Thursday at St. James's Hall. Prince Leopold was present. The Duke has consented to preside at the anniversary festival of the Infant Orphan Asylum, Wanstead, in June next, if his military duties permit.

Prince Leopold has been elected President of the National Hospital for Consumption, Ventnor. He has also consented to comply with the request of the Town Council of Nottingham to open the University College now being built in that city in June or July of the present year.

The Duke of Cambridge has promised to preside at the anniversary festival of the Society of Friends of Foreigners in Distress, to be held on March 23.

The Queen of Sweden, accompanied by the Crown Prince, paid a visit to Wimborne last Saturday. The Royal party inspected the old minster, and, after lunching at the Crown Hotel, drove back to Bournemouth. Prince Charles left Charing-cross by the Continental mail-train for Paris on Wednesday morning.

The report of the Royal Horticultural Society for the past year shows encouraging results. There has been a steady improvement in all branches, and both the number of Fellows and the receipts from all sources have increased.

THE SILENT MEMBER.

The Lords continue to meet—to part again. Now and again, as on the memorable Thursday evening of last week, a strong battalion of their Lordships have striven to force themselves into the diminutive gallery set apart by the Commons for the single spies, so to speak, who may stray in from the House of Peers. Any member of the Lower House who may return the visit can hardly restrain his admiration of the facial power which enables noble Lords to keep their countenances whilst they separate, as a rule, as soon as they assemble. A few young peers kick against this formula. They fain would see more done—than the reference to a Select Committee of the Government Rivers Conservancy Bill, which was the sum total of the business transacted on the 3rd inst.; than a promised reappointment of the Committee on highway boards, Feb. 4; than the Ministerial announcement by the Earl of Kimberley on Monday of the news that King Coffee had sent to the Governor of Cape Coast Castle a golden axe, with the message that war would be declared if a refugee Ashantee Prince be not delivered up to him—a request which was declined, rendering probable the commencement of hostilities. What their Lordships do gather subdued delight from is a question of "high policy" such as Lord Lytton ventilated on Monday when he asked for the production of the Russian correspondence with Shere Ali (correspondence which neither Earl Granville nor the Duke of Argyll cared to withhold), and threatened another debate on the evacuation of Candahar. But it may again be suggested that a boundless field of useful legislation is open to Peers in the direction of home questions such as Earl Cairns touches in his Limitation of Actions Bill, Settled Land Bill, Conveyancing and Law of Property Bill, and Solicitors' Remuneration Bill, read the second time on Tuesday.

The House of Commons has experienced inexpressible relief since the Speaker has, so to say, taken the Irish bulls by the horns, and subdued them. I have not been alone in holding that the disorder of the intolerant group of Irish members who follow the lead of Mr. Parnell would long ago have been crushed had Mr. Brand years back shown that necessary firmness he has been compelled to use at last. The Speaker was impelled to exercise his authority when the evil had reached its head. Carping critics who object to the reasonable course adopted may be reminded that it was not until the patience of the House had been taxed to its utmost limits—not till the Home-Rulers had abused every art of obstruction and prolonged a sitting for forty hours—that the Speaker lifted his voice, put down the imperturbable Mr. Biggar, and brought the matter to an issue. The practical testimony of figures may again be quoted to show the smallness of the Home-Rule minority. Dr. Lyon's amendment favouring the passing of remedial before coercive measures for Ireland was negatived by 194 to 19 votes. Then occurred the theatrical scene which is represented on another page. The Speaker was about to put the question whether leave should be given to bring in Mr. Forster's Bill for the Protection of Person and Property in Ireland. Mr. Justin M'Carthy (deputy Home-Rule leader in place of Mr. Parnell) rose to resume the debate, but the Speaker held his ground; amid a great din and uproar, the other Home-Rulers sprang to their feet in their places below the gangway on the Opposition side, and shouted "Privilege!" "Privilege!" They then filed out, following the lead of Mr. Justin M'Carthy (here etched as he vainly strove to obtain a hearing, but succeeded in making history for another chapter of his Chronicle of the period), bowed low to the Chair, and vanished. Not till then was the Irish police measure read the first time. But not even on that remarkable sitting of Wednesday, Feb. 2, were the obdurate followers of Mr. Parnell conquered.

Mr. Gladstone had a full House on the following evening, 23rd inst., to hear him move the Government proposal to accord larger powers to the Speaker. But the Prime Minister reckoned without an extraordinary personage—Michael Davitt, the influential Irish agitator, whose features are here traced. The Home-Rulers, gathered in force on their accustomed benches, were incensed to learn from Sir William Harcourt that Mr. Davitt had been arrested that day in Dublin, and his ticket of leave suspended. On the other hand, members generally loudly cheered the announcement. Now, Mr. Davitt was prime mover of the Irish Land League. Without him, it is possible his colleagues imagine their occupation would be gone. At any rate, Mr. Parnell, in his iciest tone, demanded of the Home Secretary which of the conditions of his ticket of leave Mr. Davitt had broken. Sir William Harcourt's silence further enraged the Home-Rulers. "Answer! answer!" they shouted. But Mr. Gladstone simply rose to make his motion. The right hon. gentleman, however, was not allowed to complete his first sentence. One of the most obstinate of the Land League members, Mr. Dillon, persisted in claiming a hearing, resolutely stood with folded arms, and absolutely refused to budge when bidden to resume his seat. The Speaker had no alternative but to "name" Mr. Dillon, in accordance with the standing order of last spring; Mr. Gladstone quietly moved that the hon. member be suspended for the sitting; and Mr. Dillon was thereupon suspended by 395 to 33 votes. Mr. Dillon, however, would not leave until removed by "superior force;" and kept his seat until the Serjeant-at-Arms, Captain Gosset, had summoned a few of the doorkeepers to his aid.

Mr. Joseph Cowen is delineated holding a conference with Mr. Parnell at this juncture. Crossing from the Liberal side to the front bench below the gangway on the Opposition side, the senior member for Newcastle-on-Tyne threw himself back, and offered counsel to Mr. Parnell, who bent down from his seat above, and seemed to be duly impressed with this exhibition of friendliness. Judging from Mr. Cowen's attitude, it looked very much as if he were directly encouraging the Home-Rule proceedings. Seeing his irreconcilable hostility to the Government, and intense sympathy with the Home-Rulers, why does he not sit amongst the latter?

The Prime Minister again rose after Mr. A. M. Sullivan had relieved himself of some of the inflated rhetoric he has in stock; but again Mr. Gladstone was interrupted, this time by Mr. Parnell, with a demand that the right hon. gentleman be no longer heard. Mr. Parnell was in his turn "named" and suspended; but he and his companions kept their seats, and declined to take part in the division. The numbers were 405 to 7, a majority of 398 in favour of Mr. Parnell's expulsion. But he, like Mr. Dillon, refused to stir unless removed by "superior force"—which being forthcoming in the persons of Captain Gossett and his subordinates, Mr. Parnell readily accompanied the Serjeant-at-Arms, bowed respectfully to the Speaker, and left the House, amid the indignant exclamations of his supporters. Posing or posturing is a passion with these impulsive Irish members. It is needless, therefore, to state how they gloried in posing as martyrs, and strained the patience of the House until the last of them was removed by "superior force." The remainder whom Lord R. Grosvenor had to name to the Speaker as having refused to vote, and the Home-Rulers previously withdrawn, are included in this list of Irish members suspended on Thursday se'nnight:—

Mr. Dillon, Mr. Parnell, Mr. Barry, Mr. Biggar, Mr. Byrne, Mr. W. Corbet, Mr. Gray, Mr. Healy, Mr. Dawson, Mr. Finigan, Mr. Gill, Mr. Lalor, Mr. Leamy, Mr. Leahy, Mr. M'Carthy, Mr. M'Coan, Mr. Marum, Mr. Metge, Mr. Nelson, Mr. A. O'Connor, Mr. T. P. O'Connor, The O'Donoghue, The O'Gorman Mahon, Mr. O'Sullivan, Mr. O'Connor Power, Mr. Redmond, Mr. Sexton, Mr. Smithwick, Mr. A. M. Sullivan, Mr. T. D. Sullivan, Mr. Molloy, Mr. R. Power, Mr. O'Shaughnessy, Mr. O'Donnell, and Mr. O'Kelly.

No one anxious to see the decencies of debate maintained could well help regretting the indignities Mr. Gladstone had to bear in being obliged to resume his seat over and over again by the studied discourtesy of the Home-Rulers. These unmannerly interruptions must have been all the harder to endure from the persistency with which Sir William Harcourt, regarding himself complacently as master of the situation, would tug at Mr. Gladstone's coat tails, and strive to pull the Prime Minister back into his seat. The Home Secretary may feel obliged for this pictorial reminder of his obtrusive fussiness, as it struck lookers-on. At length Mr. Gladstone arrived in the safe waters of the dinner hour, where Sir Harcourt ceased from tugging and Parnell was at rest—in the left-hand corner of the Strangers' Gallery. The right hon. gentleman (in an earnest and eloquent speech, which Conservatives praised as "enchanting") had no difficulty in showing a strong case for intrusting to the Speaker fuller powers for preventing obstruction. Enfeebled though the Prime Minister appeared to be at first, much of his old vigour and energy returned, and it was with impressive fervour that he delivered his closing appeal:—"Personally, my share in these arrangements is but small. My lease is all but run out. But there are those who for years, and even for generations, will live and render here, I hope, honourable and splendid service to their country (Hear). The House of Commons has never had to struggle with a more serious crisis. Character and honour are the essence of the House of Commons (Cheers). As you value the duties that have been committed to you, as you value the traditions that you have received, as you estimate highly the interests of this vast Empire, I call upon you without hesitation after the challenges that have been addressed to you, after what you have suffered, to rally to the performance of a great public duty, and to determine that you will continue to be as you have been, the mainstay and power and glory of your country, and that you will not degenerate into the laughing stock of the world" (Loud and prolonged cheering). Without entering into the details of the debate, it is due to Sir Stafford Northcote to acknowledge the high tone of his admirable speech supporting the Prime Minister's proposition generally, but suggesting some points for amendment. Mr. Dillwyn, too, had a practical suggestion of value to make. In the end, the Speaker was endowed with the powers embodied in this resolution:—

If upon notice given, a motion be made by a Minister of the Crown that the state of public business is urgent, upon which motion such Minister shall declare in his place that any bill, motion, or other question then before the House is urgent, and that it is of importance to the public interests that the same shall be proceeded with without delay, the Speaker shall forthwith put the question, neither debate nor amendments being allowed; and if upon the question being put, he should perceive without doubt that the "Noes" have it, his decision shall not be challenged; but if otherwise, a division shall forthwith be taken, and if the question be resolved in the affirmative by a majority of not less than three to one in a House of not less than 300 Members, the powers of the House for the regulation of its business upon the several stages of bills and upon motions and all other matters shall be and shall remain in the hands of the Speaker for the purpose of proceeding with such Bill, motion, or question, until the Speaker shall declare that the state of public business is no longer urgent, or until the House shall so determine, upon motion being made upon notice given, which notice may be made by any Member, and put without amendment or debate, and decided by a majority.

Mr. Gladstone, having declared Mr. Forster's bill "urgent," the second reading might with reason have been taken on the following (Friday) evening, when the Home-Rulers seemed utterly subdued. But Mr. Bradlaugh moved that the bill should be read a second time that day six months. The debate was spun out over Monday night, over Tuesday night (when Mr. Cowen made a trenchant onslaught upon the bill and the Ministry generally), and was continued to Wednesday afternoon, when the measure for the protection of Person and Property in Ireland was read the second time by 359 to 56 votes. This vexed question clear, the House demonstrated its business-like capacity by passing through Committee the Scotch Municipal Franchise Bill; by reading a first time Mr. Chamberlain's bill for the protection of bait-beds for sea fisheries and Mr. Baxter's bill to amend the law of entail in Scotland; and by appointing a Select Committee on Married Women's Property. But all these measures must presently give way to the great measure of the Session, the Government's Irish Land Bill, which Mr. Gladstone has promised shall be introduced before Easter.

THE SUSPENSION SITTING.

Mr. Davitt and the Suspension Sitting of the House of Commons furnish farther Sketches. The author of the Irish Land League is portrayed as he appeared in the Lobby a week before his arrest. That Mr. Davitt is an agitator of power was proved plainly enough by the candour with which Mr. Cowen avowed himself a friend of the "convict" on Tuesday night, for it is well known that the eccentric member for Newcastle-on-Tyne has a peculiar taste for the society of conspirators of eminence. That dogged disciple of Mr. Davitt, and shining light of the Land League, Mr. Dillon, will be recognised in the page Illustration as he stood with folded arms defying the Speaker until "superior force," embodied in the urbane Serjeant-at-Arms and his satellites, stimulated him to withdraw. The step from the sublime to the ridiculous is taken when we descend to Mr. Healy defying the powers. Force followed when the Rev. Mr. Nelson smilingly clung to the post of the Serjeant-at-Arms' chair, and made a show of awaiting the application of "superior force" to remove him; but Captain Gosset, who did his spiriting gently, was equal to this emergency, as he was to the others. Bathos was reached afterwards in the smoking-room, where Mr. Labouchere, sinking into a chair before the stove, puffed away at his long cigarette, and regaled a congenial group of Home-Rulers with an epigram on the Suspension sitting,

"Warsaw is crushed, and Russia triumphant!"

SIR E. B. SINCLAIR, M.D.

Sir Edward Burrowes Sinclair, who has had the honour of knighthood conferred on him by her Majesty in person at Windsor, is the only son of the late Rev. Richard Hartly Sinclair, Vicar of Cashel, Longford, by Eliza, daughter of the late Colonel Burrowes. He was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, and holds the degrees of M.A. and M.D. of Dublin University. At the commencement of his professional career, he entered the Army as Assistant-Surgeon in the "Royal Scots," but, after a few years' service in that regiment, he left the Army to take the appointment of Assistant-Physician to the Rotunda Lying-in Hospital. From that time, Sir Edward Sinclair has devoted himself to obstetrics, and is now one of the leading physicians in this department of medicine, to the literature of which he has also made several contributions. He is a Fellow, ex-Censor, and past Vice-President of the King and Queen's College of Physicians. He was elected to succeed Dr. Fleetwood Churchill in the King's Professorship of Midwifery in the School of Physic, Trinity College, Dublin; and was also appointed physician to Sir P. Dun's Hospital, and put in charge of its maternity department, which, indeed, he was mainly instrumental in establishing. On the institution by the University of Dublin of the degree of "Magister in Arte Obstetrica," it was at once conferred upon Sir Edward, honoris causâ; and the Obstetrical Society of Dublin elected him as their president in 1878, and re-elected him last year. He is also the efficient secretary of the vaccine department of the Local Government Board for Ireland.

The comparatively short military medical experience that Sir Edward Sinclair had afforded him ample evidence of the discomforts, not to speak of dangers, that the wives of soldiers underwent in parturition, from the want of educated midwives to attend them in their hour of trouble. The regimental midwife of former years—as some of our military medical associates may have often witnessed—was generally a woman whose sole claim to the office consisted in herself having had a family. The results were too often not only deplorable but frequently disastrous. This was a state of things which Sir Edward Sinclair set himself to improve. In 1869, with the sanction and co-operation of his Royal Highness the Field Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, the then head of the Army Medical Department, and the Board of Sir P. Dun's Hospital, he established this school, since which he has sent four hundred well-trained midwives and female nurse-tenders for service in the Army. This school, to which two or three of the wives of non-commissioned officers or soldiers from regiments serving in Ireland are sent for training for a period of six months, is under the direct patronage of her Majesty, and has been productive of an immense amount of benefit to the families of her soldiers in all parts of the world. This great work has been gratuitous. There is no large garrison throughout her Majesty's dominions where there is not one of these midwives to be found.

Since the celebrated Sir Feilding Ould, Master of the Rotunda Hospital, no obstetrician in Ireland has received any similar honour. This family is descended from Sinclair, or St. Clair of Roslin—creation, 1200; they bear on their shield the arms of Roslin, Caithness, and Orkneys. Sir Edward married Louisa, daughter of the late John Macminn, M.D., of Dublin.

MR. JAMES CROPPER, M.P.

The newly-elected M.P. for Kendal is Mr. James Cropper, of Ellergreen, near Kendal, eldest son of the late Mr. John Cropper, of Dingle Bank, Liverpool. His grandfather was head of the firm of Cropper, Benson, and Co., in that town. For upwards of thirty years Mr. Cropper has resided near Kendal. In 1845 he married Frances Alison, daughter of the late Mr. John Wakefield, of Sedgwick, near Kendal, who died in 1868. His only son married Edith Emily, daughter of Sir Henry T. Holland, Bart., M.P. Mr. Cropper was one of the early directors of the Lancaster and Carlisle Railway. He has been Chairman of the Board of Guardians for twenty-five years. He is J.P. and D.L. for the county of Westmorland, and was High Sheriff in 1875.

THE SENIOR WRANGLER.

Andrew Russell Forsyth, Stuart Exhibitioner of Liverpool College, is Senior Wrangler and Smith's prizeman of this year. This is the second time that this distinction has been gained by a pupil of the Liverpool College, the former instance being that of Mr. Richard Pendlebury, in 1870, who was also bracketed Smith's prizeman. It should be also mentioned that Mr. John Rigby, of the same institution, was, in 1856, second wrangler and second Smith's prizeman. Mr. A. R. Forsyth is the son of the late Mr. John Forsyth, of Liverpool. He was born in Glasgow, June 18, 1858, and his scholastic and University career has been of extraordinary brilliancy. He entered the Lower School of Liverpool College in January, 1868. In December, 1870, he obtained a third class (juniors) in the Cambridge Local Examinations; and, in the following year, a first class (juniors), having distinguished himself in four subjects, and being second in all England in French, and tenth in Chemistry. In 1872, he entered for the Oxford Local Examination, being then in the Middle School, and obtained a first class (juniors) as the highest boy in the Liverpool centre; he gained Lord Derby's prize. In 1873, being then in the Upper School, he obtained a first class in the Cambridge Local Examination (seniors). He was first in Mathematics in all England, and was offered a sizarship at St. John's College, Cambridge. In 1874 he was honourably mentioned by the Royal Geographical Society for Physical Geography, and in the same year he again entered for the Cambridge Local Examinations, and was bracketed first in all England; and was again first in Mathematics, received a prize from the Cambridge syndicate, and a repeated offer of a sizarship at St. John's College, Cambridge. As being first at the Liverpool centre, he carried off the Albert Scholarship, value £40 per annum, for three years. By Christmas, 1875, he had reached the first place in the first class in the Upper School of Liverpool College. In June, 1876, he obtained the Lawrence Scholarship, and at Midsummer, 1875, he was awarded the Stuart Exhibition, given by Mr. William Rathbone, M.P. In April, 1877, Mr. Forsyth obtained an open foundation scholarship, value £100 per annum, for seven years, at Trinity College, Cambridge, and began residence in the following October. In the course of his University career, Mr. Forsyth obtained a first class in the Freshmen's examination of his college, 1878. In the second year's examination (1879) at Trinity, he again obtained a first class, which he also occupied in his third year's examination. His mathematical master at Liverpool College was the late Mr. W. Finlay. His college tutor was Mr. H. M. Taylor, and his private tutor Mr. R. J. Routh, of Peterhouse.

The Portrait is from a photograph by Messrs. Brown, Barnes, and Bell, of Liverpool.

A performance of the Civil Service Volunteers' Dramatic Society is announced at St. George's Hall on Thursday evening next, when a comedietta by Lieutenant-Colonel Lord Bury, "Love in a China Cupboard," and a drama in three acts, "Time and the Hour," by J. B. Simpson and Felix Dale, will be given.

Mr. Charles Eley has made a handsome abatement of 50 per cent of the rents due last October to his tenants at East Bergholt, Suffolk. Mr. Eley made a like reduction the previous Michaelmas.——Mr. Rowland Winn, M.P., of Nostell Priory, near Wakefield, has returned 25 per cent on the last half-year's rent to the tenants upon his Yorkshire estate. On three previous half-yearly audits Mr. Winn returned 10 per cent.

The report of Messrs. Bowen, Collins, and Lindsay, appointed to inquire into the existence of corrupt practices in the borough of Beaumaris, has been printed. The Commissioners find that corrupt practices did very extensively prevail at the last election; and among the persons scheduled as guilty of bribery are Mr. G. F. Rowley, one of the Conservative candidates; his agent, Mr. George Wise, solicitor; and Mr. J. R. Storr, agent of the Conservative Association. Mr. Joseph Lockwood, secretary of the Liberal Association, and Mr. R. W. Staniland, solicitor, agent for Mr. Ingram and Mr. Sydney Buxton, the Liberal candidates, are scheduled as "guilty of bribery by employment only." The Commissioners report also the names of about 300 persons, many of whom were not of the impoverished class, who have admitted that they received money directly in respect of their votes.

THE "LEONE DI CAPRERA."

A correspondent at Las Palmas, Grand Canary, Mr. W. A. Lawton, has sent us a Sketch of this little vessel, which put in there on her voyage from South America to Europe. He writes of her as follows:—

"On Sunday, Jan. 9, the small sailing-boat Il Leone di Caprera, three and a quarter tons register, from Monte Video, put into this port for provisions, after a long voyage of ninety-five days. The boat is manned by three Italians—Captain V. Fondacaro, and two seamen, O. Grassoni and Pietro Trocoli—who all arrived in capital health, not having suffered one day's illness since their departure. This little vessel is 27 ft. long, 7½ ft. wide, 3 ft. deep in the centre, and 5 ft. deep fore and aft. She has a flush deck, with bulwarks 2½ in. high. In the after-part of the boat is a small semicircular space, 3 ft.

deep, in which the helmsman sits, and which has a brass rail running round it, for him to lay hold of in bad weather. The hold is fitted with a number of hermetically-sealed zinc tubes, 10 in. in diameter, capable of floating forty tons. This hold is entered by a hatchway in the after-part of the vessel, close up to the semicircular space before mentioned. Here their provisions and water are stored, and there is just enough space to allow one man to lie down at full length. The planks are of cinnamon wood, and the framework is made of algarroba or carob-tree wood. The two masts are of walnut wood, and are fitted in such a manner that, in case of a sudden squall, they can be lowered almost instantaneously. When in 48 deg. longitude and 30 deg. latitude they were struck by a heavy squall, and the vessel was thrown on her beam ends; the tops of her masts were forced several inches below the surface of the water. However, she raised herself almost instantly, and suffered no damage whatever. During their long voyage they met the Italian barque La Vittoria Madre, Captain Albini, of Genoa, from whom they procured a bottle of oil for their cooking store; they also spoke the Portuguese brig Maria Desdora, the English barque Montgomery, and two German barques bound for Valparaiso. On Jan. 8 they sighted the Island of Hierro, passed by Gomera and Teneriffe, and anchored off Las Palmas, Grand Canary, on the 9th, after having spoken the English mail-steamer Africa, bound for Liverpool. Captain Fondacaro has sailed under the British flag for nineteen years; he first served as ordinary seaman, but now holds a master's certificate from the Canadian Board of Trade. He is a well-educated man, and is about thirty-six years old, and can speak French, Spanish, and English fluently. During the few days he remained here, he was treated with great hospitality, and banquets in his honour were given by the magistrates of this town, the Governor, and various societies. On the 13th he set sail, in stormy weather, amid great enthusiasm, for Barcelona, and intends to go from there to Caprera, Rome, and Naples; in the museum of which city the boat will be deposited."

A CRUISE OF NAVAL VOLUNTEERS.

The lamented death, on the 13th ult., of Mr. Henry Denison Pender, son of Mr. John Pender, M.P., gives a mournful interest to the photographs that have supplied our Illustrations of this pleasant maritime trip. He was a skilful amateur photographer, as well as an advanced student of science, a naturalist, and an accomplished musician and composer. He had travelled all over the world; but his many friends in England, who have lost him at the early age of twenty-eight, are best acquainted with his estimable personal character.

As an enthusiastic member of No. V. Battery of the Royal Naval Volunteers, Mr. Henry Pender, in July last year, accompanied their yachting cruise to Denmark, Norway, and the Baltic, which is the subject of our Illustrations. Their yacht was the Hornet, a topsail schooner, with a crew of twenty-five gentlemen, all told, under the command of Mr. C. Seth Smith, of the Inner Temple, assisted by Mr. W. E. Graham and Mr. A. B. Woodd, as first and second officers, and by Mr. Dodd, as boatswain. They reached Copenhagen on July 10, were hospitably entertained by the Royal Danish Yacht Club, then holding their annual regatta at Svendborg; then from Denmark they passed to Christiania; on July 25 they landed in Norway, and enjoyed a cariole trip of two days across the country, to the Falls of Honefos. After cruising two or three days along the southern coast, and up the fjords, the Hornet left Norway, on the 29th, and returned to England, arriving at Greenhithe on Aug. 4, after a well-managed and most successful expedition. She was the largest vessel, manned entirely by amateur sailors, that had been in those seas.

Our Illustrations, from Mr. H. D. Pender's photographs, represent the Hornet under storm sail, crossing the North Sea; a bathing party in the Baltic; the crew resting at the dinner-hour; the cook's mate set to clean the lower deck; and the cariole travelling in Norway; incidents which give some idea of the summer holiday experiences of these Royal Naval Volunteers.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

After a weary time of enforced idleness, "frozen out" coursing men have at last got to work again, and two or three important fixtures were brought off last week. The Ridgway Club (Lytham) Meeting, perhaps, attracted the largest share of attention, and there was some grand sport in spite of the terribly cold and wet weather. The United North and South Lancashire Stakes, for puppies, was divided between Casuist, by Gambler—Change, Hawthorn Bloom, by Cræsus—Hawthorn, and Stornoway, by Ben—Staffa. The Clifton Cup was also divided between three, the fortunate recipients being Niobe, by Rambling—Young Rosy Maid; Slaughter, by Surprise—Courtenelle; and Honey Buzzard, by Fugitive—Honeydew. The Earl of Haddington's kennel was in great form, and carried off a share of each of three of the stakes; and Mr. Swinburne was also lucky enough to have a representative left in for each of the cups. Wilkinson slipped exceedingly well; but we are bound to say that, for once in a way, two or three of Mr. Hedley's decisions gave considerable dissatisfaction. The attendance at Plumpton was not very large, in consequence of the unfavourable weather. Sara, by The Squatter—Miss Lizzie, divided the Westmeston Stakes with Criotactum, by Riot Act—Palm Flower. The former, who only cost her present owner a very small sum, has now won eighteen out of the twenty courses that she has contested in public, and only needs a little more pace to be a greyhound of the highest class, as her cleverness, when once in possession, is wonderful. In the course of the meeting the Waterloo candidates, Misterton, who won the great event two years ago, and Cui Bono, ran a public trial. Odds were laid on the former; but Cui Bono had matters pretty much his own way, and it seems very unlikely that Mr. Miller's dog will rival the achievements of Master M'Grath or Coomassie.

The great pigeon-shooting match between Dr. Carver and Mr. W. Scott, which took place at Hendon on Monday last, was not very numerously attended, owing to the terribly inclement weather. Snow fell heavily during the greater part of the day; and to this cause the very moderate performance of each man must, we suppose, be attributed. Mr. Scott was decidedly favourite at starting, and seemed to have a little the better of the match until more than half the birds were disposed of. He killed thirty-six out of his first fifty, while Dr. Carver accounted for thirty-five out of the same number. This was by no means grand shooting; but after the interval both men did even worse, and at last a score of sixty-six enabled the American to win by four birds—a very poor performance for marksmen of such pretensions, who were shooting for a stake of £400.

The postponed sculling-match between Hanlan and Laycock, for £1000 and the championship of the world, will take place at two o'clock on Monday. Both men returned from their seaside quarters in time to have several good days' work over the course. Very little betting appears to have taken place on the result, but one day this week £1000 to £400 was laid on Hanlan, who will probably start an even stronger favourite than he is at present.

ROYAL NATIONAL LIFE-BOAT INSTITUTION.

At a meeting of this institution, held on the 3rd inst. at its house in the Adelphi, the committee expressed their deep sympathy and condolence with the five widows and orphans of the six men who perished on the occasion of the capsizing of the Yarmouth surf life-boat, while being hauled ashore from the wreck of the schooner Guiding Star, of Padstow, during the heavy gale of Jan. 18, and voted £700 in aid of the local fund for their relief. A grant of £100, with the sympathy of the committee, was made to the widow of one of the crew of the Harwich life-boat, who died from the exposure he underwent on the occasion of the accident to that boat on the 18th ult. The magnificent service rendered by the Ramsgate life-boat Bradford in saving, after twenty-six hours' exposure, twelve of the crew of the barque Indian Chief, wrecked on the Long Sands, was considered. In addition to a liberal reward from the Board of Trade, the men have received a large public subscription. The committee accordingly decided to present the gold medal of the institution to Mr. Charles E. Fish, coxswain of the Ramsgate life-boat, and the silver medal to each of his crew of eleven men; also the silver medal to Mr. Alfred Page, master of the Ramsgate Harbour steamer Vulcan, the second service clasp of the institution to Mr. William Wharrier, engineer of the steamer, and the thanks of the institution on vellum to each of the steamer's crew, a copy on vellum of the vote of the committee being also presented to each man receiving the medal. The silver medal of the institution was voted to Captain St. Vincent Nepean, R.N., District Inspector of Life-Boats, and Mr. William Britton, the present coxswain of the Harwich life-boat, together with £4 to each man of the crew of the boat, in acknowledgment of their determined services in saving seven of the crew of the Dutch steamer Ingerid, which was wrecked on the Sunk Sands, fifteen miles away from the life-boat station. The crews of the life-boats at Clacton, Harwich, Aldborough, Hastings, Southend, Whitby, Pulling, Caistor, St. Ives, and Nairn have received increased rewards from the institution in acknowledgment of their long and arduous services.

Altogether, during the storms of last month, the institution has voted in rewards to the crews of life-boats and shore-boats and grants to the widows and orphans of the six poor men who had perished in the life-boat service, more than £1800, in addition to payments amounting to £1200 on life-boat establishments.

A noble service was rendered last Saturday morning by the life-boat Florence Nightingale at Sunderland. During stormy weather and a heavy sea a signal of distress was seen from the steamer Broomhill, and immediately steps were taken to launch the National Institution's life-boat, which ultimately succeeded in bringing ashore eighteen of the wreck's crew.

The twenty-fifth annual festival of the Warehousemen and Clerks' Schools was held on the 3rd inst., at the Cannon-street Hotel, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor. The subscriptions amounted to £2220. It may be mentioned that the schools have sheltered more than 500 children since their establishment. At present they maintain 189 boys and 77 girls. The board of management, in their report call attention to the fact that there is a deficit of £800 during the past year.

A number of burglaries have been committed and others attempted at South Kensington recently. Last Saturday several attempts were made to enter houses, but the burglars were alarmed. A man, however, succeeded in gaining an entrance to the house occupied by Mr. F. W. Harberton, 119, Cromwell-road. The parlour-maid, a girl of eighteen, who met him coming out of the front door, screamed "Police!" and ran after him until he fired a second shot at her, which passed close to her head. A plain-clothes detective on duty, named Howroyed, ran up to the fellow and seized him. After a struggle the man discharged his revolver three times, wounding the detective in the side. A postman then came up and made a gallant effort to stop the man, but he was also shot in the side. A constable in uniform next tried to intercept the burglar, who pulled out a second six-chambered revolver from his breast pocket and aimed at the constable's head, but missed. He then ran away, and made his escape.

THE SKIN.—The glory of woman, the pride of man. It contains the delicate lines of beauty and constitutes all that we term "Loveliness;" yet how many thousands have their skins blemished by the use of the irritant soaps, Carbolic, Coal Tar, Glycerine, and the coarse mineral soaps, caustic with alkali and inside of putrid fats. The more delicate the skin the quicker its ruin. The ALBION MILK AND SULPHUR SOAP is the purest, the whitest, and most purifying of all soaps, by its purifying action taking away and preventing all pimples, blotches, and roughness, and recommended by the entire Medical Profession as the most elegant preparation for the skin that is known. By all Chemists, in Tablets, 6d. and 1s. THE ALBION SANATORY SOAP COMPANY, 632, Oxford-street, London.

ROWLANDS' ODONTO is the purest and most fragrant dentifrice ever made. All dentists will allow that neither washes nor tinctures can possibly be as efficacious for polishing the teeth and keeping them sound and white as a pure and non-gritty tooth powder; such Rowlands' Odonto has always proved itself to be.

ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL has been known for the last eighty years as the best and safest preserver and beautifier of the hair; it contains no lead or mineral ingredients, and is especially adapted for the hair of children. Sold in small hair sizes. Ask any Chemist, Perfumer, or Hairdresser for Rowlands' Articles.

A FACT.—HAIR COLOUR WASH.—By damping the Hair with this Wash, in a few hours it becomes its original colour. 10s. 6d., sent for stamps.—ALEX. ROSS, 21, Lamb's Conduit-street, Holborn, London.

PEOPLE I HAVE MET.

No. XVI.—THE TUTOR.

Education in England is still almost wholly in the hands of the clergy, and my tutor was, therefore, a clergyman. He was a good specimen of what his class should be—hard-working, soberly enthusiastic, sincerely, though not ostentatiously, religious, and the friend of his pupils if they would let him be so. The first piece of advice that he gave each one of them was this: "Don't be in a hurry to make friends. They will come soon enough, and will be all the better for not having been sought. Meanwhile, you will find that acquaintances hastily formed soon prove a tax upon one's time." No other counsel did he give when a new pupil came to him.

The students who have carried off the greatest number of honours are not always the best tutors, a fact which the Dons fully recognise in the number of Fellowships they award to men who have missed their First-Class Degree. William Johnson had taken but a First in Mods and a Second in Greats; and had never even attained to a proxime accessit in any competition for a University prize, though he was acknowledged to be the best tutor at Wolsey's. But then Johnson had tried for all sorts of things; and to grind conscientiously for the Hertford or Gaisford is quite as useful in the end as to win them.

He was scarcely more than four-and-twenty when appointed my Mentor, yet was already bald. Otherwise a pleasant English young face, with moderate allowance of light brown whisker. The expression serious, as became a parson, but often relaxing into a smile. Dress—plain black with white tie, and careful avoidance of all phantasies in the matter of waistcoats or collars. Of medium height, in fact medium in everything except being a thoroughly good man. A Broad Churchman, of course, and a moderate Liberal. Occasionally smoked a cigarette, or even a cigar; but no Teutonic votary of the weed, as are most of the younger Dons.

He was singularly free from formalism; had no objection to be addressed as "Johnson" by the undergraduates; and would dispense with their coming in cap and gown to his lectures. He loved to take long walks with those who had anything in them and would talk about Virgil, or cricket, or Gladstone, or anything you pleased. He was, also, superior to the common University affectation of shunning classic literature as "shop." As a host he was all that could be desired; nor did he confine his hospitalities to breakfast-parties, but gave capital little dinners, which he prefaced by the briefest of graces. "Benedictus benedicat." Now and then he would be present at the men's entertainments; and even drop in casually of an evening on those who liked him. On one of these occasions he saw a lad of nineteen helping himself to a pretty stiff tumbler of toddy. "What right have you to drink whisky?" Johnson asked him. "You've never been in Scotland." "No," replied the other, "but I have been in Ireland." It was all banter, but one could just detect in the tutor's tone the note of a kindly warning, which was also understood and taken in good part. He was, indeed, no hermit in love with total abstinence. The members of a reading-party he took for a ramble over the battle-fields of '70 were agreeably surprised at the frequency with which, while they were in Champagne, he treated them to the vintage of that sunny land, which costs quite as much on its native soil as elsewhere.

Perhaps the worst fault of a modern Oxford Don is an unconscious tendency to luxury. Johnson lived, as plainly as any tutor; yet he was better lodged than a bachelor Prussian Prince, and fared every day as no French professor could hope to fare more than once in three months. He had no idea of a dinner which should be lacking in soup, in fish, or in entrées, or fail to terminate with dessert and coffee. His eyes grew accustomed to the sight of massive silver plate and table linen of perennial whiteness. And what comfortable arm-chairs were those in his rooms! What noble book-cases of oak, well loaded, too, with the best editions of the best authors! What a splendid view from the windows looking out on the Great Quadrangle! Sweetness and light and comfort all around one, imagination was necessary to conjure up the images of poverty and squalor. The wonder is not that Dons are occasionally priggish, or that they sometimes reason as if humanity began with persons of £360 a year; rather may we be thankful that so few are spoilt by life in those Academic Capuas. They are saved in various ways—some by religion, others by the severest studies, others by the English passion for outdoor exercises. Johnson was under the three good influences at once. He liked Church and Plato and long walks.

Occasionally he proved that he had not forgotten those muscular attainments which a public school generally manages to develop if a lad have pith and strength of frame. Johnson had often fought with varying fortunes, as a boy, in that usually quiet green hedged in by the Cloisters of Westminster—for that is the spot selected by Queen Elizabeth's alumni as the field where affairs of honour must be decided. The experience thus gained proved of use to him at Wolsey's. Among his pupils was one Evan Llewellyn, the son of parents only just well off, as Johnson knew. Evan idled persistently, and got into debt. For the first term his tutor contented himself with remonstrances, which only succeeded in ruffling Evan's dignity. Johnson was quite right to do nothing more during the first term, which is good-naturedly and wisely allowed by the Dons to be a somewhat lax one. They know that a boy transferred at once from the discipline of school or home to the almost perfect liberty of college will necessarily be disposed to enjoy his freedom, and they deem it best to let him have his fling, so long as he breaks no written rules. But Evan showed no signs of toning down the second term; on the contrary, he foreswore lectures altogether, and if seen in chapel, it was sure to be in the evening, when he had been sent there for missing the morning service. (I may observe, in passing, that the objectionable practice of punishing men by ordering them to join in public prayers has since been discontinued.) Johnson, who took a conscientious view of his duties, now resolved to write to the lad's father and warn him of the peculiar way in which young Hopeful was "prosecuting his studies." It was almost an unheard-of step for a tutor to take. So a few days later Evan strode, boiling with rage, into his tutor's rooms, and told him he was not a gentleman. Of course, Johnson had no choice but to complain of him to the Warden, and Mr. Llewellyn's University career came to an abrupt conclusion—at least, for a time. I forget whether he was sent down for good or only for a term.

Llewellyn, however, had "friends"—if one must profane the word—who were resolved to avenge his cause. It was agreed in a council of war that Johnson should be mulcted up—i.e., that his door should be fastened in such a way as to render the window the only means of egress. Unfortunately for the would-be perpetrators of this pleasing jest, Johnson happened to be out when they fancied he was in; and were very busy with his oak when he suddenly appeared in their midst. They fled, some up stairs, some down: all except one, a brawny churl, over six feet high, whom Johnson managed to collar. The passage was dark, and my tutor wanted to know who his man was: a purpose which his antagonist was equally anxious to frustrate. A desperate tussle ensued, ending in the victory of Johnson, who dragged young Ajax into his rooms, when the features of the latter stood revealed by the light of a moderator lamp. Then the victor released his foe, with the quiet remark, "Oh! it's you, Mr. ——." The discomfited one slunk out; but never heard anything more of the affair. My tutor was magnanimous, and, moreover, pleased with himself. No second attempt was made to molest so muscular a Christian.
